Congressional Record

CONTAINING

THE PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

THIRD SESSION

OF THE

SIXTY-FIFTH CONGRESS

OF

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

WITH

APPENDIX AND INDEX TO PARTS 1-5

VOLUME LVII
PART 5

48029

WASHINGTON
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE
1919

AUTHENTICATED
U.S. GOVERNMENT
INFORMATION
GPO

PRINCETON UNIVERSITY LIBRARY GIFT OF
THE CLASS OF 1879

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES,

FEBRUARY 25 TO MARCH 4, 1919.

PAGES 4201 TO 5085.

Congressional Record.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-FIFTH CONGRESS THIRD SESSION.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 25, 1919.

Rev. William A. Quayle, D. D., of St. Louis, Mo., bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our heavenly Father, we thank Thee that whoever comes or goes Thou stayest. We bless Thee that so long as Thou art alive and well the universe is safe and the stars have not wandered. Thou holdest the world in Thy heart. Thou hast died for man. We thank Thee that Thou hast invented democracy for the earth, and the earth is coming to its own through Thee. Bless the great bruised world, for which Thou hast great expectations and hast uttered great prophecies. Bless this dear country of ours. Give it ascendancy of leadership in all good things. Bless this grave and great deliberative body in its deliberations for the world. Bless all men in authority. Bless the House of Representatives. Grant, O Lord, that with every coming of every session the Christ life and the Christ love and the thought of God shall become more and more pre-eminent. We pray for these things in the name of our Master, even Christ. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. VARDAMAN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Baird	Hale	New	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Harding	Norris	Smoot
Beckham	Henderson	Nugent	Spencer
Brandegee	Johnson, Cal.	Owen	Sterling
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Page	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Thompson
Colt	Kellogg	Pittman	Townsend
Culberson	Kenyon	Poindexter	Trammell
Curtis	King	Pollock	Vardaman
Dillingham	Kirby	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Fernald	La Follette	Ransdell	Walsh
Fletcher	Lodge	Reed	Watson
France	McCumber	Saulsbury	Weeks
Gay	McKellar	Shafroth	Williams
Gerry	McLean	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gore	Moses	Sherman

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] are detained by illness.

Mr. PITTMAN. I desire to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] are detained on official business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. GOFF] is absent on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

PROPHECY OF LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish to take advantage of this occasion to read a couple of pages of typewritten matter which I hold in my hand, and I will explain whence it comes when I get through. I ask the attention of Senators to it, because it is one of the most remarkable prophecies that ever came down the aisle of time.

Count Volney, a noted French writer, published in 1791 "The Ruins of Empires," and in the chapter headed "Will the human race improve?" occurs this most remarkable prophecy:

And when nations, free and enlightened, shall become like great individuals, the whole species will have the same facilities as particular portions now have; the communication of knowledge will extend from one to another, and thus reach the whole. By the law of imitation, the example of one people will be followed by others, who will adopt its spirit and its laws. Even despots, perceiving that they can no longer maintain their authority without justice and beneficence, will soften their sway from necessity from rivalship, and civilization will become universal.

There will be established among the several nations an equilibrium of force, which, restraining them all within the bounds of the respect due to their reciprocal rights, shall put an end to the barbarous practice of war, and submit their disputes to civil arbitration. The human race will become one great society, one individual family, governed by the same spirit, by common laws, and enjoying all the happiness of which their nature is susceptible.

Doubtless this great work will be long accomplishing, because the same movement must be given to an immense body, the same leaven must assimilate an enormous mass of heterogeneous parts. But this movement shall be effected; its presages are already to be seen. Already the great society, assuming in its course the same characters as partial societies have done, is evidently tending to a like result. At first disconnected in all its parts, it saw its members for a long time without cohesion; and this general solitude of nations formed its first age of anarchy and childhood, divided afterwards by chance into irregular sections, called States and kingdoms, it has experienced the fatal effects of an extreme inequality of wealth and rank; and the aristocracy of great empires has formed its second age; then, these lordly States disputing for preeminence, have exhibited the period of the shock of factions.

At present the contending parties, wearied with discord, feel the want of laws, and sigh for the age of order and of peace. Let but a virtuous chief arise; a just, a powerful people appear; and the earth will raise them to supreme power. The world is waiting for a legislative people; it wishes and demands it, and my heart attends the cry.

Then turning toward the west—

Volney says—

a hollow sound already strikes my ear.

The west to which he turned was the new United States.

Then, turning to the West—

continued he—

a hollow sound already strikes my ear; a cry of liberty proceeding from far distant shores resounds on the ancient continent. At this cry a secret murmur against oppression is raised in a powerful nation—

He was then referring to France—

a salutary inquietude alarms her respecting her situation; she inquires what she is and what she ought to be, while, surprised at her own weakness, she interrogates her rights, her resources, and what has been the conduct of her chiefs.

Yet another day—a little more reflection—and an immense agitation will begin; a new-born age will open, an age of astonishment to vulgar minds, of terror to tyrants, of freedom to a great nation, and of hope to the human race.

Mr. President, these were the words in which Volney made his prophecy of a society of nations. This was sent to me under date of February 22, 1919, from Augusta, Ga., with this note:

AUGUSTA, GA., February 22, 1919.

DEAR SENATOR: I have had this copy made from Volney, thinking that it would interest you. Everything considered, it is the most remarkable prophecy outside of the sacred writings.

With best wishes,
Sincerely, yours,

WM. W. HOWARD.

Senator JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS AT BOSTON.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD the very remarkable address made by the Chief of the American Peace Commission, the President of the United States, at Boston upon yesterday, and I shall request that the Public Printer be instructed to print such parts of it in italics as I have lead-penciled on the left-hand side.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The President's address is as follows:

"Gov. Coolidge, Mr. Mayor, fellow citizens, I wonder if you are half as glad to see me as I am to see you. It warms my heart to see a great body of my fellow citizens again, because in some respects during the recent months I have been very lonely indeed without your comradeship and counsel, and I tried at every step of the work which fell to me to recall what I was sure would be your counsel with regard to the great matters which were under consideration.

"I do not want you to think that I have not been appreciative of the extraordinarily generous reception which was given to me on the other side in saying that it makes me very happy to get home again. I do not mean to say that I was not very deeply touched by the cries that came from the great crowds on the other side. But I want to say to you in all honesty that I felt them to be a call of greeting to you rather than to me.

"I did not feel that the greeting was personal. I had in my heart the overcrowning pride of being your representative and of receiving the plaudits of men everywhere who felt that your hearts beat with theirs in the cause of liberty. There was no mistaking the tone in the voices of those great crowds.

"It was not a tone of mere greeting, it was not a tone of mere generous welcome; it was the calling of comrade to comrade, the cries that come from men who say, 'We have waited for this day, when the friends of liberty should come across the sea and shake hands with us, to see that a new world was constructed upon a new basis and foundation of justice and right.'

"I can't tell you the inspiration that came from the sentiments that come out of those simple voices of the crowd. And the proudest thing I have to report to you is that this great country of ours is trusted throughout the world.

"I have not come to report the results of the proceedings of the peace conference; that would be premature. I can say that I have received very happy impressions from this conference; the impression that while there are many differences of judgment, while there are some divergences of object, there is nevertheless a common spirit and a common realization of the necessity of setting up new standards of right in the world.

"Because the men who are in conference in Paris realize as keenly as any American can realize that they are not the masters of their people, that they are the servants of their people, and that the spirit of their people has awakened to a new purpose and a new conception of their power to realize that purpose, and that no man dare go home from that conference and report anything less noble than was expected of it.

"The conference seems to you to go slowly; from day to day in Paris it seems to go slowly; but I wonder if you realize the complexity of the task which it has undertaken. It seems as if the settlements of this war affect, and affect directly, every great—and I sometimes think every small—nation in the world, and not one decision can prudently be made which is not properly linked in with the great series of other decisions which must accompany it. And it must be reckoned on with the final result if the real quality and character of that result is to be properly judged.

"What we are doing is to hear the whole case; hear it from the mouths of the men most interested; hear it from those who are officially commissioned to state it; to hear the rival claims; hear the claims that affect new nationalities, that affect new areas of the world, that affect new commercial and economic connections that have been established by the great world war through which we have gone. And I have been struck by the moderateness of those who have represented national claims.

"I can testify that I have nowhere seen the gleam of passion. I have seen earnestness; I have seen tears come to the eyes of men who plead for downtrodden people whom they were privileged to speak for; but they were not the tears of anguish; they were the tears of ardent hope.

"And I don't see how any man can fail to have been subdued by these pleas, subdued to this feeling, that he was not there to assert an individual judgment of his own, but to try to assist the case of humanity.

"And in the midst of it all every interest seeks out first of all, when it reaches Paris, the representatives of the United States. Why? Because—and I think I am stating the most wonderful fact in history—because there is no nation in Europe that suspects the motives of the United States.

"Was there ever so wonderful a thing seen before? Was there ever so moving a thing? Was there ever any fact that so bound the Nation that had won that esteem forever to deserve it?

"I would not have you understand that the great men who represent the other nations there in conference are disesteemed by those who know them. Quite the contrary. But you understand that the nations of Europe have again and again clashed with one another in competitive interest. It is impossible for men to forget those sharp issues that were drawn between them in times past. It is impossible for men to believe that all ambitions have all of a sudden been foregone. They remember territory that was coveted; they remember rights that it was attempted to extort; they remember political ambitions which it was attempted to realize. And, while they believe that men have come into a different temper, they can not forget these things, and so they do not resort to one another for a dispassionate view of the matters in controversy. They resort to that nation which has won the enviable distinction of being regarded as the friend of mankind.

"Whenever it is desired to send a small force of soldiers to occupy a piece of territory where it is thought nobody else will be welcome, they ask for American soldiers. And where other soldiers would be looked upon with suspicion and, perhaps, met with resistance, the American soldier is welcomed with acclaim.

"I have had so many grounds for pride on the other side of the water that I am very thankful that they are not grounds for personal pride. I'd be the most stuck-up man in the world. And it has been an infinite pleasure to me to see those gallant soldiers of ours, of whom the Constitution of the United States made me the proud commander. You may be proud of the Twenty-sixth Division, but I commanded the Twenty-sixth Division, and see what they did under my direction! And everybody praises the American soldier with the feeling that in praising him he is subtracting from the credit of no one else.

"I have been searching for the fundamental fact that converted Europe to believe in us. Before this war Europe did not believe in us as she does now. She did not believe in us throughout the first three years of the war. She seems really to have believed that we were holding off because we thought we could make more by staying out than by going in. And all of a sudden, in a short 18 months, the whole verdict is reversed. There can be but one explanation for it: They saw what we did; that without making a single claim we put all our men and all our means at the disposal of those who were fighting for their homes, in the first instance, but for a cause, the cause of human right and justice, and that we went in, not to support their national claims, but to support the great cause which they held in common.

"And when they saw that America not only held ideals but acted ideals, they were converted to America and became firm partisans of those ideals.

"I met a group of scholars when I was in Paris—some gentlemen from one of the Greek universities who had come to see me and in whose presence, or, rather, in the presence of those traditions of learning, I felt very young, indeed. I told them that I had one of the delightful revenges that sometimes comes to a man. All my life I had heard men speak with a sort of condescension of ideals and of idealists, and particularly those separated, encloistered persons whom they choose to term academic, who were in the habit of uttering ideals in the free atmosphere when they clash with nobody in particular.

"And I said I have had this sweet revenge. Speaking with perfect frankness in the name of the people of the United States I have uttered as the objects of this great war ideals, and nothing but ideals, and the war has been won by that inspiration. Men were fighting with tense muscles and lowered head until they came to realize those things, feeling they were fighting for their lives and their country, and when these accents of what it was all about reached them from America they lifted their heads; they raised their eyes to heaven, when they saw men in khaki coming across the sea in the spirit of crusaders, and they found that these were strange men, reckless of danger not only but reckless because they seemed to see something that made that danger worth while.

"Men have testified to me in Europe that our men were possessed by something that they could only call a religious fervor. They were not like any of the other soldiers. They had a vision, they had a dream, and they were fighting in the dream; and fighting in the dream they turned the whole tide of battle, and it never came back.

"One of our American humorists, meeting the criticism that American soldiers were not trained long enough, said: 'It takes only half as long to train an American soldier as any other, because you only have to train him one way, and he did only go one way, and he never came back until he could do it when he pleased.'

"And now do you realize that this confidence we have established throughout the world imposes a burden upon us—if you choose to call it a burden? It is one of those burdens which any nation ought to be proud to carry. Any man who resists the present tides that run in the world will find himself thrown upon a shore so high and barren that it will seem as if he had been separated from his human kind forever.

"The Europe that I left the other day was full of something that it had never felt fill its heart so full before. It was full of hope. The Europe of the second year of the war, the Europe of the third year of the war, was sinking to a sort of stubborn desperation. They did not see any great thing to be achieved even when the war should be won. They hoped there would be some salvage; they hoped that they could clear their territories of invading armies; they hoped they could set up their homes and start their industries afresh. But they thought it would simply be the resumption of the old life that Europe had led—led in fear, led in anxiety, led in constant suspicious watchfulness. They never dreamed that it would be a Europe of settled peace and of justified hope.

"And now these ideals have wrought this new magic, that all the peoples of Europe are buoyed up and confident in the spirit of hope, because they believe that we are at the eve of a new age in the world when nations will understand one another, when nations will support one another in every just cause, when nations will unite every moral and every physical strength to see that the right shall prevail.

"If America were at this junction to fail the world, what would come of it? I do not mean any disrespect to any other great people when I say that America is the hope of the world, and if she does not justify that hope the results are unthinkable. Men will be thrown back upon the bitterness of disappointment not only, but the bitterness of despair. All nations will be set up as hostile camps again; the men at the peace conference will go home with their heads upon their breasts, knowing that they have failed—for they were bidden not to come home from there until they did something more than sign a treaty of peace.

"Suppose we sign the treaty of peace and that it is the most satisfactory treaty of peace that the confusing elements of the modern world will afford and go home and think about our labors; we will know that we have left written upon the historic table at Versailles, upon which Vergennes and Benjamin Franklin wrote their names, nothing but a modern scrap of paper. No nations united to defend it, no great forces combined to make it good, no assurance given to the downtrodden and fearful people of the world that they shall be safe. Any man who thinks that America will take part in giving the world any such rebuff and disappointment as that does not know America.

"I invite him to test the sentiments of the Nation. We set this Nation up to make men free, and we did not confine our conception and purpose to America, and now we will make men free. If we did not do that the fame of America would be gone and all her powers would be dissipated. She then would have to keep her power for those narrow, selfish, provincial purposes which seem so dear to some minds that have no sweep beyond the nearest horizon. I should welcome no sweeter challenge than that.

"I have fighting blood in me, and it is sometimes a delight to let it have scope, but if it is a challenge on this occasion it will be an indulgence. Think of the picture, think of the utter blackness that would fall on the world. America has failed. America made a little essay at generosity and then withdrew. America said, 'We are your friends,' but it was only for to-day, not for to-morrow. America said, 'Here is our power to vindicate right,' and then the next day said, 'Let right take care of itself and we will take care of ourselves.' America said, 'We set up a light to lead men along the paths of liberty, but we have lowered it—it is intended only to light our own path.'

"We set up a great ideal of liberty, and then we said, 'Liberty is a thing that you must win for youself; do not call upon us.' And think of the world that we would leave. Do you realize how many new nations are going to be set up in the presence of old and powerful nations in Europe and left there, if left by us, without a disinterested friend?

"Do you believe in the Polish cause, as I do? Are you going to set up Poland, immature, inexperienced, as yet unorganized, and leave her with a circle of armies around her? Do you believe in the aspiration of the Czecho-Slovaks and the Jugo-Slavs as I do? Do you know how many powers would be quick to pounce upon them if there were not the guarantees of the world behind their liberty?

"Have you thought of the suffering of Armenia? You poured out your money to help succor the Armenians after they suffered; now set your strength so that they shall never suffer again.

"The arrangements of the present peace can not stand a generation unless they are guaranteed by the united forces of the civilized world, and if we do not guarantee them, can not you see the picture? Your hearts have instructed you where the burden of this war fell. It did not fall upon the national treasuries, it did not fall upon the instruments of administration, it did not fall upon the resources of the nations. It fell upon the victims' homes everywhere, where women were toiling in hope that their men would come back.

"When I think of the homes upon which dull despair would settle were this great hope disappointed, I should wish for my part never to have had America play any part whatever in this attempt to emancipate the world. But I talk as if there were any question. I have no more doubt of the verdict of America in this matter than I have doubt of the blood that is in me.

"And so, my fellow citizens, I have come back to report progress, and I do not believe the progress is going to stop short of the goal. The nations of the world have set their heads now to do a great thing and they are not going to slacken their purpose. And when I speak of the nations of the world I do not speak of the governments of the world. I speak of the peoples who constitute the nations of the world. They are in the saddle and they are going to see to it that if their present governments do not do their will some other governments shall. And the secret is out and the present governments know it.

"There is a great deal of harmony to be got out of common knowledge. There is a great deal of sympathy to be gotten out of living in the same atmosphere, and except for the differences of languages, which puzzled my American ear very sadly, I could have believed I was at home in France or in Italy or in England when I was on the streets, when I was in the presence of the crowds, when I was in great halls where men were gathered together irrespective of class.

"I did not feel quite so much at home as I do here, but I felt that now at any rate, after this storm of war had cleared the air, men were seeing, eye to eye, everywhere, and these were the kind of folks who would understand what the kind of folks at home would understand, and that they were thinking the same things.

"I feel about you as I am reminded of a story of that excellent witness and good artist, Oliver Herford, who one day, sitting at luncheon at his club, was slapped vigorously on the back by a man whom he did not know very well. He said, 'Oliver, old boy, how are you?' He looked at him rather coldly. He said, 'I don't know your name, I don't know your face, but your manners are very familiar'; and I must say that your manners are very familiar, and, let me add, very delightful.

"It is a great comfort, for one thing, to realize that you all understand the language I am speaking. A friend of mine said that to talk through an interpreter was like witnessing the compound fracture of an idea. But the beauty of it is that, whatever the impediments of the channel of communication, the idea is the same; that it gets registered, and it gets registered in responsive hearts and receptive purposes.

"I have come back for a strenuous attempt to transact business for a little while in America, but I have really come back to say to you, in all soberness and honesty, that I have been trying my best to speak your thoughts.

"When I sample myself I think I find that I am a typical American, and if I sample deep enough and get down to what is probably the true stuff of a man, then I have hope that it is part of the stuff that is like the other fellow's at home.

"And, therefore, probing deep in my heart and trying to see the things that are right without regard to the things that may be debated as expedient, I feel that I am interpreting the purpose and the thought of America; and in loving America I find I have joined the great majority of my fellow men throughout the world."

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES (S. DOC. NO. 413).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Food Administrator, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 15, 1918, a list showing the number of civil employees in the deparment on February 15 and the number discharged during the previous two weeks, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 13394) to extend the time for the completion of the dams across the Savannah River by authority granted to Twin City Power Co. by an act approved February 29, 1908, as amended by acts approved June 3, 1912, and March 1, 1916, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing for the printing of 62,700 copies of the Regulations 45, relating to the income tax and war-profits and excess-profits tax under the revenue act of 1918, etc., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing that in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 12211) granting pensions and increase in pensions of certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, the Clerk be authorized to strike out the name "Hermann" and insert in lieu thereof the name "Herrman," in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15462) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DENT, Mr. FIELDS, and Mr. KAHN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The message also communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. WILLIAM P. BORLAND, late a Representative from the State of Missouri, and transmitted resolutions of the House thereon.

The message further transmitted to the Senate resolutions of the House on the life, character, and public services of Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES, late a Senator from the State of Kentucky.

The message also transmitted to the Senate resolutions of the House on the life, character, and public services of Hon. WILLIAM HUGHES, late a Senator from the State of New Jersey.

The message further transmitted to the Senate resolutions of the House on the life, character, and public services of Hon. PAUL O. HUSTING, late a Senator from the State of Wisconsin.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 171. An act to repeal the last proviso of section 4 of an act to establish the Rocky Mountain National Park, in the State of Colorado, and for other purposes, approved January 26, 1915; and

H. R. 5999. An act for the establishment of Gulfport, Miss., as a port of entry and delivery for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 13394. An act to extend the time for the completion of the dams across the Savannah River by authority granted to Twin City Power Co. by an act approved February 20, 1908, as amended by acts approved June 3, 1912, and March 1, 1916, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the Legislature of the State of South Dakota petitioning Congress to empower the President of the United States to comply with the guaranty of the price of wheat which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

CERTIFICATE.

SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of South Dakota:

I, C. A. Burkhart, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the annexed concurrent resolution was duly passed by the sixteenth session of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, and that the same is now in full force and effect.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota, at the city of Pierre, February 19, 1919.

[SEAL.]

C. A. BURKHART,
Secretary of State.

The folowing concurrent resolution has been adopted by the senate and concurred in by the house of representatives:

A concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to appropriate money for the purchase of the wheat crop of 1919 and to confer upon the President of the United States full power and authority for the handling of the same.

Whereas the price of all wheat to be produced in the United States in the year 1919 has been fixed by the President of the United States by authority of Congress, which act is of great importance to the farmers of all wheat-producing sections of the country, causing, as it has, the planting of a large acreage of winter wheat and the plowing and otherwise preparing for the sowing to wheat of a large acreage in the States raising spring wheat, which, owing to the high cost of labor and other factors entering into such enterprise, has required a much larger investment than for any preceding crop: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Legislature of the State of South Dakota in regular session assembled does earnestly and urgently petition the Congress of the United States to take such congressional action as may be necessary to empower the President of the United States to fulfill the contract entered into with the farmers of the United States, so that they may receive the full benefit of the price fixed for the wheat crop of 1919 without unnecessary delay, and that the Government of the United States may purchase all wheat offered it, thereby removing any danger of wheat speculators depressing prices during the period when the greater portion of the wheat crop is being placed upon the market, and enabling the Government of the United States to hold full and absolute control of the situation, to minimize the loss, if any, which might possibly otherwise occur, and to fix, if deemed wise, the price of flour to the consumer on a parity with that of other food products; be it further

Resolved, That engrossed copies hereof be mailed to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Senate of the United States, and to the Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States.

For the Senate:

C. B. AMSDEN,
President pro tempore.
A. B. BLAKE,
Secretary.

For the House:

LOUIS BENSON,
Speaker.
WRIGHT TARBELL,
Chief Clerk.

Dated at Pierre, S. Dak., this 14th day of February, A. D. 1919.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from the officers' and soldiers' committee at Camp Zachary Taylor, Ky., which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CAMP ZACHARY TAYLOR, KY., February 24, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
Vice President, Washington, D. C.:

The officers and soldiers of Camp Zachary Taylor, representing nearly every State in the Union, not having sufficient funds to send telegram to their individual Senators, ask that you have the Clerk of the House read the following telegram: "What provision will be made to assist us and our comrades overseas in procuring positions when we are demobilized in the United States? Employment service, according to newspaper reports, is to be discontinued March 31. Our comrades already demobilized have had advantage of this service and we feel the same consideration should be shown us."

OFFICERS' AND SOLDIERS' COMMITTEE,
By CAPT. SHARPS, Moral Officer, Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a memorial from members of sundry civic organizations of the District of Columbia calling attention to the granting of a more adequate compensation to the teachers of the public schools in the District as being one of the most vital and pressing needs of the community; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I present resolutions from the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America advocating a league of nations. This committee represents a constituency of about 17,000,000 people, and I believe in favoring the league reflects the judgment of an overwhelming majority of the American people. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. I have a letter from the chief clerk of the legislative assembly of North Dakota inclosing resolutions with reference to agricultural extension work, and ask to have them printed in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the letter and resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NORTH DAKOTA,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
SIXTEENTH LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY, 1919,
Bismarck, February 8, 1919.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The inclosed resolution was passed by the House of Representatives of the State of North Dakota this afternoon and I am forwarding it, according to the instructions which I have received from the house.

Respectfully submitted.

GEO. A. TOTTEN, Jr.,
Chief Clerk.

(Inclosure: Resolution.)

Whereas it has been brought to the knowledge of the House of Representatives of the Sixteenth Legislative Assembly of the State of North Dakota that it is proposed in the Congress of the United States to reduce the appropriation now available or to become available for agricultural extension work in the various States in the Union to the extent of 50 per cent: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the house of representatives does hereby protest against any reduction in the funds now by law available or to become available for such purposes, as any such reduction would seriously hamper and embarrass the carrying on of agricultural extension work and work through county agents now planned and arranged for by the various agricultural States and their several counties.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of this resolution be engrossed and mailed to each of our Senators and Representatives in Washington.

(Signed) L. L. STONE, Speaker.
(Signed) GEO. A. TOTTEN, Jr.,
Chief Clerk.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 796, International Association of Machinists, of Greybull, Wyo., praying for Government ownership of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. MOSES presented a resolution adopted by the Central Labor Union of Manchester, N. H., favoring the continuance of the United States Employment Service, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Local Lodge No. 444, Loyal Order of Moose, of Portsmouth, N. H., favoring the granting of six months' additional pay to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Central Labor Union of Manchester, N. H., praying for the withdrawal of American troops from Russia, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. NUGENT. I present a resolution adopted at a recent meeting of the Reclamation Association of Idaho, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

POCATELLO, IDAHO, February 22, 1919.

Hon. J. F. NUGENT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

At a convention held by the Idaho Reclamation Association at Pocatello, Idaho, on February 21, 1919, at which delegates from 21 counties were represented, for the consideration of plans for furnishing homes and employment for the soldiers, sailors, marines, and other citizens along the lines suggested by the new plan of Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas the ending of the great war has brought about new conditions in America; and

"Whereas we believe the first consideration of the American people should be to show their appreciation of the services of all those engaged in bringing back peace to the world; and

"Whereas we believe this Government can best recognize their splendid services by the reclamation of our arid lands, our cut-over lands, and swamp lands, thereby furnishing new homes and employment for the returning soldiers, sailors, marines, and other citizens; and

"Whereas we believe the greatest question that confronts America is that of finding employment for its people; we believe that through proper and adequate appropriations by Congress for this work much new and permanent employment can be created and all purposes attained to guide our country through a great crisis through the reconstruction period that is now before the people; and

"Whereas in Idaho in our arid, cut-over, and swamp lands there are more than 5,000,000 acres of land that can be reclaimed at reasonable costs, creating new homes and employment for millions of people, we believe it is the duty of Congress to lead out in this great work and thereby give encouragement to the people in every State in the Union: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we, in convention assembled, pledge ourselves and the people of Idaho to a hearty cooperation with the representative of the Federal Government in order that the desired end may be attained at the earliest possible moment consistent with a wise administration of the affairs of the Nation and of the State. We respectfully request that this resolution be brought to the attention of Congress."

IDAHO RECLAMATION ASSOCIATION,
By S. E. BRADY, President.

NATIONAL GUARD OF MISSOURI AND KANSAS.

Mr. SPENCER. I present a joint resolution passed by a unanimous vote of the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Missouri, and I ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The following joint resolution was passed by unanimous vote of the Missouri Senate and House on February 21, 1919:

"Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Missouri (the Senate concurring therein) as follows:

"Whereas it has been announced that the Thirty-fifth Division, composed of the National Guard of Missouri and Kansas, will shortly be returned to this country for muster out of Federal service; and

"Whereas this division was organized and trained by National Guard officers of Missouri and Kansas and the record made by the citizens of Missouri and Kansas constituting its membership in the battle of the Argonne Forest was one of unsurpassed heroism and efficiency; and

"Whereas the affection existing between the officers and men composing the division and their State pride and esprit de corps contributed in the largest measure to their gallant achievements against the professional soldiers of Germany; and

"Whereas it is the desire of the members of the division and of the citizens of Missouri that our citizen soldiers be permitted to return to their own people under their own officers: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, respectfully petitioned to direct that upon the embarkation of the division the officers who accompanied it across be returned to it and that National Guard officers of Missouri and Kansas serving with the same be assigned to the command of its regiments, battalions, companies, and batteries to accompany the same to the point of demobilization; be it further

"Resolved, That the governor be requested to cause these resolutions to be laid before the President and to acquaint him with the earnest desire of the people of this State that this simple act of justice be done the survivors of more than 14,000 Missourians, whose efforts and sacrifice have made possible the glorious achievements of this division; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives of this State in Congress be requested to call on the President immediately upon his return from France and petition him to cause the necessary orders to be issued in the premises."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am glad the resolution which has been presented by the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER] has been read. It seems that the request contained therein is a very modest one. It is an unfortunate fact that the troops which the law provided should be kept together, wherever practicable I believe was the expression, have been divided, scattered, placed under different commands, and brigaded with troops of other States. I do not say this at all to criticize. I simply say that it is unfortunate that that had to be done.

Now, when the troops are returning, it is highly desirable, if possible, that they should be returned under their old commanders. I hope that, so far as it is possible, that will be the rule in bringing the troops back to this country. I am not trying to speak for the whole country, but, so far as Missouri is concerned, she very much desires to see her troops returned under their old commanders, under the command of the men who left the United States with them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Reports of committees are next in order.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. POINDEXTER. From the Committee on Interstate Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 313) to amend section 4 of the act to regulate commerce, passed February 4, 1887, and subsequent amendments thereof, and I submit a report (No. 756) thereon.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I wish to reserve the right to file a minority report in this case, if I so desire.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15835) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, reported it with amendments.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 5658) to authorize the acquisition and operation by the United States of the Cape Cod Canal, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 761) thereon.

Mr. GORE, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15796) to enable the President to carry out the price guaranties made to producers of wheat of the crops of 1918 and 1919 and to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 760) thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1599) for the relief of the heirs of Mrs. Susan A. Nicholas, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 764) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 534) for the relief of the heirs of Adam and Noah Brown (Rept. No. 765);

A bill (S. 1102) for the relief of Simon M. Preston (Rept. No. 763);

A bill (S. 1557) for the relief of Arthur Nelson (Rept. No. 766);

A bill (S. 4517) for the relief of the owner of the steamship Matoa (Rept. No. 767);

A bill (S. 5482) providing for the refund of taxes collected for stamp tax on certain policies under the emergency tax act of October 22, 1914, under the proviso to which act such policies were exempt (Rept. No. 768);

A bill (S. 5443) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Horatio G. Foss (Rept. No. 769);

A bill (S. 5442) for the relief of the owner of the steam lighter Cornelia (Rept. No. 770); and

A bill (H. R. 4610) to compensate Thomas G. Allen for injuries received while employed in the General Land Office of the United States and making an appropriation therefor (Rept. No. 771).

HAWAII NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am directed by the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico to report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 5323) to authorize the governor of the Territory of Hawaii to acquire privately owned lands and rights of way within the boundaries of the Hawaii National Park, and I submit a report (No. 757) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It is a noncontested bill, and its consideration will only take a moment.

Mr. POMERENE. If this is a matter which is not going to lead to any debate, I shall not make any objection; otherwise I shall feel obliged to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the governor of the Territory of Hawaii is hereby authorized to acquire, by exchange or otherwise, all privately owned lands lying within the boundaries of the Hawaii National Park as defined by "An act to establish a national park in the Territory of Hawaii," approved August 1, 1916, and all necessary perpetual easements and rights of way or roadways, in fee simple, over or to said land or any part thereof.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of section 73 of an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," approved April 30, 1900, as amended by an act approved May 27, 1910, relating to exchanges of public lands, shall not apply in the acquisition, by exchange, of the privately owned lands herein referred to.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND PATENTS IN HAWAII.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, there is a bill of somewhat the same character as the one just passed, in which some of the residents of Hawaii are interested and which I reported favorably and unanimously a short time ago from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico and which is now on the calendar. It affects some homesteaders in Hawaii. There are 26 of them, and the aggregate amount of land is 519 acres, something less than 20 acres for each homesteader.

The circumstances are that these homesteaders took up homesteads which they found by reason of the character of the soil to be absolutely unadapted for homesteading. They were told by the commissioner that they could exchange these properties for other properties which they could homestead. On his advice they surrendered their old homesteads but found, after having given up their first homesteads, they could not get others. The homesteaders are scattered through the island. The amount of land is very small, and anyone who has been in Hawaii knows how important it is that homesteaders should settle in those islands. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill at this time. It is the bill (S. 5343) to authorize the governor of the Territory of Hawaii to ratify the agreements of certain persons made with the commissioner of public lands of the Territory of Hawaii, and to issue land patents to those eligible under the terms of said agreements.

Mr. POMERENE. I very much regret to do so, but I feel I shall have to object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the present consideration of the bill.

ADMISSION OF CERTAIN GIN AND WINE.

Mr. SMOOT. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report back favorably without amendment Senate joint resolution 207 and Senate joint resolution 217. I desire to ask for the immediate consideration of these joint resolutions. I will state to Senators that I do not think they will lead to any discussion. Just in a word I will state what they propose.

Mr. POMERENE. Are these joint resolutions on the calendar?

Mr. SMOOT. They are not on the calendar.

Mr. POMERENE. If they do not lead to discussion I shall not object.

Mr. SMOOT. If they lead to discussion I shall not press them.

Before the passage of the food-control act prohibiting the importation of distilled spirits delivery was delayed on account of war conditions until after that act went into effect of a certain shipment of wine, and also a certain shipment of gin. This bill is to permit the shipments referred to to enter the United States. The committee reported and the Senate passed a similar bill in a like case. That is all there is to these joint resolutions.

Now I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 207) admitting into the United States 35 puncheons of Gordon's sloe gin, ordered by E. LaMontagne's Sons, of New York, before the passage of the food-control act prohibiting the importation of distilled spirits, the delivery of which was delayed on account of war conditions until after that act went into effect.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Whereas on or about August 1, 1917, Messrs. E. LaMontagne's Sons, of New York, ordered by cable from Gordon Dry Gin Co., of London, England, 35 puncheons of Gordon's sloe gin, which was shipped by steamship Vinovia on or about August 21, 1917, but owing to delays caused by the state of war was not received at the New York custom-house until September 11, 1917; and

Whereas the admission of these 35 puncheons of Gordon's sloe gin was refused by the collector of customs at the port of New York because they were received after the food-control act prohibiting the importation of distilled spirits, approved August 10, 1917, went into effect on September 9, 1917; and

Whereas at the time said merchandise arrived at New York the importers thereof executed a bond to the collector of customs at the port of New York conditioned for the exportation of said merchandise within one year from the date of its arrival, which condition they were unable to fulfill owing to abnormal conditions due to the state of war and through no fault of their own: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That in view of the good faith in which this importation was attempted and of the abnormal conditions which prevented its delivery, the collector of customs at the port of New York be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to admit the said 35 puncheons of Gordon's sloe gin, imported from Gordon Dry Gin Co., of London, England, by the steamship Vinovia, and consigned to Messrs. E. LaMontagne's Sons, of New York, importers, and to deliver the said consignment to Messrs. E. LaMontagne's Sons upon the payment of the import duty and war-revenue tax due and any other charges accruing thereon.

SEC. 2. That the collector of customs at the port of New York be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cancel the bond executed by the importers of said merchandise conditioned for the exportation thereof within one year from the date of its arrival.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I also ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 217) admitting into the United States 560 barrels of Spanish wine ordered by Luigi Bick, of New York City, before the passage of the food-control act prohibiting the importation of distilled spirits, the delivery of which was delayed on account of war conditions until after that act went into effect.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Whereas on or about October 14, 1918, said Luigi Bick, of New York City, obtained from the War Trade Board license No. 141442 for the importation from Valencia, Spain, of 210 barrels of wine, and on October 30, 1918, license No. 148682 for the importation of 500 barrels of wine and on the 12th day of December, 1918, license No. 163325 for the importation of 3,000 barrels of wine, and that of the total amount ordered 210 barrels arrived in the port of New York on the steamship Isla de Panay, and that 150 barrels arrived on the steamship C. Lopez, and 200 barrels on the steamship Monserrato; and

Whereas the admission of the 560 barrels of wine was refused by the collector of customs at the port of New York because they were received after the food-control act prohibiting the importation of distilled spirits, approved November 21, 1918: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That in view of the good faith in which this importation was attempted and of the abnormal conditions which prevented its delivery, the collector of customs at the port of New York be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to admit the said 560 barrels of Spanish wine, imported from Leopoldo Hernandez, of Valencia, Spain, by the steamships Isla de Panay, C. Lopez, and Monserrato, and consigned to Luigi Bick, of New York City, importer, and to deliver the said consignment to Luigi Bick upon the payment of the import duty and war-revenue tax due and any other charges accruing thereon.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

INCOME TAX.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate House concurrent resolution No. 72.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed 62,700 copies of the regulations 45 relating to the income tax and war-profits and excess-profits tax under the revenue act of 1918 (preliminary edition relating to the income tax on individuals), 19,200 copies for the use of the Senate and 43,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, the same to be distributed through the folding rooms.

CONTESTING AND CANCELLATION OF HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9897) to authorize the contesting and cancellation of certain homestead entries, and for other purposes. It is a local bill and will, I think, take only a moment.

Mr. POMERENE. I object to the consideration of the bill at the present time.

ROANOKE RIVER BRIDGE, N. C.

Mr. SIMMONS. On behalf of my colleague on the Committee on Commerce, the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], I report back favorably without amendment from the committee the bill (H. R. 15950) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Halifax, in the State of North Carolina, to construct a bridge across the Roanoke River, and I submit a report (No. 762) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SAVANNAH RIVER DAM.

Mr. SIMMONS. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 13394) to extend the time for the completion of the dam across the Savannah River by authority granted to Twin City Power Co. by an act approved February 29, 1908, as amended by act approved March 1, 1916.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of that bill. The time will be out on the 1st proximo. These people have already spent $700,000 on this work, and it is necessary that the bill should be passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIMON M. PRESTON.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, there is a bill reported from the Committee on Claims that has passed the Senate twice if not three times. The claimant is 94 or 95 or 96 years old; and I want to ask unanimous consent to have that bill considered and passed. It is the bill (S. 1102) for the relief of Simon M. Preston.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Simon M. Preston, of Seattle, Wash., the sum of $5,838.36, said sum being the amount of the defalcation of D. C. Kearns, a deputy collector under the said Simon M. Preston, who was collector of internal revenue for the first election district of Mississippi from the 1st day of June, 1869, to the 22d day of May, 1873, which sum was repaid to the United States Government by the said Simon M. Preston, and its collection by him from the said D. C. Kearns having been hindered and prevented by the pardon of the said D. C. Kearns by the President of the United States and the remission of the fine equivalent to said sum.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. POLLOCK:

A bill (S. 5660) to aid in the education of the boys and girls of America and to provide funds therefor; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 5661) authorizing the purchase of a site and to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of White Plains, N. Y.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 5662) granting a pension to Charles F. Lane; to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CURTIS submitted an amendment providing that the Boughton Memorial Association of the State of Kansas be authorized to erect and maintain a suitable building in and upon the United States Military Reservation at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

EMPLOYMENT OF ADDITIONAL CLERK.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 465), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Senate resolution No. 198, agreed to September 28, 1918, being a resolution authorizing the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate to employ an additional clerk at the rate of $100 per month, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, and which was extended and continued by Senate resolution No. 335 until the end of the Sixty-fifth Congress, be, and the same is hereby, extended and continued in full force and effect until June 30, 1919.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL (S. DOC. NO. 415).

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a resolution providing for the printing of the Post Office appropriation bill containing the good-roads provision, which is in great demand by the road departments of the different States.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 467) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, as agreed to in conference and passed by the Congress of the United States, including table of distribution of road funds to the various States, be printed as a Senate document, and that as many additional copies as can be obtained for $250 be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

THE PRESIDENT'S CHALLENGE.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an editorial in the New York World of yesterday entitled "The President's challenge."

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PRESIDENT'S CHALLENGE.

"The proudest thing I have to report to you," said President Wilson in his speech in Boston yesterday, "is that this great country of ours is trusted throughout the world."

This is the proudest thing that any President could report. It is the highest tribute that can be paid to the Republic. How, then, is that trust to be kept? How is the faith of the world in the American people to be maintained?

That was the text of the President's address, and nobody familiar with conditions in Europe can deny his conclusion:

"This confidence we have established throughout the world imposes a burden upon us. Any man who resists the present tides that run in the world will find himself thrown upon a shore so high and barren that it will seem as if he had been separated from his humankind forever.

"If America were at this juncture to fail the world, what would come of it? America is the hope of the world, and if she does not justify that hope the results are unthinkable."

Suppose, he continued in effect, we sign the treaty of peace and do no more, we will have nothing but a modern scrap of paper.

Thus far the opposition to the league of nations in the United States, and particularly in the Senate, has been a counsel of cowardice. It has come from timid men who are afraid to permit the United States to play a man's part in the world. They fear that it may cost money. They fear that it will entail duties. They suspect that great friendly peoples like the British, the French, and the Italians are at heart thieves and bandits who are luring us into a darkened street only to rob and murder us. They are terrified of responsibilities.

They worry about the Constitution and the Monroe doctrine and the Panama Canal. They grow sick at heart at the very thought that the Nation which has taught self-government to the Filipinos might be asked to assist some other backward people on the road to freedom.

When these critics are not ruled by their cowardice they are ruled by their petty parochial prejudices. They think the United States can be in the world but not of the world. They would have the most powerful of republics emulate the example of the Koreans and become a hermit nation, lest association with other countries corrupt our hearts and our institutions. They do not believe that wars can be prevented, but if wars can be prevented let somebody else stop them. It is none of our business, and by being neutral there would be opportunities for making money.

Moreover, a league of nations as a practical thing in international affairs is an innovation, and innovations are always to be regarded with suspicion. Besides, President Wilson favors it, and everything that the President advocates should be opposed. Perhaps he coerced the British, the French, and the Italians. Who knows? This scheme to prevent war may be all a subtle plot for his own political aggrandizement. And so it runs.

But the hard facts of the world situation must be faced. The millions of men who have suffered the horrors of this war, the hundreds of millions of people who have made the sacrifice of life and treasure, have rightly regarded it as a war to end war. If it is not that to them, if their children must tread the blood-stained path that they have trod, if the old order of things is to be restored, all this agony has been in vain. If there is to be no assurance of peace and security, if the nations are not to exert their reason and their power to maintain the liberty that has been won, what was the good of it all? Is there any American in the Senate or out of the Senate who is prepared to assume the moral responsibility for thus cheating the living and defrauding the dead?

No critic of the league of nations has advanced any plan of his own by which the peace that ends this war can be guaranteed. Not one of them holds out the smallest measure of hope to a civilization wounded almost to death. They leave the world weltering in its own blood and tell the afflicted peoples to heal themselves as best they can.

The World does not believe that that sentiment represents the mind and the heart of the American people. They may be confused for the moment by the clamor of discordant voices, but they have never strayed far from the ideals of the Republic. As the President said yesterday, "We set this Nation up to make men free, and now we will make men free." And that is his challenge to his opponents when he invites them to "test the sentiment of America."

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I also ask to have inserted in the RECORD about an eighth of a column of an editorial in the Philadelphia Record, of to-day, entitled "The Popular View."

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE POPULAR VIEW.

Now that the senatorial gas bags opposing the league of nations have blown up, what do the American people really think of this tempest in a teapot? Time alone can tell; but if newspaper comment and the talk of the men in the street are any index of popular opinion, they are standing almost solidly with the President against the senatorial obstructionists. Here, for instance, is Arthur Capper, who, after serving four years as governor of Kansas, was last year elected to the Senate as a Republican by a very large majority. His term will begin next week, and he has announced that he is heart and soul for the league of nations. He expects to stand squarely behind the President on this proposition, and adds that in his judgment this will be the attitude of the Middle West.

"I feel," says the Kansas Senator elect, "and I think pretty generally people out our way feel, that if we can't get some sort of understanding or agreement out of this that will minimize the chances for war in future, this war, so far as we are concerned, has been almost in vain—that we will have got nothing out of it."

This expresses the popular view fairly well. The overwhelming and tumultuous welcome given to the President yesterday in Boston is another sign of the times. The Washington atmosphere of opposition is purely artificial and is chiefly the product of professional politicians. When the steam roller of American sentiment gets well in motion the little fellows must get out of the way or be crushed.

GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS OF RAILROADS.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a brief editorial from the Daily Oklahoman of February 22, in regard to the Government operation of railroads. It sheds an interesting light upon the general situation. It sheds a "fierce light" not upon a throne but upon the Congress; it points out the leak in the vessel which may sink the ship of state; it points out the bubble in the rail which may wreck the car of American progress and civilization. If we are saved, courage, and not cowardice, will be our savior.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

USING THE BIG STICK ON CONGRESS.

"A Congressman from Missouri told the House the other day that 'sinister' efforts are being made to compel Members of Congress to vote for continuance of Government operation of the railroads. He said propagandists were threatening defeat at the polls for all Members who disobeyed this command.

"If such a junta as alleged really exists it is showing excellent judgment in the method of persuasion it has chosen. Defeat at the polls seems to be the one contingency which many Members of Congress will evade at any price. Hanging onto their job is the supreme desideratum. The matter of their convictions is altogether subordinate.

"For this lowly estimate which public opinion places upon them, our Congressmen themselves are solely to blame. They have frittered away their independence. They have sold their official birthright for a mess of pottage. They would rather be officeholders than right. They invite the big stick."

THE WORLD LEAGUE PACT.

Mr. RANDSDELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a very thoughtful, suggestive, and patriotic editorial entitled "The World League Pact," printed in the New Orleans Item under date of the 18th.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE WORLD LEAGUE PACT.

Among the objections offered to the world league pact the first is that it is an alliance among the allies.

This is true, though technically the United States was not one of the allies. This objection is answered by the statement that practically the whole world was at war and no organization to operate a league of nations could now be formed without including on its board of directors the five great nations named.

In a naval and military way they jointly govern the world to-day; so the remainder of the world that is in a position to kick certainly has no just cause of complaint over the proposed arrangement. As to the other four members of the nine who are to constitute the board there will arise some speculation and perhaps some dispute. Sufficient to that day is the evil thereof.

Far more important than the personnel of the board is the constitution itself. First, it aims to do away with secret treaties and alliances. Here is a fruitful source of wars. Next, it provides a tribunal which will establish and codify international law. We do not have to go back many years to recall the protests of our Government against the British blockade of the seas, the searching of our cargoes destined to neutral ports. We are still technically at war with Germany over her interference with our commerce and the killing of our citizens by submarines. There never has been a war between important groups of powers where the rules were observed regarding the rights of neutrals and belligerents. New conditions, new inventions, call for the creation of new rules of warfare at a time when nations fighting for their lives want to settle their difficulties first and talk about rules afterwards. The war of 1812 grew out of this condition and another war was almost threatened over it between this country and England at the time of our Civil War.

Every nation liable to go to war wants to know the rules of the game. Neutrals are particularly interested in this.

A first, a second, and a third reading of the text of the world-league pact leaves on our minds the impression that in it a great forward step has been taken toward making the world a more decent place to live in and to do business in.

A million objections can be cited to any proposition of this kind. It will present objections from the standpoint of every nation which adopts it. France and Japan are reported to have come in unwillingly. But has not a continuance of the old way of carrying on the world a great many more objections? Does not the war which is just closing have its objections? Might not such a pact as this is have prevented such a war? May it not prevent even greater and more horrible wars?

What is America asked to give up? Some say the Monroe doctrine. We are not sure of that. By the way, do you happen to know that the Monroe doctrine was wished on us by England? So if you are suspicious of our illustrious British ally you might think that statement over a little.

Great Britain doesn't want any of South America and we don't either. Canada has as much interest in keeping America for the Americans as we have. And all of us want the countries to the south of us to preserve order, to pay their bills, and not get into quarrels with great foreign powers, thereby precipitating the United States into war for their protection.

We are frank to say we have a weakness for the Monroe doctrine and want to hear all of the debate on this phase of the world-league pact. We attach no blame to South American nations that did not go into the European war when we entered. But we can not forget that these little nations might have been gobbled up by land-hungry European nations long ago if our country had not stood ready to enforce the Monroe doctrine. And even a country as big as ours appreciates its friends in times of trouble. There was too much love for Germany in many South American states; too much suspicion of us to be pleasant.

We have kept Europe out of Central and South America because we wanted to keep out of trouble. Nevertheless, we have enormously benefited these countries by doing this; and we have not always been beloved for standing a big brother to them.

We think it is advisable to have a clear understanding about the settlement in quantities of Asiatics in North and South America. As to our taking the responsibility for parts of Turkey and of Africa and for backward peoples in other parts of the world, there comes up a question. Naturally, we do not want to do this. We didn't really want to go into the Philippines, but we went in and we did a good job there just as we did in Cuba and just as we would have done in Mexico if we had kept on going in.

But we are a rich Nation. We are going to keep up a Navy as great as that of England. We are going to have a big Army and big merchant marine, and it is up to us to shoulder our share of the load. We are in Russia now for nothing but missionary purposes. The other nations which are historically jealous and suspicious of one another are going to insist on our doing this kind of work. Most small and weak nations will want Uncle Sam for godfather, and we really can not very decently back out. Where we are in a bad fix is in asking for the exclusive right to do this work on the American continents and then in agreeing to do it elsewhere.

We have been letting England rule the seas and do this kind of work and have been criticizing her from time to time, and now England tells us to go ahead and build a Navy as large as hers, and invites us into the missionary and international game on a large scale. And some of us will say it is unprofitable. That is just what England has found out. She has enough of it; but the world must be policed. And, if necessary, Europe must be policed and America must take a part in it.

There is no use now of saying that Europe's business is none of our business. That was good doctrine for a long time. But Europe's business has become our business, and we can't get away from it. The German Emperor made it our business when he invited us in. Congress made it our business when it declared war. France made it our business when she sent a military force here to help win at Yorktown. England made it our business when she forced us into the War of 1812. By blood and by a thousand interests we are mixed up with Europe.

In other words, our Nation is full grown. Its interests are so vast that no great war can be fought anywhere without a reasonable chance of our becoming involved. The world is so small that all of it touches us. We have been sensitive at the idea that any nation should assume to dominate the seas and run the world as Great Britain has done. We were unwilling that a military clique in Germany should try to do this. We have helped lick that crowd and have helped set Germany on the right path.

And now we are asked to go into a scheme for running the world on a basis that comports largely with our own oft-asserted principles in diplomacy. The scheme is partly Mr. Wilson's scheme, but it is mostly America's scheme. It is silly to say that it is England's scheme any more than it is our own. It largely follows the lines of thought of most Americans who have expressed themselves along international lines.

The Constitution of the United States was not a perfect document. It contained in itself the germ of a great fratricidal war. There was much debate over its adoption. But it was adopted. Who is there now who will say that this great experiment in government was not worth while, civil war and all? Who is there who can guarantee that this Nation will not be mixed in more bloody wars by retaining a position of aloofness than by going into some such arrangement as this world-league pact?

The old way has always led to wars. The new scheme may lead to wars, too. It may create wars in the process of cleaning up and adjusting the world's affairs. But we would start in with the world knowing and understanding us better than ever before. The great allied nations are more friendly to us than at any time in our history. The neutral world either respects us or is friendly to us. Our former enemies must look to us for protection.

We have nothing to put over on anyone. We have gone further in offering arbitration treaties than has any other nation. A just and a fair nation does not fear association on any fair basis with other nations any more than a just and a fair man fears to go into any company. Do not start out by attempting to howl down the proponents of this proposed plan. But keep your mind free on it and go on the assumption that the men who have drawn this document are sincere, honest, and very able. Also they are reported to have been unanimous in its final adoption.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution, which was read:

Concurrent resolution 73.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 12211) entitled, "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strike out the name "Hermann" and to insert in lieu thereof the name "Herrman" where it appears in line 19, page 11, of said bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the Senate concur in the resolution of the House.

The resolution was concurred in.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the following acts:

S. 41. An act to authorize the sale of certain lands at or near Yellowstone, Mont., for hotel and other purposes;

S. 1847. An act to authorize the addition of certain lands to the Wyoming National Forest;

S. 2552. An act to provide for a leave of absence for homestead entrymen in one or two periods, and for longer times;

S. 2784. An act to authorize the purchase by the city of McMinnville, Oreg., of certain lands formerly embraced in the grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. and revested in the United States by the act approved June 9, 1916;

S. 3220. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make investigations, through the Bureau of Mines, of lignite coals and peat, to determine the practicability of their utilization as a fuel and in producing commercial products;

S. 3384. An act to amend the public-building act, approved March 4, 1913;

S. 5318. An act granting a pension to Edith Carow Roosevelt; and

S. 5354. An act extending the time for completion of the bridge across the Delaware River authorized by an act entitled "An act to authorize the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania and Newark Railroad Co., or their successors, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Delaware River," approved the 24th day of August, 1912.

ALASKAN ENGINEERING COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Printing:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the report of the Alaskan Engineering Commission for the year ended December 31, 1918.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
25 February, 1919.

LAWS OF PORTO RICO (S. DOC. NO. 416).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 23 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith copies of the acts and resolutions enacted by the Ninth Legislature of Porto Rico during its second special session, November 26 to December 7, 1918.

These acts and resolutions have not previously been transmitted to Congress and none of them has been printed.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 25, 1919.

PANAMA RAILROAD CO. (H. DOC. NO. 1830).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the sixty-ninth annual report of the Board of Directors of the Panama Railroad Co. for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 25, 1919.

FRANCHISES FOR PORTO RICO (S. DOC. NO. 417).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 38 of the act approved March 2, 1917 (39 Stat. 951), entitled, "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I have the honor to transmit herewith certified copies of each of five franchises granted by the Public Service Commission of Porto Rico. The copies of the franchises inclosed are described in the accompanying letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting them to me.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 25, 1919.

SENATOR FROM MICHIGAN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 615, being Senate resolution 415.

Mr. GORE. I object.

Mr. POMERENE. I move that, notwithstanding the objection, the Senate proceed with the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gore	Lodge	Sherman
Baird	Gronna	McCumber	Simmons
Bankhead	Hale	McKellar	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Hardwick	McNary	Smoot
Brandegee	Henderson	Martin, Va.	Spencer
Calder	Hitchcock	Moses	Sterling
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Swanson
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Thompson
Culberson	Kellogg	Nugent	Townsend
Curtis	Kendrick	Overman	Trammell
Dillingham	Kenyon	Page	Vardaman
Fernald	King	Poindexter	Wadsworth
Fletcher	Kirby	Pomerene	Walsh
France	Knox	Ransdell	Watson
Frelinghuysen	La Follette	Reed	Williams
Gay	Lenroot	Sheppard	Wolcott

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 415.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not a debatable motion.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Not after the morning business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not until 2 o'clock. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 415), which the Secretary read, as follows:

Whereas a petition has been filed with the Senate of the United States by Mr. Henry Ford, of Michigan, contesting the election of Mr. Truman H. Newberry, of Michigan, as a Senator from the said State, and asking for the preservation and recount of the ballots, and the investigation of the unlawful expenditures of money alleged to have been made by and on behalf of the said Mr. Truman H. Newberry, and notice thereof has been given; and

Whereas information has been received to the effect that in certain localities within the State some of the ballots are being destroyed, and that others are likely to be destroyed unless they are taken possession of by the Senate for the purpose of preserving and recounting the same: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the said petition and the papers and the documents accompanying the same be, and they are hereby, referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for investigation and report thereon.

Resolved further, That the said Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it is hereby, authorized and empowered to take possession of the ballots, poll books, tally sheets, and all other documents and records relating to the said election held for United States Senator in the State of Michigan on the 5th day of November, 1918, and that the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate be, and he is hereby, instructed to carry out the directions of the said Committee on Privileges and Elections or any subcommittee thereof in that behalf, and that the said Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and it is hereby, directed to proceed with all convenient speed to take all necessary steps for the preservation of the said ballots, poll books, tally sheets, and other documents, and to recount the said ballots, and to take and preserve all evidence as to the various matters alleged in the said petition and notice, and of any alleged fraud, irregularity, and unlawful expenditure of money in the said election and primaries, and to the intimidation of voters, or other facts affecting the result of said election.

Resolved further, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to sit during the sessions of the Senate and during any recess of the Senate or of the Congress, to hold its sessions at such place or places as it shall deem most convenient for the purposes of the investigation, and to have full power to subpœna parties and witnesses, and to require the production of all papers, books, and documents, and other evidence relating to the said investigation; and to employ clerks and stenographers, at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page, to take and make a record of all evidence taken and received by the committee; and to keep a record of its proceedings; and to have such evidence, records, and other matter required by the committee printed.

Resolved further, That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and his deputy are hereby required to attend the said Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, and to execute its directions; that the chairman or any member of the committee be, and is hereby, empowered to administer oaths; that each of the parties to said contest be entitled to representatives and attorneys at the recount and the taking of evidence; that all disputed ballots or records be preserved so that final action may be had thereon by the full committee and the Senate; that the committee may appoint subcommittees of one or more members to represent the committee at the various places in the making of the recount and the taking of evidence, and the committee may appoint such supervisors of the recount as it may deem best; and that the committee may adopt and enforce such rules and regulations for the conduct of the recount and the taking of evidence as it may deem wise, not inconsistent with this resolution; and that the committee shall report to the Senate as early as may be; and from time to time, if it deems best, submit all the testimony and the result of the recount.

Resolved further, That the expenses incurred in the carrying out of these resolutions shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers ordered by the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, and approved by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to go fully into the history of this matter, as it appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I desire, however, briefly to call attention to certain stages of this proceeding.

The resolution under consideration, Senate resolution 415, was introduced on January 14, calendar day of January 17, 1919. It was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. On January 27, 1919, it was favorably reported to the Senate without amendment. That led to certain discussion. As a result of this discussion I had several conferences with members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections on the other side, and I think I can say without any impropriety, particularly with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], this conference led to the draft of a substitute resolution. This substitute resolution was presented informally, as I have been informed, to the minority members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections by the junior Senator from Missouri—and he will correct me if I am in error about this—and by myself to the members of the committee on the majority side. It was quite apparent that while it did not meet the judgment of different Senators as to what ought to be done, it did meet the judgment of Senators as to what could be done, and, in the view of a number of members of the committee, all that ought to be done at that particular time.

That resolution, then, as I have been informed, was submitted to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. Slight modifications were made by him. The committee was called together, and these were considered. The suggestions made by the junior Senator from Michigan were adopted, except that there were one or two, possibly three, changes which tended to clarify the language, but in no sense, as I believe, changed the meaning of the substitute resolution. This substitute resolution was then voted out favorably by the unanimous vote of the members of the committee who were present. Two members, I believe, were absent at that time.

Now, Mr. President, the situation is this: Under the Michigan law, the ballots are in the ballot boxes. A proceeding was begun, in behalf of Mr. Ford, in the United States courts, asking for a temporary restraining order, enjoining the destruction of these ballots. This order was granted, but the decree had this proviso in it, in substance, that this order was not to interfere with the use of the ballot boxes if it became necessary to use them at any other election in the State of Michigan.

Later on, a bill was introduced in the Michigan Legislature, also looking to the preservation of these ballots. It has been said that this act was broad enough to preserve these ballots intact beyond peradventure, so that they would be forthcoming when needed, if there was an investigation at the next session of the Senate; but I want to read to the Senate two sections of this statute.

Section 4 reads as follows:

On being served with a copy of a permanent restraining order issued by said court, it shall be the duty of all officers having the custody of ballot boxes containing ballots cast at said election for said office forthwith to deliver the same to the county clerks of the counties in which such officers reside. It shall be the duty of said county clerks to receive such ballot boxes containing such ballots and to receipt therefor to the officers so delivering them. Said county clerks shall thereupon deposit said ballot boxes containing said ballots in some secure place to await the action of the commissioners herein provided for.

Section 5 reads:

Upon issuing permanent restraining order as herein provided, the supreme court shall name three commissioners who shall proceed to the offices of the several county clerks as soon as may be, open said ballot boxes, remove the ballots therefrom, place them in packages securely wrapped and sealed, and so marked as to show in what voting districts such ballots were cast.

Now, Mr. President, it will be noted that these ballot boxes are to be delivered to the clerks of the counties. There are, I am told, 83 counties in that State. A primary election is to be held on March 5. This statute provides that these commissioners shall in person go to these counties and take possession of these ballot boxes. It will be a physical impossibility for these commissioners, even if they are appointed, to go and get these ballot boxes and do this service in the manner prescribed by this act of the General Assembly of the State of Michigan, so that there is only one method which is open to the Senate, if it is desired to preserve these ballots, and that is that the Senate shall take some action on the subject.

The decrees of the United States court provide that these ballots shall be held in custody until they shall be turned over to the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate. The Sergeant at Arms, of course, can not act unless this resolution is passed; and I submit that after the committee in a contested matter has unanimously agreed to a certain course that course ought to be pursued, if we intend to preserve the status quo, so that these ballots may be forthcoming at the time they may be required; and I may say, that the substitute resolution here provides for the preservation of these ballots and any other documentary evidence. Whether or not there is any other documentary evidence that may be available now I do not know; but I do know, and it has been admitted on the floor of the Senate, that the correspondence of the campaign committee of the contestee has been burned.

Now, Mr. President, I think the Senators are fully advised as to what the facts are and what the situation is. I want to call attention to just one other brief paragraph, on page 2818 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in the colloquy between the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]:

Mr. REED. Do I understand the Senator to mean now that he would consent to the passage of the resolution if it was limited merely to the preservation of documentary evidence?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I would. I am perfectly willing that that should be done.

Mr. REED. That is to say that the subcommittee would preserve the ballots and call for and receive and preserve any other documentary evidence?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no objection to that if that is properly arranged as the stipulation provides. We must know how they are going to be taken and how they are going to do it. I want provision made for doing that.

Mr. REED. You want it done with the attorneys present and a proper representation of the parties.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the Senator, after reading the law that has passed in Michigan, finds that it covers the ground so that these people can go into the court there and get all the relief they want, what more does the Senator wish?

Mr. REED. I do not want anything except I want this evidence saved. I do not want it destroyed. I think we are getting to a point where we may be able to agree upon it. Of course, we can not do it very well standing on the floor of the Senate in this way.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am asking the Senator to read the State law, with the provision that it is given immediate effect, and to see if that does not furnish all the relief which this Congress or Mr. Ford has a right to ask.

So that the situation is this: The decree of the Federal court provides that these ballots shall be retained by the Sergeant at Arms, but that this order shall not restrain the use of these ballot boxes. Then the act of the General Assembly of the State of Michigan provides that, while the ballot boxes in a proceeding to be begun under this act shall be sent to the clerks of the courts in the several counties, the ballots can only be taken therefrom by the commissioners appointed by the court to act under this law; and surely these commissioners can not visit 83 counties.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say with all the earnestness I possess that I am not concerned about the outcome of this case, but I am concerned when charges and countercharges are made by contestant and contestee—charges which, if true, would not permit either one to be in the Senate. With this situation before the Senate, in my humble judgment, it will be derelict in its duties if it does not seize upon every opportunity to preserve these ballots and all other evidence; not that it shall be decided by this Senate—I should not consent that that be done—but that the evidence may be preserved. If it should happen that any committee or subcommittee that may be appointed to take this testimony now should overstep the bounds of propriety—do what it ought not to do or leave undone that which it ought to do—then the Senate and the next committee can disregard all the evidence that has been taken if they so see fit. But what will be the situation if some of this evidence shall be destroyed?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks that anybody is desirous of interfering with the purposes of this resolution, to which the committee unanimously agreed?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa has asked me a very embarrassing question, but I will answer it to the best of my belief. I am satisfied that there is a determined effort here to prevent any action upon this resolution.

Now, Mr. President, I want to call the Senate's attention to another phase of this matter. I do not want anything to be done here that is not going to be eminently fair; and in one of the informal conferences which this committee had I suggested that if this evidence was to be taken a subcommittee could be appointed of either four or six members, to be equally divided between the majority and the minority. I have understood that if I shall insist upon the passage of this resolution the junior Senator from Michigan will ask that the substitute which I offer, and which the committee unanimously authorized me to offer, shall be amended to that effect. I am not authorized by the committee as a whole to accept that amendment; but so far as I can I shall accept it, and I shall ask all Senators to vote for that amendment.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say. I feel that I have done nothing more than my duty. I have tried to do it; and, whatever the result, the consequences will have to rest with the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, first I desire to acquit the Senator from Ohio of any neglect of duty in presenting this matter for consideration. I had no sympathy at all with the article which appeared in the New York World. If I have had any criticism at all to make it has been that the Senator has been rather overdiligent in a matter which ought not to have received such serious consideration.

Now, I desire to state my view of the present situation, in order that the Senate may clearly understand why I am opposing this resolution as it now comes to the Senate.

It is true that this matter has been discussed before the Senate on one or two other occasions. A controversy arose over the senatorial situation in Michigan. The contestant here, Mr. Ford, after the election in November, stated through his attorney in the press that he was satisfied with the election, and should make no contest. Up to the time he filed his petition, several months after the election, there had been some ballots destroyed, as set out by Mr. Ford in the petition which he filed. They had been destroyed according to the ordinary custom in disposing of ballots after an election. In one or two places in Michigan there was an election in December after the November election, and some of the ballots were destroyed. But there has been no effort, no disposition, so far as I am informed, to destroy any ballot cast in the election in November, 1918, since Mr. Ford gave notice that he would make a contest. There has been no evidence that there has been any document destroyed since that notice was filed.

Now, Mr. Ford, through his attorney, who has devoted himself assiduously to this business for months, after filing his petition and after there was opposition made at that time to this Congress going into the investigation, not simply preserving the ballots, not simply preserving evidence, proposed that this Congress should go into an investigation of that election. After that Mr. Ford's attorney petitioned the two Federal courts in Michigan for orders to preserve the ballots. He invoked the jurisdiction of those courts. He was not opposed by Mr. Newberry's friends, but, on the contrary, a stipulation was entered into whereby a temporary restraining order was issued.

Then it appears that the petitioner who had invoked the jurisdiction of the court was not satisfied that it was a sufficient remedy, and so another stipulation was entered into making that restraining order permanent until such time as the Congress might instruct the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate to take possession of the ballots.

Even after that the parties maintained that probably that Federal action was not sufficient, and so, after collaborating with all parties concerned, a bill was introduced into the State Legislature of Michigan providing a remedy for the preservation of these ballots. That bill became a law, as I recall it, something over three weeks ago. Mr. Ford's attorney did not take advantage of the law, but he still insisted that the Senate must pass this resolution authorizing the Sergeant at Arms to proceed in force to take the ballots.

About a week ago or thereabout I was informed that Mr. Ford's attorney visited Mr. Newberry's counsel, stating that he proposed to go into the State court to obtain an order to preserve the ballots. Mr. Newberry's attorney assured him that he was willing to cooperate with him in every particular in doing that. The next day Mr. Ford's attorney concluded that that State law could not be employed expeditiously enough possibly to retain the ballots, and so he prepared another stipulation, to which Mr. Newberry's counsel agreed, whereby the Federal court provided for preserving the ballots and the release of the ballot boxes for the spring election. The parties went into the two Federal courts, and on the 21st and the 22d of this month this order was issued by the district courts in the State of Michigan. I read a copy of that order:

United States of America, in the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Michigan, Southern District. In Equity. Henry Ford, plaintiff, v. Truman H. Newberry, Joseph C. Schinkman, Douglas Turnbull, and Elsie M. Dupuis, defendants. No. 1896.

At a session of said court held in the city of Grand Rapids, on the 22d day of February, A. D. 1919.

Present: The Hon. Arthur J. Tuttle, district judge, sitting by designation.

The parties hereto being present by counsel and consenting hereto: It is hereby Ordered, That public notice be given through newspapers that if there are any of the precincts which imperatively require the use of the ballot boxes containing the senatorial ballots, at the March, 1919, primary, that if the custodian of the ballot boxes of any such precinct will give notice to the attorneys for Henry Ford and Truman H. Newberry, arrangements will be speedily made by said attorneys to transfer the ballots, tally sheets, etc., from the ballot boxes to temporary receptacles, pending the taking possession thereof by the Sergeant at Arms of the United States Senate; it is Ordered, That when such notice of the time and place of such transfer has been given that the transfer be made by said custodian in the presence of the representatives of the said Henry Ford and Truman H. Newberry, and that there be placed in a temporary receptacle with the said ballots a written statement signed by the said custodian of the particular precinct, specifying the condition of the ballot box and its contents at the time of removal; and that the said temporary receptacle be carefully fastened and sealed by and left in the possession of the said custodian until such time as the same is called for by the said Sergeant at Arms; and it is further

Ordered, That except as to such transfer and sealing the restraining orders heretofore granted be and remain in full force as to all other ballot boxes and as to the custody and preservation of said temporary receptacles; and it is further Ordered, That any expense involved in giving such notices or providing temporary receptacles be borne by the plaintiff.

ARTHUR J. TUTTLE, Judge.

Entry of the above order is hereby consented to.

LUCKING, MURPHY, HELFMAN, LUCKING, AND HANLON,
Attorneys for Plaintiff.

J. O. MURFIN,
Attorney for the said Truman H. Newberry.

Under that provision the ballots to-day are being preserved. On Friday and Saturday the ballots in the county of Wayne, the largest single community in our State, were taken out of the ballot boxes and placed in agreed temporary receptacles. It is true also that in every precinct in the State where it is known that they had need of the boxes they are being preserved under that order of the Federal courts.

The Senator from Ohio says that the ballots are likely to be destroyed, and he thinks the Sergeant at Arms is the only person or instrument capable of preserving these ballots. How can they be preserved under the Sergeant at Arms with five days left between this time and the need for primary boxes? It is an utter impossibility for him to do it. There are 2,100 precincts, situated in 83 counties of the State. Not only that, but just think what the Senate proposes to do under the resolution now. With the ballots absolutely preserved according to a plan invoked by Mr. Ford's attorney himself and accepted by the contestee in process of being worked out at this minute, and has been employed ever since the order was issued, it is now proposed under this resolution to send the Sergeant at Arms up into Michigan to interfere with the work of the Federal court and thus produce probable confusion. Mr. President, the Sergeant at Arms could not visit these places within the time limit between this and the 5th day of March. The question of jurisdiction which is going to arise out of this conflict would probably defeat the very object which the Senator has in mind by this resolution.

Now, there is no evidence of any interference on the part of Mr. Newberry or his friends. There is no allegation here that there is any disposition to interfere with the preservation of the ballots. Both parties are working together to preserve them, and the only possible, practical, feasible method that has been or can be employed is being used at this time to do that very thing.

Furthermore, Mr. President, I think the Senate ought to consider somewhat the expense of sending an army of Senate employees, because they would be employed by the Senate to assist the Sergeant at Arms in preserving these ballots. It could not be done, in the first place, between this and the 5th of March. It can and is being done under the other method. Mr. Ford's attorney—and I refer to him, for he is the active party in apparent interest in this controversy—had this court remedy within his power for months, but has not seen fit to exercise it until last Thursday, Friday, or Saturday.

Mr. REED. When was this order made?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think it was made on the 22d.

Mr. REED. On the 22d of February?

Mr. TOWNSEND. One was made on the 22d and the other on the 21st—the eastern district on the 21st and the western district on the 22d, as I recall it. They both might have been made on the same day, but I think not. They were made at the earliest moment when the petitioners went into court and asked for the order.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio has stated that there might be some other evidence which ought to be preserved. I agreed with the Senator when this matter was up three weeks ago that if there was any evidence which it was thought might be destroyed, if the men who have charge of this investigation up in Michigan had stated that they feared some particular evidence would be destroyed, I would have favored steps to preserve it.

Since I had the colloquy with the Senator from Missouri on the floor several weeks ago when this was up before, I have talked with the gentleman who has charge of Mr. Ford's matters before the Senate and elsewhere. His statement to me was that what he was after was a thorough investigation of this case by this Senate, that these other matters were entirely secondary. Not later than week before last or last week he admitted that other matters were comparatively inconsequential, that the thing he wanted was to have this Senate make the investigation, and I assured him that that could not be done. I asked him then what testimony, if any, he had in mind, what documentary evidence he thought would be destroyed. He said he did not have any in mind, although on yesterday he said there was one particular matter that he thought might be destroyed, but he did not see fit to disclose. Such testimony can be taken under stipulation by the parties if the Ford attorney can show that there is danger of its being lost or destroyed. I do not believe any such material evidence exists. I do not believe it exists anywhere, because on yesterday again the representative went back to the ballots and said that he wanted a recount. I never thought he did, but he insists that he does want one now, and he does not want to wait for the only legal authority that can order it. Then I insisted that he ought to have gone into the courts and preserved the ballots long ago, and he evidently did not know or else I did not understand him correctly, that his firm had entered into this court stipulation. I may have been mistaken about that. It may be that he knew it. But the fact is his firm is now legally engaged in preserving the Michigan ballots.

Now, he suggested another thing that others have suggested to me. He asked, "Will you lay any obstruction in the way of an investigation of that senatorial election at the proper session of Congress?" I replied, "No"; but I said to him yesterday, "If you are going to have a recount of the ballots after they are preserved, you ought to lay some little foundation for belief that a count would make a change."

He immediately interrupted and said, "That means you are going to oppose it." I said, "No; it does not mean anything of the kind, but have you not some foundation for the belief that there has been fraud or mistake in the ballots?" His answer was that the majority was so small, about 7,500, that the contestant had a right to come in as a matter of fact and demand a recount of the ballots on that ground. I then said, "Suppose there is an allegation of possible mistake in the count of votes without any basis for the belief except that the majority was small, and suppose every defeated candidate in close States demanded the same right, would Congress be able to do anything else than satisfy the curiosity of unsuccessful candidates for office?"

I say now I have no objection to going into this case by the proper tribunal, but under the statements made over and over again I could not now without laying all the facts before the Senate consent that a resolution shall pass four or five days before Congress adjourns and with an extra session imminent. I can not consent that for some unsatisfactory reason a paid army shall be authorized to go up into Michigan and do a thing that can conserve no end of justice. I am not able to understand now the vindictive persistency of the Ford agents, because, as I said, it is admitted that the ballots are preserved, no danger of losing evidence has been or will be disclosed, only five days of this Congress are left, and the new Congress is sure to convene soon.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has just been referring to the taking of testimony. Surely he does not mean to insinuate that any testimony would be taken contrary to the spirit of this resolution if it is passed. I have said that so far as I was concerned one-half of the subcommittee should come from the minority, so that it would be utterly impossible to do anything that would be unfair to either the contestant or the contestee.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have implicit confidence in the Senator from Ohio. I believe he would act fairly. My own notion about this whole business is not like that of the Senator, although I know he is absolutely sincere in his position, but I know other gentlemen understand just what they want, and I believe the proposition is to commit the next Senate to something which this Senate may do. That is what I believe is the intent and purpose of the resolution, because absolutely nothing practical can be done at this session of Congress. Members of Congress, during these crowded hours, are not going out into Michigan to take testimony. They are needed here, and will be required here until the 4th of March, and this committee may not be extended beyond the 4th of March.

I repeat, this proposed action simply means confusion. These parties have been working together very harmoniously to secure the evidence. They began a little late. They had their remedy; everything is at their hands; but they did not employ it until the last minute, when they were obliged to do it, if a recount is to be had.

But, Mr. President, there are several things connected with this matter which will require discussion. If the Senate feels that it wants to take up this case and dispose of it at this session of Congress, I have no objection, although I do not believe it has any rightful place here now. I do not believe the ends of justice are going to be secured by anything that we may do in connection with this matter now, and therefore I must call the attention of the Senate to some things.

I have some affidavits which I propose to present to the Senate before it votes on this proposition, showing that before the primary in last August and practically up to this minute the Department of Justice has held in Michigan from 25 to 75 men trying to collect evidence of something which would help the administration's candidate for Senator.

I introduced a resolution in the Senate the other day directing the Attorney General to tell the Senate how many men had been sent into Michigan between August and the date of the resolution, what they were there for, their names, and so forth. He sends back to the Senate this answer:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1919.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Replying to the resolution of the Senate passed on the 11th instant, I have the honor to say that agents of the Department of Justice have been investigating alleged violations of the Federal statutes in Michigan in connection with the senatorial primary and election held in that State in August and November, 1918. It would be incompatible with the public interest to reply further to the resolution except to say that if specific complaint shall be made by anyone that any agent of the department in Michigan has engaged in any unlawful or unwarranted practice prompt investigation will be made and such action taken as the facts disclosed shall call for.

Respectfully,

T. W. GREGORY,
Attorney General.

That is the answer which the Senate received to its request for information. I am not satisfied with that answer, and in due time shall try to learn the truth. The rumors are these: There were a large number of men in Michigan who claimed to be representatives of the Department of Justice. I am told by Mr. Ford's attorney that those were not all representatives of that department, but that the Ford people themselves had a good many men out in the State. Whatever the facts may be, however, it is shown by affidavits, which I have in my possession and which I propose to read to the Senate, that these men represented themselves, when it was necessary to do so, as representatives of the Department of Justice. They sent out ambulance drivers of the Red Cross or of some other organization with notices for men to come in as witnesses, and those ambulance drivers were used because it was thought that they would be recognized by the witnesses as having some authority. Also representatives of various war agencies were employed, unknown to them—they did not know what they were doing, but supposed they were obeying some lawful order of the Department of Justice—to induce witnesses to go to certain places. These agents went into some places and asked for the tally sheets and other election documents, took them out of the offices of the clerks, and held them out, in some cases, until the clerks discovered it and went after them.

That kind of business has been going on all over Michigan, and I assert that if there was the fraud which was originally stated—which has not been reiterated since, but which was originally stated—as existing in Michigan these 75 men could have found it and Mr. Newberry would have been indicted in Michigan before this. I will not permit until after a full hearing, if I can prevent it, any aid by this Congress to a Federal scheme organized and prosecuted to control the election of a United States Senator in my State. You shall have all the facts when the proper tribunal is ready for action.

Now, things have simmered down to this condition, and I am going to rely upon the future to determine whether or not I am right: They want to recount these ballots because the majority was only 7,500, or something like that, out of a possible 450,000 ballots cast, stating that was a suspicious matter, and that they thought a recount would insure Mr. Ford's election.

I assume that it would not be charged that there was fraud, but probably that there were mistakes. I have no doubt that mistakes have occurred, but I am very confident that the majority of Mr. Newberry under a recount would not be less than it now is.

In the city of Detroit was where Mr. Ford received his greatest vote. Mr. Newberry's majority in the State, outside of Wayne County, was practically normal, about 45,000 majority; but when he came into the city of Detroit, where the Republican ticket carried by about 25,000 or thereabouts, Mr. Ford received about thirty thousand and odd majority. Every single precinct in the city of Detroit, which is known throughout the State as a controlled precinct—a precinct that has to be watched—went for Mr. Ford by from 2 to 4 votes for him to 1 for Mr. Newberry.

A recount is not objected to by me. I do not think it is opposed by Mr. Newberry. Nobody objects to a recount. Mr. Newberry's friends have tried to cooperate with Mr. Ford's friends in every proposition that they have submitted to preserve the ballots.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. As I understand the Senator's view, it is that he asserts that an investigation of the charges of fraud that are made on both sides can not be made by the Senate of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is right.

Mr. ASHURST. But the Senator has just stated on the floor of the Senate a condition which, it seems to me, he ought to be the first to ask to have remedied. He has asserted that there are precincts that ought to be watched, that are controlled. He casts suspicion upon those precincts in Detroit that gave very large and unusual and abnormal majorities for Mr. Ford. I have a good deal of confidence in the Senator from Michigan, a vast deal of confidence in him, and I expect and hope that in the Sixty-sixth Congress he will be in the lead urging an investigation of both sides of this question, since he seems to contend that an investigation can not be made by the Sixty-fifth Congress.

The Senator from Michigan is too wise and too able and I believe too patriotic a man to sit silently in his seat and fail to cooperate with those who are trying to secure an investigation. Immense sums of money, as the Senator from Michigan knows, have been spent on one side, admittedly, and it has been charged that on the other side immense sums have been spent in behalf of the other candidate. I hope the Senator will give us the assurance—that we do not need—that he will cooperate in the Sixty-sixth Congress for securing an investigation by the proper committee. I think he will take the initiative and will be a leader in that movement.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That was suggested to me the other day—that I introduce a resolution for investigating my prospective colleague. Well, of course I shall not do it. If I were impressed that he received his seat by fraud, if there had been anything presented to me or to the Senate worthy of belief showing fraud, I might not hesitate to do so. What I am stating is that under no circumstances will I in the least obstruct a proposition to investigate the election of Mr. Newberry at the next session of Congress. I do say that I hope the Senate will not adopt the general proposition—and I do not think it will—that without allegations of fraud based on some form of affidavit or some substantial evidence they will proceed to count the ballots of a State simply because a Senator's majority happens to be small.

Mr. ASHURST. Now, let me ask the Senator, does he assert here that the fact that the brother of one of these candidates contributed $99,000, and admitted it, makes no impression on his mind and calls for no investigation? Does the Senator mean that a man can contribute great sums of money—$99,000—and that he would then say in the Senate that it made no impression on him?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator is talking about the primaries in Michigan. I have no doubt that the record states the truth as to who contributed this money. I think Mr. Newberry's brother did contribute a large amount, although I do not know just the amount.

Mr. ASHURST. The amount was $99,000.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The question as to whether that was against the law—it having been spent for advertising in the State—is now before the Supreme Court of the United States, and will probably be decided on the 3d of next month; the question as to whether that Federal statute was or was not a constitutional one is to be decided. Unless it shall be decided to be a crime—that is, a violation of law—there are some matters that I desire to consider before I proceed to investigate that incident, simply because there was a lot of money spent for advertising. I do not approve it; I do not think it did Mr. Newberry any good; I think it was absolutely a detriment to him to have that money spent, because it was all paraded in the election contest after the primary and the people knew all about it.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not know when it was exposed to the public that these contributions were made.

Mr. TOWNSEND. All through the election campaign. I have many advertisements here and statements showing that fact, which I am going to present to the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to interrupt for a moment, the learned Senator, in the early part of his speech, stated that Mr. Ford issued a statement immediately after the election that he was satisfied.

Mr. TOWNSEND. His attorney did so for him.

Mr. ASHURST. Or his attorney stated that he was satisfied. That to me in unimportant. It is not a question whether Mr. Ford was satisfied or dissatisfied or whether Mr. Newberry was satisfied or dissatisfied; there are third parties, who are the people of the State of Michigan and the people of the United States. The fact that Mr. Ford was satisfied or dissatisfied should not weigh at all in the matter, and the fact that he later changed his mind and took the view that he had been defrauded at the election or that some pressure was put on him somewhere to change his attitude should not weigh at all. What he may have said or may not have said makes no difference.

I am a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, but I wish to say that I have never met Mr. Newberry, and so I can not have the slightest prejudice against him. I met Mr. Ford once, having been introduced to him some years ago I think either by the junior Senator from Michigan or his colleague, I have forgotten which. I have not any interest in these two men. That Mr. Newberry will be sworn in and assist in reorganizing the Senate I have no doubt, because he has what we call a prima facie certificate, but I earnestly hope the Senator, with his ability, will not resist the effort of those of us who believe, when large sums of money are expended on behalf of the election of a Democrat or a Republican, that the matter should be investigated.

The Senator from Michigan is not an opulent man; he has risen to power and place and distinction without great opulence, and he knows how often a man who is not opulent can be beaten down in an attempt to reach great public office by an opulent man. I am glad to see opulent men come to the Senate if they come with clean hands—and I do not assert that either of these gentlemen have other than clean hands—but I wish to say at this time to the Senator, who is a credit to the Senate and to his State, that instead of opposing technical objections to an investigation of this matter, instead of trying to resist it, it would be more in keeping with the Senator's very distinguished public career if he would say, as to Democrats or Republicans, if they have expended money to the amount of $170,000, or even $50,000, the sunlight shall be turned upon the transaction and the radium of publicity shall burn out this cancer, if there be one, on the body politic. That is what I want to see done.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I did not cite the expenditure of $176,000 with approval, nor did I mention the fact that the contest was not instituted earlier as any argument for spending $170,000. I simply cited the fact that Mr. Ford's attorney did not make any contest in this case or give any notice of a contest, but, on the contrary, said that his side was satisfied, to show why some of the ballots were destroyed in the ordinary way. There was no anticipation of a recount, and there was use in some places for the ballot boxes in the election in December following. I am simply citing that to show why the ballots which were destroyed were burned.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me further——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield further to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I desire to interrupt the Senator for just a moment to refer to the activity of the Department of Justice. I say this because I should like to place my view of it in the RECORD at this time. I will be very brief.

The Senator lays considerable stress upon and objects to and inveighs against the alleged activities of the Department of Justice in this matter. There is a Federal law on the statute books penalizing those who spend money improperly in Federal elections. If corruption does exist—and I do not assert that it does, because I do not know—or if any fraud has been committed by Mr. Newberry's agents or Mr. Ford's agents, if the Department of Justice combs the matter and finds nothing, the Senator's prospective colleague is abundantly cleared and free from all suspicion; but if corruption is actually found, the Senator can not complain.

So I do not believe that the Senator, who is usually on solid ground in his arguments, has his feet on solid ground when he objects to the activities of the Department of Justice; first, because if the parties are innocent, no one will be harmed, and, if there is guilt, the guilt should be exposed. That is my view of it.

I do not want this investigation to take a partisan tinge. It makes very little difference to me which one of these men is seated from the party standpoint. I have no doubt that they are both estimable gentlemen in private life, although I know nothing about that; but I regret to see especially the Senator from Michigan interposing what seem to be technical objections to the progress of this investigation.

If the Senator from Michigan will pardon me further, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] offers a compromise that the committee shall be composed equally of Members of the minority and of the majority, so that no injustice can possibly be done—I see no objection to accepting that proposition—and that this committee, which is to take the ballots and to hear the testimony during the short remaining period of the Sixty-fifth Congress, shall be composed one half of Members of the minority and the other half of Members of the majority; and when the Sixty-sixth Congress shall convene I shall expect, indeed I shall hope, that the majority shall control the main committee and subcommittee, as is usual in important cases of this kind.

That constitutes all I have to say, and I thank the Senator for yielding to me at this time.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have no objection to a proper investigation of charges of fraud or corruption. The charges which have been made in reference to corruption in Michigan have been duplicated in several other States where elections for Senators occurred last November. I have not heard that the Department of Justice has sent its agents into any other State, although I think there is greater evidence of fraud in them. The one great fact that stood out above all others in Michigan was that $176,000 had been acknowledged to have been spent in the primaries—an unconscionable amount—and it is admitted. We need no spies or investigations to discover that; but every item was explained; and it was believed by those who made the expenditure that they had the right to expend that amount.

They felt that they were up against an unusual campaign. The President had selected a man who was known to be—or supposed to have been—a Republican, and asked him to run on the Democratic ticket in Michigan. That man said that he regarded the President's request as a command, and he accepted it. In the primaries he ran on both the Democratic and Republican tickets with the hope that he might be nominated on the Republican ticket, and then he could withdraw from the Democratic ticket, that party would nominate nobody against him, and he would have the field to himself. That was the condition that confronted the Republicans and the electors of Michigan. Michigan immediately became the swarming place for all kinds of Federal employees, who went there for the purpose of trying to influence that election. They, or Ford representatives impersonating them, paraded their unwarranted methods in our State.

Mr. Ford was the best-advertised man in the United States in private life; he had an agency in every little hamlet in Michigan, and that agency was the local Ford campaign headquarters during the primaries and the election. It is known that he had spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in advertising in years before. I have little doubt that he spent more than $100,000 in advertising his peace propaganda and the reelection of Mr. Wilson in 1916. He was advertised everywhere. Mr. Newberry's committee undertook to combat that by organizing a newspaper advertising campaign for Mr. Newberry, which cost a lot of money.

If it should turn out that our Federal statute limiting the expenditure of money in the primaries is unconstitutional, while everybody would deplore conditions that would make it necessary to have such a campaign between two rich men, I do not think anybody would condemn one more than he would the other. I never want another such campaign to be waged, and I will gladly support any working constitutional law to that end.

Now, the Senator from Arizona says that he thinks I ought to be the first——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, let me interrupt the Senator there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. I regret to take the time, but let me call the Senator's attention to this: Ex-Governor Osborn—and I have never met him, but I have read a letter that he wrote; I can not even quote the date of it, but I think it was about the middle of September—wrote a letter to Mr. Newberry, and said to Mr. Newberry, the Senator elect: "You ought to confess your error to the people of Michigan. You commenced your campaign of wild money spending, and the extravagant use of money, and the improper use of money, long, long before Henry Ford as a candidate was ever thought of." I am only quoting the contents of that letter. I have not the letter with me, but I have read it. I assume that he must have been a Republican, or he would not have been an ex-Governor of Michigan.

Now then, here is a man of substance who has held an office of great importance, an office of first importance, in that State, who writes a letter to Mr. Newberry and says: "You can not say that you were obliged to use money in combating Mr. Ford and Mr. Ford's advertisements, because you commenced your campaign of reckless expenditure long before Ford entered the race."

I thank the Senator. That is all I care to say.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not begrudge the time the Senator has occupied the floor, but I remember that letter. I know Mr. Osborn very well. I know him much better than I know either Mr. Newberry or Mr. Ford. I have bunked with him for weeks at a time. We have hunted together; our families are friends. I am very fond of him. He was a candidate against Mr. Newberry and Mr. Ford in the Republican primary. He was very bitter during that primary, however, and attacked both Mr. Newberry and Mr. Ford. He said some very harsh things. After the primary he sent a most fulsome telegram of congratulation to Mr. Newberry. Mr. Newberry acknowledged the telegram in friendly and kindly terms, and then Mr. Osborn thought it wise—I am not questioning his motives—to criticize him very strongly in an open letter which he gave to the public and from which the Senator from Arizona has just quoted.

That letter of Mr. Osborn was written immediately after the primary. The people had it before them during the election. They knew all about what Mr. Osborn had charged. Furthermore, Mr. Osborn was called as a witness before the grand jury down in New York called to investigate this alleged violation of law, the Federal statute to which the Senator made reference. Mr. Osborn testified before the grand jury. So did Mr. Dickinson, the lieutenant governor. Twenty-four or twenty-five other people testified before that grand jury.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator let me read the letter—it is very short—so as to have it in the RECORD accurately, if the Senator does not object, at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield for that purpose?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That only prolongs the discussion. I want it all read, though.

Mr. ASHURST. I will read the whole letter.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I would like to have read first the telegram that Mr. Osborn sent to Mr. Newberry, and then the subsequent letter; but I do not object to the Senator reading it.

Mr. ASHURST. I will read the only documents that I have. They are very brief.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Read all the letter.

Mr. ASHURST. The first is as follows:

NEW YORK CITY,
Sunday, September 1, 1918.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: Your cordial telegram assuring me of your earnest support is all that was needed to insure the defeat of Ford in November. I fully realize that my personality is submerged in the issues that confront our party in our State. Many times in the past few months I have envied your ability and privilege to talk, and when your voice rang clear and strong throughout State and Nation on the menace of Ford I wanted to wire you Godspeed in your patriotic work.

Your deeply appreciated telegram of support helps me to visualize the statesman, the sportsman (hunter), and gentleman that I have always known you to be.

Cordially, yours,

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY.

That was directed to former Gov. Osborn by Mr. Newberry. Now, here is Gov. Osborn's reply:

SEPTEMBER 17, 1918.

MY DEAR COMMANDER—

I suppose he means Commander Newberry—

MY DEAR COMMANDER: I have read your letter. Thank you for your sentiments. I shall support you. Already I have straightened out entanglements that would have been hurtful to your success. I am not interested in you personally a particle. The entire matter is so far beyond personal consideration and transcends individual proportions to an extent that only public welfare may be thought of. You can be elected; no doubt you will be. My idea is that the thing for you to do is to honestly confess that you broke the law and that you knew all about the campaign, but that you did not realize the enormity of your offense. In such a position you would be intrenched in honesty, I fully believe. And an indulgent people would forgive you and fight for you because of the past services they think you have given and what they have been told you are giving now. In addition, this action would make for your name an honorable place in the history of Michigan. Otherwise the future will curse you.

The plea can not be honestly made that you spent money in excess because you were fighting Ford, because you had begun your reckless campaign long before Ford was mentioned and had already transgressed the law. Nor can you plead "you did not know." That would prove you to be both an ass and a liar, which I choose to think you are not. I am for you only to save the Nation and the State from the curse of Fordism. A vote for Ford is a vote for the Kaiser right now, as I view the case.

Yours, truly, CHASE S. OSBORN.

I thank the Senator for permitting me to put in the entire letter, so that I would not misquote it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That letter, of course, has been put in several times.

Mr. ASHURST. I did not know that, although I have watched the case closely.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is in the RECORD in several places.

I repeat, these witnesses were presented at the investigation of Mr. Newberry by the grand jury in New York. After they had all testified in New York before the grand jury, with the exception of three whom no one considers were necessarily important, because all the people who had been suggesting fraud were sworn and testified, the grand jury found no cause for indictment. This investigation took place during the election, and it was clearly held for the purpose of influencing the election in November. That influence, which was exerted from the time President Wilson brought about Mr. Ford's candidacy up to this hour, still exists.

I have perfect confidence in the chairman of this committee and in the two or three members on each side, representing each party, which would constitute the proposed subcommittee that might investigate this matter; but it can not be done this week. Nobody thinks it can be done at this session of Congress. If you were to authorize the Sergeant at Arms to go out into Michigan to-morrow to preserve ballots and enter into conflict with the Federal authorities, who have been invoked by this petitioner and are now in possession of many of these ballots, you would not expedite the investigation which will be had at the next session. I want this investigation to be held, if it is shown on sufficient authority that one is required, and I want these ballots preserved. I know that the only method of preserving them is now being employed in Michigan, and they will be preserved until they are needed. I want them preserved. I am sorry any of them were destroyed before ever it was known that there was to be a contest; but I imagine that some arrangement or calculation can be made as to those, if there is any question about them, so that it will not materially interfere with the result of the recount. If there is to be a recount, of course the ballots must be preserved. They could have been preserved without question by these parties long ago.

Under the testimony that has been submitted, that these two men are immensely wealthy, millionaires, I have been opposed to putting upon the Government the expense of sending an army of Senate employees into Michigan on a fishing excursion. It will cost from twenty-five to fifty thousand dollars, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to send this force, and the excursion would be of very doubtful benefit to the preservation of ballots.

Mr. President, these are sufficient reasons for me to oppose this resolution. The conditions are different from what they were three weeks ago to-day. Three weeks ago to-day I believed, under the statement of the Senators, that there might be some evidence which possibly would be destroyed. I am convinced to-day that nobody has any such evidence in mind. I know now that the ballots are being preserved under a scheme proposed by Mr. Ford's attorneys and acquiesced in by the counsel for Mr. Newberry.

This is a peculiar situation that confronts us. The petitioner invokes authority, and he gets acquiesence on the part of the defense, and then he vacates it, and says it is not sufficient.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do.

Mr. ASHURST. Assuming—and I take the Senator's word for it—that the ballots will be preserved, and that adequate and suitable measures have been taken to secure the ballots, and that indeed they are secured, and will be for the next six months secure, I call the Senator's attention to paragraph "(b)" of this amendment, which reads:

To take and preserve any relevant, competent, and material verbal testimony where it is shown to a majority of the committee, a quorum being present, or to a majority of any subcommittee acting in the matter, that any witness can not reasonably be expected to be available as a witness, if called before a committee of the Senate of the Sixty-sixth Congress.

There is no one who knows when the Sixty-sixth Congress will be called into extraordinary session. I assume it will be called into extraordinary session before July. That is not a violent assumption. Is it not within the domain of the Senator's thought that there may be, and probably is, some evidence of a verbal nature that might exist, some witness who might seek now, in view of this discussion with regard to this question, to put himself beyond the jurisdiction of the courts, or even beyond the jurisdiction of the Senate, or some other testimony? We all know, as lawyers, how quickly testimony may disappear if a long period of time elapses before it is put into solid and concrete form in the way of a record. The evidence of fraud is a very elusive thing, anyhow. Now, then, it has been stated to the Committee on Privileges and Elections when my distinguished and learned friend, the Senator from Ohio, was presiding, as he was during all sessions, that there was evidence of a particular nature—I am not going to mention it here—that there were witnesses who believed that evidence existed that ought to be taken and reduced to written form, evidence that it was asserted would tend to throw light on the question of whether or not Mr. Ford or Mr. Newberry had knowledge of the expenditure of these immense sums of money.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Did I understand the Senator to say that the chairman of the committee has knowledge of some such witness?

Mr. ASHURST. I think it was asserted before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the Senator from Ohio presiding, that there were reasonable and substantial grounds to believe, and they did verily believe, that there existed evidence that would tend to throw light on the question as to whether Mr. Ford or Mr. Newberry knew of the expenditure of these great sums of money.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, my understanding is that the chairman has had nothing in mind; that he has no knowledge of any such testimony. The attorney for Mr. Ford told me at first that he knew of nothing, but yesterday he told me there was something now that he would like to have preserved. If he will name it, I am sure its preservation will be stipulated.

Mr. ASHURST. Is not that an entirely reasonable statement? He said he knew nothing and was perfectly honest; probably did not know anything. Is it not within the domain of the Senator's experience that he might learn of something? Is it not reasonable to suppose that the attorney for Mr. Ford might learn of something?

Mr. TOWNSEND. As far as I am concerned, I can not imagine that in a case charged with such wholesale fraud as this is, where 75 or more Federal agents have been raking Michigan with a sleuth's comb, that the loss of one piece of evidence would prejudice the petitioner's case.

The fact is that there is no danger of loss of evidence. That is what I believe. This whole thing that originated away back in the White House is now being conducted by parties outside of this committee and outside of the Senate who desire to get some recognition for some purpose unworthy, in my judgment, of the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. Of course, the Senator does not refer to any member of the committee?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Not at all. I have said that repeatedly.

Mr. ASHURST. I want to say, however, men are misrepresented. I read yesterday from one of the most reliable papers in the United States a keen and bitter criticism against the Senator from Ohio, urging that he had been remiss in his duties. I was amazed——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I testified to the mistake in that paper, when I first rose.

Mr. ASHURST. I was amazed that such an able and usually correct paper should have made such a statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the conference report on House bill 13308.

Mr. BANKHEAD rose.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the indulgence of my very generous friend, the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices, to temporarily lay aside the conference report that we may have a vote on this resolution?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, nothing would give me more pleasure than to oblige the Senator from Ohio, but I have been sitting around here for days trying to get this conference report before the Senate. It is now the unfinished business, and we can dispose of it in a very short time. I must insist that we proceed with the unfinished business.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator yield to me to ask a question of the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. May I have the attention of the Senator from Michigan for a moment?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. POMERENE. If I may have the attention of the Senator from Michigan, I wish to ask him a very frank question. Is it the object of the Senator from Michigan to defeat a vote on this question, or will he object to a vote on this question?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I can not consent to a vote on the question now. If this matter is to be taken up, if the Senate during the last four or five days of the session feels that this is so important that it is to supplant the legitimate business of the Senate, then I am going to submit to the Senate not some rumors but some affidavits and some facts as to what has occurred in Michigan. I have not wanted to delay the work of the Senate. If I thought there was the slightest reason for believing that this investigation of the case of Ford against Newberry was going to be embarrassed because of our failure to act at this session, I would act differently about it, but I feel very deeply in this matter now, and I shall insist upon submitting the facts to the Senate. Michigan has been outraged by Federal interference. The administration is responsible for the scandal that has come to our honorable State, and when this investigation occurs it shall be unembarrassed by further Federal prejudice.

Mr. POMERENE. I of course have recognized the fact that the Senator from Michigan feels very deeply on the subject, but the Committee on Privileges and Elections, every Senator who was then in the Capitol, Republican and Democrat alike, felt that this question was of such importance that they unanimously authorized the chairman of the committee to present this substitute. I submit that with that situation before the Senate there ought to be a little consideration paid to what was the judgment of the committee.

It is only desired that such evidence shall be taken as will tend to preserve the testimony which may be dissipated. With a subcommittee composed of Members equally divided between the majority and the minority side, I do not believe that the Senator himself thinks that any injustice would be done either to the contestant or to the contestee.

This matter relates to the dignity, the purity, of the membership of the Senate; and I had hoped that, with the charges and the countercharges being made here, no stone would be thrown in the way of a proper effort to preserve any testimony that might possibly get away.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator know of any such testimony now?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I know nothing about this matter except the substance of what has been presented either to the committee or to the Senate. I am not judging of that testimony.

Mr. TOWNSEND. After reading the proceedings in the Federal courts of Michigan and understanding, as he must, that the ballots are now fully protected against destruction, does the Senator still think that it would be advisable to send the Sergeant at Arms into Michigan now to preserve the ballots?

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator is now referring to the ballots alone. I am frank to say that the decree of the United States district court places more safeguards around the ballots than there were prior to the time the decree was modified, but that is only one part of the testimony. I expect that it is on the lips of the Senator to inquire if I know of any other documentary evidence that will be destroyed. If he is asking me from my personal knowledge, I have no personal knowledge on the subject; but I have had 30 years of experience as a practicing lawyer, and, in my judgment, where fraud has been resorted to, without alleging that any has been resorted to, but assuming it has been resorted to, the man who will deal in fraud will destroy the indicia of fraud if he has the opportunity.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator, if such a man exists in this case, has he not already destroyed all damaging evidence?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, that may be so; but in my experience I have found that where an attempt has been made to destroy evidence often there is a little of it which under the ruling of a providence escapes and it sometimes leads to the trailing of the man who has been guilty of it.

I recognize the fact that these proceedings have been blocked at every turn. Even when it came to an investigation by a grand jury the attorney for the man who claims the seat appeared and advised witnesses who were called there to raise the question of the constitutionality of the law. Never in my experience as a lawyer did I hear it claimed that a witness before a grand jury that was holding a grand inquest had the right to raise the question of the validity of any question unless it was a question which tended to incriminate or disgrace.

That is one of the obstacles which have been thrown into this investigation. The Senator from Michigan the other day admitted that the correspondence of the campaign committees that had expended $176,000 to get a given man into the Senate had been burned, and under these circumstances there is nothing for the United States Senate to investigate. That is all I care to say.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator from Michigan did state in answer to some question, I believe, that some of the ordinary political campaign correspondence had been destroyed, the same, I believe, as is done in every campaign, especially in one of magnitude, where there have been thousands and thousands of letters some have been destroyed. It is not in reason to think that all are preserved. There was no reason for either destroying or preserving them except to get them out of the way as rubbish. There had been no question about the election.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator speaks of what is the practice always. I have some knowledge of conditions in my own State and in my own county. I am not able to say that it is always destroyed, and very often when it is destroyed we all know that there is some reason why it may be destroyed.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE COMSTOCK.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Sunday next, March 2, at the conclusion of the eulogies on the late Senator HUSTING, of Wisconsin, and the late Representative DAVIDSON, of Wisconsin, I shall ask the Senate to consider resolutions on the life, character, and public services of Hon. DANIEL W. COMSTOCK, late a Representative from the State of Indiana.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, when the Senate adjourned last night this conference report was before it, but owing to lack of a quorum I did not have opportunity to make a few comments, which I wish to do. I should not do this if I had had the opportunity to make them during the consideration of the Post Office bill, but, unfortunately, I was confined in committee rooms at that time and failed of the opportunity which I desired. Even now I am not going to take very much of the time of the Senate.

I wish to say before proceeding with the comments which I am going to make that I recognize the difficulties in all cases of coming to an agreement in the case of a conference where there is a material difference of opinion between the two Houses, and that in the case which we now have under consideration there were material differences of opinion, and it was impossible without making some concessions of matters which one House or the other desired to retain in the bill to come to an agreement. While there are details in this bill which do not meet my approval, details which I wish could be changed or eliminated from the bill, I intend to give it my support when a vote is reached because I am satisfied it is the best possible conclusion that could have been reached and that the Senate conferees did everything they were obligated to do to carry out the wishes of the Senate.

I wish, Mr. President, first to refer particularly to the conduct of the Post Office Department as a general proposition. That is one of the services in the United States in which all people are interested. It is a service in which they have justly taken very great pride in the past.

It has connected with it a large number of employees, running into the hundreds of thousands, who are men of honesty and capacity and industry, and who have performed their duties as well as could have been done. But under the present administration I submit there has been a great deterioration of the service which the people of this country—indeed, of other countries—have received from our Postal Department. This has been due to unwise and undesirable actions taken from time to time, of irresolution on the part of the department, of such conduct relating to the personnel of the employees of the department, that there has arisen a very just, I think, resentment. Indeed, the morale of the service has never been as low as it is to-day. That has resulted in a general impairment of the service. I need not bring any evidence to the attention of the Senate to demonstrate the correctness of that statement. Every man who has had anything to do with the Postal Service during the last three or four years must be willing to testify that the service has been performed in a way which was entirely unsatisfactory to him.

There has been a delay in the mails which we have never known before, a delay which in some respects is entirely without justification. In order to make some so-called modification of the service which would result in economy, there was a considerable change made in the Railway Mail Service, so that instead of mail being distributed on the trains in all cases much of it came into stations for distribution after the train arrived, or was distributed before the train left, so that it was delayed very materially in delivery, or there was an earlier closing without hastening delivery. That delay means very much in a great city, for instance, like New York or Boston, because if mail reaches the city before 6 o'clock in the morning, for example, it is distributed by the first delivery made by the carriers. If it is an hour later, it is not distributed until the second delivery made by the carriers, making a difference frequently of two or three or four hours in the handling of mail matter which may contain business of great importance.

There has been, as far as my observation is concerned, universal criticism of that change in the service. Indeed, that criticism goes on throughout the entire service. Even the local mails have not been handled expeditiously. Matters of importance as well as social matters have been delayed, and the whole service has gotten into a condition which needs jacking up more than the Postal Service ever has. I state this as a fact, having been familiar with this service in a rather intimate way for the last 10 years, either in my service on committees in the House of Representatives or in the Senate.

The criticism which I make applies not only to the ordinary business service performed by the department but it applies to that relating to the military service. We had to take from the Post Office Department the delivery of mail on the other side and turn it over to the War Department. During the first part of the war very frequently mails were six weeks reaching those to whom they were directed in Europe, and for a time under the War Department this condition was materially better. The War Department itself does not know why it got back partially into the condition it was before it was taken over by the War Department, but it is sufficient to say that it is the first time, so far as I know, in the history of the Government that a service has been taken away from the department which has it in control under the law, and which it naturally would have charge of, and turned over to another department of the Government which theretofore had nothing whatever to do with it because of failure to perform suitable service.

At present the mails are put on board the steamer by the Post Office Department in New York or whatever port from which the ship is sailing, and they are taken to the other side under the control of the War Department and there distributed by the War Department. When the mails return they are brought to the shore on the other side, to the point of debarkation, and there turned over to the Post Office Department to be brought to this side and distributed by the Postal Service. I submit that never has there been any such action taken before, and yet we know how badly that mail service has been performed.

I could submit tons of evidence here of delays of from one to three weeks beyond any possible reason that could be assigned by anyone. From time to time I have asked postal officials and officials of the War Department for some reason for these delays in the mails, and in every instance they have charged the delay to other service and always admitted that the service was not satisfactory.

I believe the reason for this failure to perform satisfactory service is due more largely than anything else to a general letting down of the service on account of the general suppression which has been going on which the employees believe has been an unfair treatment by the administration. At least the testimony that comes to me would seem to bear that out.

Then we have had indecision in other ways. Not only has the Postal Service gone down in its quality, but the department has taken over other services with which it had never had any experience in dealing before—the telephone and the telegraph. In that case the head of the Postal Department has had an irresolution, which I hope is not typical, but it is very pronounced, first in favor of Government ownership, then opposed to Government ownership, and finally, under the conditions of the last year, being in favor of Government ownership again and taking over the operating of those services, and is now, I understand, in favor of their purchase.

Then in addition to that we have the taking over of the cables after the war was over. There has never been any reason given for that. Attempts have been made to obtain from somebody some justification in law or reason for taking over the cables, but as far as I am informed no reason has ever been offered. While we as a Government a short time ago compelled the dissolution of the telephone and the telegraph services, now the assigned purpose for taking over these services is to combine them. In other words, we are taking a directly contrary course to that which we took two or three years ago when we compelled, under the antitrust laws, the dissolution of the telegraph and telephone services.

This condition of uncertainty has extended down through the service, and I want to bring to the attention of the Senate, as it was done very indefinitely during the consideration of this bill, one of the matters which demonstrate the correctness of my statement—that relates to the experimental truck service which has been undertaken. That proposition was advocated in committee and on the floor of the Senate on the theory that we might in some way bring to the consumer the product of the producer more directly, more expeditiously, and enable the producer to obtain as large a price as he otherwise would and the consumer to obtain his products at a less price.

There seemed to be some reason in making the experiment, and it was undertaken last year by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, under whose direction this service was carried on.

When the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General was before the committee he advocated not only extending this service to an extent requiring an appropriation of $1,000,000, but in the committee he advocated an appropriation of $8,000,000 to carry it on; and I notice that there is a statement somewhere which emanates from him which would mean, if the service were extended to 10,000 routes, earnings of somewhere between $400,000,000 and $500,000,000 might be obtained. But if the first-class mails which were carried on the trucks, mails which were diverted from other services, the entire receipts from the mail being given to the trucks, had been eliminated and there had been 10,000 routes started in this country there would have been a loss of at least $140,000,000.

I want to point out a little more definitely how this service was performed. Incidentally let me say that the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General stated to the committee finally that the service could not be carried on profitably, or even to return its cost, unless first-class mails were carried by the trucks.

In many of the cases the mails were diverted from the railroad service, which had theretofore handled them, diverted so that there was frequently a delay in departure and almost invariably a delay in reaching their destination, and that was due very largely to directions that were given by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General in establishing this service, directions which, he said before the committee, were issued with his approval but without his giving them any serious consideration.

Indeed, he intimated that they were brought to him, put on his desk, and signed by him without giving them any other consideration than possibly to read them.

This is the paragraph to which I refer, and it shows the careless, willfully careless, way in which these experimental services are frequently undertaken.

Rule 7 directs "while the route is intended particularly as a Parcel Post Service, postmasters will dispatch by the driver mail of all classes, including registered matter, that can thereby be advanced either in delivery or in dispatch."

"Either in delivery or in dispatch." As an example of advancing service in dispatch, a service was established from Cincinnati to some point in Kentucky. The principal earnings from that service came from carrying first-class mails from Cincinnati to Covington, just across the river from Cincinnati, service that had been performed by the screen-wagon service. Under this method of conducting it the cost was increased several times, and yet these trucks were given full credit for the receipts from the service which had been conducted satisfactorily in every other way, and simply because it left the post office in the city of Cincinnati a few minutes before the screen-wagon service, as it had been previously conducted.

Let me take another case of lesser carelessness but greater profligacy with which this service has been performed. A service was established from Worcester, Mass., to Hartford, Conn., on the way to New York. There are at least six express trains daily each way between the city of Worcester and the city of Hartford. They take about 2 hours and 15 minutes to make the run, but they run through the city of Springfield.

These three cities are located in a triangle, so that the distance from Worcester to Hartford by a straight line is a little less than it would be around through Springfield by way of the railroad, but it took the truck more than twice as long—yes, more than three times as long—to make the distance between Worcester and Hartford than it did to go by express train. That service would have been most unprofitable if it had not been for diverting the first-class mail from the railroads and carrying it by truck—thus delaying by several hours its arrival at either terminal—and applying the entire proceeds of the carrying of that mail to the truck service, even though it was destined to the remotest parts of the United States. Of course, there can not be any excuse for that kind of an experiment. The report almost deluded the committee into thinking that there might be some advantage in it; and I do not know but what we would have been fooled if it had not been that the Postmaster General had some time before detailed a board of post-office officials to make an investigation, and as a result of that investigation, after the bill had been passed by the House appropriating a million dollars for this service, the committee was given correct information in relation to it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield.

Mr. PENROSE. I have heard the statement made that this service is the most profligate—and that is the way the Senator expressed it—and wasteful of any; that it is a typical case of wastefulness. I should like to ask the Senator whether he has devoted any study to the accounting of any particular rural route to ascertain the character of commodities carried and the expense, and whether there can clearly be demonstrated a profit by it?

Mr. WEEKS. That has been done covering this entire service, but we have not the figures before us covering any particular route. I can, however, give the Senator some figures which I think will be illuminating.

Mr. PENROSE. Do those figures take into account the repair bills for these automobile trucks?

Mr. WEEKS. Only in a very general way.

Mr. PENROSE. I happened to stop at a garage in Pennsylvania the other day, and the keeper of the place was ridiculing the whole performance. I think he stated that for the three or four trucks that ran from his place to New York carrying mushrooms the bill for repairs was $400 per month.

Mr. WEEKS. That is what is known as the mushroom express.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. WEEKS. It runs from West Chester, Pa., to New York City. I have no doubt the suggestion made by the Senator from Pennsylvania is correct. It was not a profitable service.

Mr. PENROSE. But it is still running.

Mr. WEEKS. It is still running, I think.

Mr. PENROSE. At the place where I was it was still running.

Mr. WEEKS. Let me give the Senator an illustration of how this service is performed on a route from Baltimore, Md., to Gettysburg, Pa. The reports which were made as to that service were most favorable, but when the committee appointed by the Postmaster General investigated the route these are the facts which they actually obtained:

Record of first-class mail carried outward from Baltimore on the truck operating between Baltimore and Gettysburg furnishes further evidence of the same character; it shows no first-class mail handled from Baltimore on trips of November 16, 19, 21, 22, 23, 26, 27, and 30; on five days of the month, when entries appear to have been made by the dispatching clerk at Baltimore, recorded weights vary from 14 pounds to 29 pounds. On other days, when record appears to have been made by the driver, it shows 45 pounds first-class matter on the 7th and 15th, 50 pounds on the 13th and 28th, 80 pounds on the 8th, 85 pounds on the 6th, 9th, 11th, 14th, 18th, 20th, 25th, and 29th, respectively.

On date of inspection, December 13, record made by dispatcher was 20 pounds, which corresponds very well with the amount carried.

An actual count of the postage on first-class matter dispatched, with weights of same, by this route from Baltimore was made on the 9th, 10th, and 11th instant, with the following result:

	Actual weight.	Recorded by driver.
	Lbs. ozs.	Pounds.
Jan. 9	10 4	90
Jan. 10	15 11	85
Jan. 11	9 14	90
Total	35 13	265

There are numerous other instances, Mr. President, where the weights have been padded, so that the reported results of the experiment made have no value whatever. Let me take, as an example, a route which was started from Portland, Me., along the shore toward Portsmouth, N. H. This route goes through a summer colony called Ogonquit. About eight months in the year there are practically no people at that point, and for the other four months there are a great many summer visitors. They took the weight of the mail carried from Portland to Ogonquit on one of the days in August when there were the greatest number of people at Ogonquit and used that as a basis for every day during the year. So, assuming that they took the weight on an average day for the summer months and recorded the weights for which payment should be made, the returns claimed were over three times as large as they should be. As a matter of fact, they were some five or six times as large.

I do not know what the Postmaster General is going to do about this matter. The committee thought that $70,000 was all that should be appropriated for this service, but after some time they decided that they would make it $300,000 for the purpose of establishing certain definite routes, and having the accounts so kept that there would be a return made at the end of this fiscal year which would give some basis for future action—either a discontinuance of the whole service or perhaps a continuance or an extension.

But, as I have said, the House wished to appropriate a million dollars for this purpose, and it was necessary for the committee to devote a great deal of time to get the appropriation down to an amount which seemed to be within reason.

If the Postmaster General did what I conceive to be his duty in this matter, somebody's head would come off. I do not know whether it would be his assistant or whether it would be some of the employees who had padded the returns so as to give an improper return. While there was not graft connected with it, it seemed to be a propaganda which would have resulted in the wasteful expenditure of Government money.

There is one other matter to which I wish to refer, Mr. President, and that is for the moment a dead issue. I refer to the pneumatic tubes. The Senate committee put into the bill a proposition which was accepted by the Senate, that the machinery connected with the pneumatic tubes should remain in the post office for the ensuing year. The reason for that provision was that it is believed by very many that the pneumatic tubes will be used again in the near future. The Postmaster General has recently been making some investigations in New York, and as a result has recommended a new tunnel connecting the Grand Central and the Pennsylvania Railroad stations. The reasons given for the construction of this tunnel are almost identical with the reasons which have been assigned in the past for the continuance of the tube service.

The tube service was intended to expedite first-class mail; the tunnel service which is now proposed is intended to expedite all mail and for the purpose of taking the traffic off the streets because of the congestion that exists in that section of New York.

If the carrying of mail by automobiles during the past year had been as effective as has been claimed, which would be producing an expedition of the mail at a reduced cost, no one would make any complaint or desire a change; but, as a matter of fact, by actual tests made, the mails have been delayed in New York practically in every test made more than 15 minutes, and from that up to two hours.

Moreover, the cost of the automobile service has already reached a point twice as great as was the cost of the tube service. I have not the slightest doubt, expressing this opinion as one who has made a careful investigation of that service, that Congress will later unanimously restore that service; and yet last year we practically confiscated what had cost the owners of that service $7,000,000, by throwing it out of commission; and now demand is made that the powerful machinery which is in the basement of the post offices, and which can only be removed at a great expense from places which are of practically no value to any one than for any other reason than the possibility of furnishing storage space, it seems to me worse than the Bolshevist movement in Russia. There they have confiscated, it is true, but I do not know that after confiscating a man's property they have attempted to put him to additional expense to remove it, assuming, I presume, that they have taken all he has. In this case, however, the removal of the machinery from the basements of the post offices can not be of any material benefit to anyone. It would cost its owners a great many tens of thousands of dollars to do this; and if the pneumatic service is later restored it will cost a great many hundreds of thousands of dollars to restore it.

I mention this not because I expect that any action is going to be taken relative to the tubes at this time, but that it is a rank imposition on those who have been connected with the tube service and those who have furnished that service, at the request of the Government in practically every instance. Now, the property has been confiscated and the owners are being put to the inconvenience and expense of removing something which is not in the way. It is a kind of governmental persecution which brings the Government into disfavor and prevents those who would ordinarily invest their money in things which the Government needs, which would be beneficial to the Government service everywhere, from doing so. Because they do not know whether a change in the administration will not result in some action which will impair or destroy their property.

Mr. President, there are many other matters which I might take up relative to this service, but I have no desire to detain the Senate, for I know that no action can be taken at this session of Congress to right what I think are the wrongs which I have instanced or to change the conditions so that we may get as good a service as we had three or four years ago.

As I said in the beginning, I am opposed to some things which are in the bill, but being satisfied that the conferees have done the best they could to give the Senate a satisfactory bill I shall support the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14516) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. FRANCE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Henderson	Martin, Va.	Smoot
Bankhead	Johnson, Cal.	Nelson	Sterling
Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Sutherland
Brandegee	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Swanson
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Nugent	Thomas
Colt	Kenyon	Overman	Thompson
Cummins	King	Owen	Townsend
Curtis	Kirby	Page	Trammell
Dillingham	Knox	Pomerene	Underwood
Fletcher	La Follette	Ransdell	Vardaman
France	Lenroot	Reed	Walsh
Frelinghuysen	Lewis	Saulsbury	Warren
Gay	Lodge	Shafroth	Watson
Gore	McKellar	Sheppard	Weeks
Gronna	McNary	Simmons	Williams
Harding	Martin, Ky.	Smith, S. C.	Wolcott

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-four Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14516) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I make the usual request for unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from North Carolina to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator.

PAY OF ARMY CHIEF NURSES.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 522, being Senate bill 4892. In calling the calendar yesterday the Senate passed over that bill, which is designed to correct an inadvertence in the Army appropriation bill of last year, whereby the salary of chief nurses was reduced $10 per month. It was not the intention to make that reduction, and the Surgeon General of the Army says it very much impairs the service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4892) to amend section 4 of chapter 5 of an act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, approved July 9, 1918, and to make said amendment retroactive, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4 of chapter 5 of an act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, approved July 9, 1918, be, and the same is hereby, amended, to be effective as of and from July 9, 1918, by changing the clause "chief nurses, $120 in addition to the pay of a nurse" to "chief nurses, $360 in addition to the pay of a nurse."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN subsequently said: Mr. President, this morning I asked the Senate to consider Calendar No. 522, being Senate bill 4892. Unanimous consent was granted, and the bill was passed. Inadvertently I took Calendar No. 522 instead of Calendar No. 580, which is a House bill on the same subject and exactly identical in language. I ask that the votes by which Senate bill 4892 was ordered engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed may be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that Senate bill 4892 be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I now ask unanimous consent that Calendar No. 580, which, as I have said, is exactly the same as Senate bill 4892, be considered at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 13035) to amend section 4 of chapter 5 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918, and to make said amendment retroactive.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTESTING AND CANCELLATION OF HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent, with the permission of the Senator from North Carolina, for the present consideration of Calendar No. 657, being House bill 9897. It is a local measure, and I think it will require but a minute to pass it.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator thinks that it will not lead to debate?

Mr. GORE. I do not think it will. If it does, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. OVERMAN. Very well, I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 657, House bill 9897?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9897) to authorize the contesting and cancellation of certain homestead entries, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands, with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, after the word "contest," to strike out "at any time after 60 days from the date of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the homestead entries made for pasture and wood reserve lands in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Reservations, in the State of Oklahoma, opened to settlement and entry upon sealed bids, as authorized by the act of June 5, 1906 (34 Stats. L., p. 213), be, and the same are hereby, made subject to contest, upon charges alleging that the entryman never established residence upon the land or that having established such residence he failed to maintain the same or to improve and cultivate the land in accordance with law; and upon proof sustaining such charges, submitted in accordance with the rules of practice, the entries will be canceled and the money paid by the entrymen in default will be forfeited: Provided, That any person who has been residing upon the land for at least two years prior to the cancellation of such entry, and if there be no such settler, then the successful contestant, shall, if qualified to make a homestead entry, have a preference right for a period of 60 days from notice, to make a homestead entry for the land, paying therefor the price bid by the original entryman, or a price to be fixed by appraisement upon the applicant's request, the improvements made by such settler not to be taken into consideration in making such appraisement: Provided further, That should there be two settlers on a tract, the land will be partitioned to them upon mutual agreement, or will be sold to the settler submitting the highest bid at a public offering: And provided further, That payment for the land shall be made in four equal installments, one installment at the date of entry, and the other installments in one, two, and three years thereafter: And provided further, That failure to comply with the homestead law or to make the annual payment when due in the case of any entry under this act shall be a sufficient cause for the cancellation of the entry and the forfeiture of the money paid: And provided further, That any vacant lands in the wood and pasture reserves in said Indian reservations, opened to entry under said act of June 5, 1906, for which no preference right of entry exists, as herein provided, or under the act of June 28, 1906 (34 Stats. L., p. 550), shall be subject to sale at public auction to the highest bidder under rules and regulations to be provided by the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That the moneys received from the sale of the lands under this act shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, shall draw interest, and be administered in accordance with the provisions of section 2 of said act of June 5, 1906.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

ARLINGTON MEMORIAL AMPHITHEATER.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from North Carolina to yield to me that I may request consideration for Senate bill 5556, Calendar No. 649. If there be any objection, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. OVERMAN. I dislike to decline to yield to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will state that the bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on the Library, and is designed to create a commission to act in conjunction with the Commission of Fine Arts in connection with inscriptions, tablets, busts, and other memorials to be erected in the new Arlington Memorial Amphitheater.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi, and then I will yield to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON], but I can not yield further after that. I dislike to appear to be discourteous, but I have already yielded to two Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 5556. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5556) to provide for the erection of memorials and the entombment of bodies in the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater in Arlington National Cemetery, Va., which had been reported from the Committee on the Library, with an amendment, in section 1, page 1, line 6, after the word "Monday," to strike out "on" and insert "in," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created, to be composed of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, which shall submit annually to the President, who shall transmit the same to Congress by the first Monday in December, recommendations as to what, if any, inscriptions, tablets, busts, or other memorials shall be erected, and what, if any, bodies of deceased members of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps shall be entombed during the next ensuing year within the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater, in the Arlington National Cemetery, Va.: Provided, That no memorial shall be placed and no body shall be interred in the grounds about the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater within a distance of 250 feet from the said memorial.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War shall be the chairman of said commission and the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia shall be its executive and disbursing officer. The commission shall keep full and accurate records of all its proceedings and transactions in regard to proposed memorials submitted for its consideration, and is authorized to employ such assistance as may be necessary to enable it to discharge properly the duties imposed upon it.

"SEC. 3. That no inscription, tablet, bust, or other memorial shall be erected nor shall any body be entombed within the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater unless specifically authorized in each case by act of the Congress. Applications for such authority shall be submitted in all cases through the commission created by this act.

SEC. 4. That no inscription, tablet, bust, or other memorial as herein provided for shall be erected to commemorate any person who shall not have rendered conspicuously distinguished service in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, nor shall the body of any such person be entombed in the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater; nor shall any such memorial be erected or any body be entombed therein within 10 years after the death of the person so to be commemorated unless specifically otherwise provided by act of Congress in individual cases.

SEC. 5. That the character, design, and location of any such inscriptions, tablets, busts, or other memorials when authorized as herein provided shall be subject to the approval of the commission herein created, which shall in each case obtain the advice of the Commission of Fine Arts.

SEC. 6. That the commission herein created is authorized to expend the sum of $3,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, to defray its expenses during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

SEC. 7. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PREVENTION OF VICE ON THE CANAL ZONE.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from North Carolina to yield to me for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. OVERMAN. I will yield to the Senator from Kansas, but after that I must decline to yield further.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 614, being Senate bill 5224. It is an important bill and has been recommended by the War Department; in fact, it was drawn by the War Department on the recommendation of the commanding general of the Canal Zone. The bill was introduced by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, who asked me to call it up for consideration at the first opportunity. I have tried to get unanimous consent to take up the bill several times but failed. The bill is highly important for the proper government of the Canal Zone, so valuable to the protection of the canal, which has contributed so much to the winning of the war.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 5224. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 5224) to prohibit intoxicating liquors and prostitution within the Canal Zone, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 8, after the word "pharmaceutical," to insert "industrial," so as to make the section read:

That it shall be unlawful to import or introduce into the Canal Zone, or to manufacture, sell, give away, dispose of, transport, or have in one's possession or under one's control within the Canal Zone, any alcoholic, fermented, brewed, distilled, vinous, malt, or spirituous liquors, except for sacramental, scientific, pharmaceutical, industrial, or medicinal purposes under regulations to be made by the President, and any such liquors within the Canal Zone in violation hereof shall be forfeited to the United States and seized: Provided, That this section shall not apply to transportation of liquors to points without the Canal Zone by common carriers or by vessels on ocean voyages.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 3, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person, firm, company, or corporation, its officers, employees, or agents, to import or introduce into, transport through or into, sell, manufacture, dispose of, give away, or have in his or its possession or under his or its control within the Canal Zone, except for scientific, pharmaceutical, or medicinal purposes, any opium or cocaine, or any salt, derivative, or preparation of opium or cocaine, or any other habit-forming drug: Provided, That this section shall not apply to transportation of cocaine to points without the Canal Zone by common carriers or by vessels on ocean voyages.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 15, to change the number of section 2 to section 3; on page 3, line 4, to change the number of section 3 to section 4; and on the same page, line 8, to change the number of section 4 to section 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask unanimous consent to have made part of the record a letter from the commanding general of the Canal Zone and also a statement of Maj. Wells, judge advocate general, setting forth the conditions requiring the legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

HEADQUARTERS PANAMA CANAL DEPARTMENT,
Ancon, Canal Zone, January 10, 1919.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I understand that a bill has been prepared and presented to Congress for passage embodying the provisions of my General Order No. 2, a copy of which is attached hereto, making the Canal Zone bone dry as to liquor, cocaine, and prostitution. My order is only effective during the present war with Germany and as soon as peace is declared will automatically become inoperative, and I will be powerless to prevent the return of the vice and evil that infected the zone previous to the issuance of my order, and the only salvation is for the immediate passage by Congress of this bill, which, to have the desired effect, should become operative not later than March 1, 1919.

This bill should include a provision prohibiting the use of the canal and the Panama Railway for the transportation of intoxicating liquor and other prohibited articles to and from the cities of Panama and Colon, as this will be a great blow to the liquor traffic of these two cities, which is the cause of all the vice in the Canal Zone.

I urge upon you the necessity of this law for the well-being of the soldiers and sailors stationed on the Canal Zone and the civilian population thereof, and request that you take this matter up with the committee to whom it is referred with the view of securing its immediate passage.

This letter is addressed to you because of your recent visit to the Canal Zone and your personal acquaintance with conditions on the zone and the results of the order and the necessity for such a law, and I trust that you will do all in your power to urge its importanee upon Congress and to secure its early passage.

With best regards, I am,

Very sincerely, yours,

R. M. BLATCHFORD.

Hon. WILLIAM H. THOMPSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

VICE AND EVIL IN REPUBLIC OF PANAMA.

THE REASONS FOR THE ISSUANCE OF THE GENERAL'S ORDER AND ITS RESULTS, WHICH WILL BE AT AN END WHEN THE TREATY OF PEACE IS SIGNED, WITHOUT LEGISLATION TO ENACT INTO LAW FOR PEACE TIMES THE PROVISIONS OF THE GENERAL'S ORDER, WHICH IS ONLY EFFECTIVE DURING THE WAR.

Vice conditions in the cities of Panama and Colon leading up to the issuance of the decree of the commanding officer of the United States troops stationed in the Canal Zone prohibiting intoxicating liquor and prostitution on the Canal Zone, and the results therefrom:

Under date of June 15, 1917, a petition was presented to the President of the United States signed by Mr. James Hayter, agent of the American Bible Society and chairman of the antiliquor committee; Mr. T. S. Booz, general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. of the Canal Zone and secretary of clubs and playgrounds of the Panama Canal; Rev. Sidney S. Conger, pastor of the Union Church of Balboa; and Mr. W. H. Evans, chairman of the regional committee on cooperation of the Isthmus of Panama. In this petition the following language is used:

"The efficiency of the military and naval forces of the United States stationed on the Canal Zone is genuinely impaired by the ready access of these forces to the saloons and houses of prostitution in the cities of Colon and Panama. In support of this statement we cite these facts: A very considerable number of soldiers may nightly be seen drunk in the streets of Colon and Panama and on the highways between the various military posts and these cities * * *. In Colon, with a population of about 20,000 persons, there are approximately 400 licensed saloons and 720 licensed prostitutes. It is conservative to estimate the number of those practicing without license at 300. This would indicate one prostitute for every 20 persons of all ages and sexes in Colon. Unprejudiced observers regard the trade in liquor and social vice as the principal local business of the city."

Under date of September 12, 1917, Lieut. Col. C. B. Humphrey, Fifth Infantry, commanding officer, camp at Empire, Canal Zone, wrote a letter to the department commander, calling attention to the conditions of vice in the city of Panama. I quote the following from his letter:

"As a result of a plan made by three enlisted men to find out how many women of easy virtue could be found on the main street—Calle Central—leading from Santa Ana Plaza to the Panama Railroad station, only three women were encountered who declined, and one of these gave as a reason that her husband was in the house and she could not at that time * * *. Occupants of the Coco Grove district are reported to be able to get a certificate of health—no venereal disease—from Panama native doctors without being subjected to an inspection for 1 peso (50 cents in gold)."

Under date of October 17, 1917, Mr. C. A. Howes, a visitor in Panama City, wrote a letter to the Secretary of War, quoting from a letter to his son, who is in the service and stationed in the United States, in which he used the following language:

"This town is full of soldiers, and a finer looking lot of men I have never seen in my life. I hope, though, the conditions surrounding the camps where you are stationed are not as bad as they are here. The Isthmus of Panama is certainly a disgrace. For our Government to take decent boys out of decent homes and surround them with all the vileness that exists here is unfair to fathers and mothers that have given their boys to the service of their country. I can only hope that if you should have the misfortune to be sent here, you will keep in your camp, away from the drunkenness, filth, and beastliness prevailing both in Panama and Colon, which is ruining mentally, morally, and physically so many fine American boys who are forced into temptation by their Government, whose duty it is to protect them. You will probably soon be going to France, and I shall constantly worry about you. Yet after seeing Panama and Colon, I should be more worried if you were here. I can imagine few fathers, knowing the conditions here, who would not prefer to have their sons take the chances of the trenches and battle field of Europe than to be exposed to all the rottenness that they can hardly avoid in Panama and Colon."

Under date of July 24, 1917, Col. Herbert A. White, General Staff (then lieutenant colonel, judge advocate), at the direction of the department commander submitted a memorandum on the question of vice and evil in the cities of Panama and Colon. Col. White was on the Canal Zone for some three years, made a careful study of the situation, and was very familiar with conditions in the terminal cities. In his memorandum Col. White admits that the remarks in the petition referred to above (par. 1) are substantially true, and states that he is convinced that drastic measures must be taken. I quote from his memorandum as follows:

"The main reason of the danger to our soldiers is, of course, the absence of clean amusements in Panama and Colon. There are no clean amusements in either of these cities except a few moving-picture places and one or two cabarets. But the men have a surfeit of moving pictures at their own posts and the cabarets referred to charge prices that are prohibitive as far as the enlisted men are concerned. There are no other places in which a man can spend either his time or money in a manner calculated to increase his self-respect. * * * After the riot of February 14, 1915, which was but a continuation of like offenses of previous years, the commanding general, Brig. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards, and the governor of the canal, Col. George W. Goethals, both recommended that the police power of the two terminal cities, Panama and Colon, be taken over by the United States Government in accordance with article 7 of the treaty of 1904, above referred to. Had this been done the police work in the two cities would have been much better performed, and, as reasonable measures of police authority, restrictions could have been placed upon the rum joints, saloons, and brothels which exist in the two unfortunate cities. However, these recommendations were not acted upon, and consequently the provost guards, with their limited powers, came as a necessary substitute. * * * I see no help for these conditions until the United States takes over the police and sanitation of the terminal cities. With the close of the present war it is to be expected that the traffic through the canal will be extensive. The terminal cities will then be filled with sailors of all the nations of the world. The result will be, unless steps are taken to prevent it, that these cities will become the same as Port Said on the Suez Canal. I do not believe that the Republic of Panama has the force to combat these evil influences. If we better them it can only be done by the strong hand of the United States."

On June 21, 1918, there were 406 registered prostitutes in the city of Panama, 376 of which were infected with either syphilis or gonorrhea, or both. A subsequent examination shows that a much larger percentage of the clandestine women were infected.

On November 21, 1918, there were 511 known prostitutes in the city of Panama, of which 432 had been in the hospital since July 1, 1918, suffering from either syphilis or gonorrhea, or both; of the remaining 79, 59 of them were suffering from the same disease, leaving 20 prostitutes out of the total number of 511 not diseased. Ninety-six per cent of the total number were suffering from syphilis or gonorrhea, or both.

As regards Colon, the records show that on June 21, 1918, there were 456 registered prostitutes, and of this number 436 were infected with either syphilis or gonorrhea, or both.

Number of venereal cases (new admissions) among the United States troops in this department since 1912.

Year.	Number of cases.	Strength of command.
1912	52	773
1913	136	797
1914	273	2,076
1915	783	5,903
1916	812	7,023
1917	986	9,786

Number of new admissions for venereal disease, by month, for first half of 1918.

[Strength of command, 11,142.]

Months:
January	79
February	91
March	87
April	74
May	69
June	51
Total	451

Number of new admissions for venereal disease, by month, for last part of 1918, after issuance of general's order.

Months:
July	15
August	7
September	2
October	2
November	4
December	5
Total	35

This is a reduction in the number of cases of venereal disease in this department for the last six months, under the general's order, of 416 cases over the first six months of the year, or a decrease of 92 per cent.

The number of courts-martial cases in this department for the first six months of 1918 was 1,650. For the last six months of 1918, under the general's order, the number was 906, being a reduction of 644 cases for the same number of months with the same strength of command, or a reduction of 45 per cent.

The following is a report of the department surgeon for the year 1918 on cases of alcoholism, the first six months being before the issuance of the order and the last six months being under the order:

	First 6 months.	Second 6 months.
Fort Amador	7	1
Corozal	8	3
Quarry Heights	1	.....
Camp at Gatun	2	1
Camp Gaillard	2	.....
Camp at Empire	5	.....
Camp E. S. Otis	2	.....
Fort De Lesseps	1	.....
Fort Sherman	.....	3
Fort Randolph [1]	1	.....
Total	29	8

[1] Also France field.

The above figures are taken from statistics on file in my office and are correct, and need no comment either as to the necessity for or the beneficial effects of the orders of the department commander, and the results upon the personnel of this command justify their issuance a thousand times; and, while figures are lacking, the result upon the civilian population of the Canal Zone are no doubt equally as great. That a law embodying the provisions of the general's order be enacted so as to make the results permanent, goes without saying and needs no argument.

IRA K. WELLS,
Major, Judge Advocate General's Department,
Department Judge Advocate.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, no better example could possibly be given of the practical difference between an open saloon and an absolutely "bone-dry" condition, as is clearly demonstrated by a comparison of the conditions as they existed during the six months prior to the issuance of the "bone-dry" order and the six months immediately following. There can be no stronger prohibition argument made than is shown by this practical illustration from actual experience. No better law could be enacted for the better government of the Canal Zone, and the general rendered a great service to his country in issuing the order.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I now ask that the Senate resume the consideration of the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill and that the reading of the amendments be proceeded with.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a moment?

Mr. OVERMAN. Does the Senator desire to secure consideration of a bill?

Mr. HARDING. I desire to have considered a bill. I do not believe it will take a minute.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will say to the Senator that I would yield to him as quickly as I would to anyone, as the Senator knows, but I gave notice that I would not yield further. There have been a half dozen Senators to see me to get me to yield, but I declined to do so, and I think I shall have to ask that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the pending bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, on line 5, page 2, I move to strike out——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, unanimous consent was given that the committee amendments should be considered first.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the chairman of the committee will consent to this amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will consent to it; I think it is all right, but I do not think it ought to be presented at this time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Salaries of ambassadors and ministers," on page 2, after line 8, to insert:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Czecho-Slovakia and Poland, at the rate of $12,000 per annum each from March 1, 1919, to June 30, 1920, both dates inclusive, $32,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, right after that committee amendment provision will have to be made also for Serbia and Bulgaria; and I offer, on behalf of the committee, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 12, it is proposed to insert the following:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Bulgaria and Serbia, at the rate of $10,000 per annum each, from March 1 to June 30, 1919, both dates inclusive, $6,666.68.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, is not the minister to Bulgaria included in the next section, on line 14?

Mr. OVERMAN. This amendment is just to provide for the remainder of the present fiscal year.

Mr. KENYON. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 26, after the word "Total," to strike out "$554,500" and insert "$586,500," so as to make the clause read:

Total, $586,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Salaries of secretaries in the Diplomatic Service," on page 3, line 9, after the date "1916," to strike out "$269,125" and insert "$289,458.33, of which sum $5,083.33 shall be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

For secretaries in the Diplomatic Service, as provided in the act of February 5, 1915, entitled "An act for the improvement of the foreign service," as amended by the act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, approved July 1, 1916, $289,458.33, of which sum $5,083.33 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 21, after the word "Total," to strike out "$285,925" and insert "$306,258.33," so as to make the clause read:

Total, $306,258.33.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Contingent expenses, foreign missions," on page 7, line 5, after the word "authorized," to strike out "$1,300,000" and insert "$1,310,000, of which sum $10,000 shall be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the President to provide, at the public expense, all such stationery, blanks, records, and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs, as he shall think necessary for the several embassies and legations in the transaction of their business, and also for rent, repairs, postage, telegrams, furniture, typewriters, including exchange of same, messenger service, compensation of kavasses, guards, dragomans, and porters, including compensation of interpreters, and the compensation of dispatch agents at London, New York, San Francisco, and New Orleans, and for traveling and miscellaneous expenses of embassies and legations, and for printing in the Department of State, and for loss on bills of exchange to and from embassies and legations, and payment in advance of subscriptions for newspapers (foreign and domestic) under this appropriation is hereby authorized, $1,310,000, of which sum $10,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service," on page 8, line 22, before the word "together," to strike out "$700,000" and insert "$600,000," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the President to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service and to extend the commercial and other interests of the United States and to meet the necessary expenses attendant upon the execution of the neutrality act, to be expended pursuant to the requirement of section 291 of the Revised Statutes, $600,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation made for this object for the fiscal year 1919, which is hereby reappropriated and made available for this purpose.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee the reason for this reduction.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, last year the appropriation was $700,000; and the committee thought, the war being practically over, that they would not require so much money this year, and they just cut it down to $600,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. While other departments have been able to reduce their expenses with the advent or prospect of peace, as I understand, the probability is that the State Department will really require more money instead of less.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think they will on this item. They will in some cases. In fact, we have given more clerks to the State Department than we have to any other department, because they will need more in the readjustment of things; but on this particular item I do not see how they will need as much money as they did before, because it is only to meet emergencies. We have given them $600,000, and if they need any more they can get a deficiency.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We feel that the emergency is continuing; in fact, it is being aggravated. Members of the Committee on Foreign Relations have found, by experience and contact, that the State Department is behind with its work and that many of its officials are overworked at the present time.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will read the last few lines, he will see that they did not spend the money we gave them last year.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, there is no unexpended balance. The department is spending this year $1,187,720. It is not keeping its work up to date. We have not resumed relations with the central powers or any of these new States to which we are very properly appointing ministers.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator has not read the amendment or he would see that the amendment itself says that there is an unexpended balance.

Mr. LODGE. Not only is there not an unexpended balance but we had to appropriate money for a deficit last year.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think so. The entire appropriation was not made in this bill, but there was an unexpended balance in the Treasury, and we tried to cut it down to the amount they actually spent last year and needed.

Mr. LODGE. Last year they spent, as I have said, $1,187,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not under this act.

Mr. LODGE. The department asked for $1,577,140, and it has been granted in the two bills—the legislative bill and this bill—$833,960, which is $743,000 less than it asked for.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is under another bill entirely. That was under the legislative bill, as the Senator has read, and we allowed them $800,000 there.

Mr. LODGE. That combines the legislative bill and these figures here.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me ask the Senator if he will accept an amendment to this paragraph in these words:

Provided, That, in his discretion, the President may employ part of this fund for payment of personal services in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, notwithstanding the provisions of any other law.

I may say that the Secretary of State has written me a very urgent letter on that subject, and says it will be a very serious matter unless this latitude is allowed to the State Department. I am not so certain about the amount of money that may be required. It may be that a deficiency appropriation made up the original amount, and that there is some unexpended balance in that. I do not know; but I do know, and every member of the committee knows, that the State Department is in a deplorable condition. It is behind with its work, and there is no department of the Government where men are working such long hours and straining every effort as they are in the State Department.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I suppose we can not take up that proviso at this stage, because we are limited at present to committee amendments.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Possibly not.

Mr. LODGE. But I agree with the Senator from Nebraska that that absolutely must go in.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But if the chairman would accept it, we can let this $700,000 go at $600,000, as he has it here, and just add this to the paragraph as a settlement of it. I hope the chairman of the committee can see his way clear to do that.

Mr. OVERMAN. There was quite a fight in the committee on this very amendment. I can not accept it. The estimate here was for $700,000. This refers especially to the intelligence department. Having an unexpended balance, we allowed them about what they had last year. I know they are very anxious to have this proviso, and I voted for it in the committee, but the committee voted me down, and, of course, I am going to stand by the committee and can not accept it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator let us take a vote on it at this time?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; not now, because unanimous consent has been given to consider committee amendments first.

Mr. LODGE. We can take up this matter when we reach other amendments, then, because that is very important.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the committee amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then I should like to have the committee amendment put to a vote. I think we ought to allow the bill to stand as it came from the House.

Mr. LODGE. It ought not to be cut down.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will stand with the committee. Since this bill has passed there has been no criticism on the part of the department of what we have done. They do not need more than $600,000, and they ought not to have it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say that out of the Senator's committee the legislative bill came into the Senate with an appropriation of $200,000 for extra work in the department, whereas the existing appropriation is $425,000. That was a radical reduction, and if this reduction is made here of another $100,000 I do not know to what extent the department is going to be crippled. It seems to me unwise to compel a department to run into deficiency payments, and to cause a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why does the Senator discuss an appropriation bill that has already passed the Senate and is now in conference? Let us get on this bill. That appropriation was made in another bill entirely. Let us get on this bill. Here the State Department asked for $700,000. We always find out how much money they have on hand and how much money was spent last year. They certainly do not need any more money than they had last year, and, in fact, not as much as they had last year. Therefore, we cut them down $100,000 in the interest of economy. That is all that is before the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am only calling attention to the fact that this $100,000 is taken off after you have already taken off $225,000 from the same service; and, unlike other departments, the State Department is compelled to face increased labors with the advent or prospect of peace.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, in the legislative bill we gave them $200,000 for extra employees.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; but last year they had $425,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. They did not ask for any more. We gave them about what they asked.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But they did not expect to have this cut, and they did not expect to be deprived of the privilege of using this proviso.

Mr. OVERMAN. We have given them in the legislative bill a great number of extra clerks; we have given them here $200,000, and now the Senator wants to give them some more money for the employment of extra clerks, after they have been given appropriations for extra clerks in the legislative bill, and appropriations in this bill of over $200,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I realize that they have extra clerks; but the appropriation under which the State Department is operating this year is $425,000. The Senator has cut it to $200,000 in the other bill, and he now lops off another $100,000 here, and says that they can come in with a request for a deficiency appropriation; but we should not do those things. We should provide sufficient money. The State Department has to operate, and its operations are more delicate and more important and its labors are greater at the present time than they were acually during the war.

Mr. OVERMAN. We have treated this department more liberally than any other department of the Government, on account of the fact that they have more work to do in time of peace than they would have in time of war. We recognized that fact, and allowed them a number of extra clerks, besides this $200,000. This is for work here in Washington, in the intelligence department. They do not need as much in this item as they had before.

Mr. LODGE. This department spends less than any other department.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let us vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" appear to have it. The "noes" have it, and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to have the vote taken again on that amendment. I do not think the question was generally understood, and in fact I did not understand it myself. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment striking out "$700,000" and inserting "$600,000." One Senator has just told me he did not understand it. Whatever the Senate wants to do is agreeable to me; but I think the committee ought to be sustained, especially on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Chair will again put the question. The question is, Shall the amendment proposed by the committee be agreed to?

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico," on page 10, line 12, after the word "Mexico," to strike out "$62,700" and insert "$20,000," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the commission to continue its work under the treaties of 1884, 1889, 1905, and 1906 between the United States and Mexico, $20,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of combating the action of the committee. Indeed, I want to congratulate the committee upon effecting a reduction in a number of items. It is so unique to find the Senate Appropriations Committee reducing anything that I feel like extending congratulations to every member of the committee.

What I rose for, however, was to inquire whether or not, in the consideration of this bill, the question of the claims of American citizens for damages which they have sustained at the hands of Mexican nationals or the Mexican Government received any consideration; whether there was any suggestion as to the Government taking steps to ascertain the damages which have been done to American citizens in the Republic of Mexico and devising some ways and means by which compensation could be received for the damages and injuries sustained?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, we did not consider that in this bill. It may be considered in connection with the deficiency bill or the sundry civil bill; but, as the Senator knows, this is the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, and the particular item under discussion is the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico. This commission deals only with boundary relations between the two countries. We did not take up the question of claims. There is a little item here about claims between Great Britain and this country, but nothing was said about these Mexican claims by the State Department, nor in any amendment introduced by any Senator. Therefore we did not consider it. I will say to the Senator that if any amendment on the subject had been introduced, or if we had heard anything from the department about it, we would have been glad to consider it; but we did not consider it for that reason.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, some time ago I introduced a resolution calling upon the State Department to furnish a full and complete statement of the claims which had been filed by American citizens growing out of damages sustained by them at the hands of the Mexican people or at the hands of the Mexican Government. It was my purpose to offer a resolution before this Congress adjourns asking for the creation of a commission, or some proper instrumentality or agency of the Government, to take up the question of these claims of American citizens and seek to secure reparation for the damages they have sustained. I had hoped that this matter might have received consideration before all of the appropriation bills were reported to the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say to the Senator that the resolution which he introduced, and which was reported to the Senate by the committee, was reported after consultation with the Secretary of State. In that consultation it was revealed to the committee that the department was utterly incapable of even compiling the Mexican claims at this time because of lack of help; and it was that very revelation which I had in mind when I sought to equip the department better. It is utterly out of the question to call upon the State Department at this time to take up the Mexican claims unless they are supplied with the help they must have.

Mr. OVERMAN. We had that argument made before us, and gave them clerks.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But you cut them down as compared with last year. I want to repeat you have in these two bills cut down the appropriations for additional help for the State Department from $425,000 to $200,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator has not read the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have read the bill, and I have had correspondence with the Secretary on the subject.

Mr. OVERMAN. The sums the Senator is talking about are lump sums. If he had looked at the clerks granted in the legislative bill, which has already passed the Senate, he would have found that we have given some 50 or 60 additional clerks.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I repeat what I say; you have provided less money for the State Department this year than you provided last year, and they were short last year.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am very sure I am not mistaken.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not care to enter upon a discussion as to whether or not sufficient appropriation is carried in this bill for the clerical help of the State Department. The point I want to emphasize is that for years American citizens have been treated with indignity by the Mexican people and that they have sustained wrongs and injuries which demand reparation. I sincerely hope that some steps will be taken before this Congress adjourns that will compel the Mexican Government to take steps looking to compensation for the injuries which Americans have sustained in the Republic of Mexico.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska has stated that we were giving less this year than we did last year for the temporary employees under the Department of State. The House gave a smaller amount. The House provided $125,000. The estimate this year was for $500,000. As the legislative bill passed the Senate, it provided the same amount that was provided last year—namely, $200,000. That bill is now in conference, I will say to the Senator, and I have not any doubt but that the $200,000 already agreed to will be agreed to by the conferees. Then I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that we also gave them 10 special employees at $3.500 each, and other employees that were asked for. It is true that we did not give them the $500,000 lump-sum appropriation estimated for; but we gave them every cent they had last year, and a great many additional clerks and employees. As I say, we gave them 10 at salaries of $3,500 each.

Mr. OVERMAN. We gave them all the clerks they ought to have, and, as the Senator says, we gave them 10 additional clerks at $3,500 apiece—valuable men, lawyers, to attend to these things, I suppose; that is probably what they want with them—so I do not think there ought to be any complaint on that point.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, I want to read something from the Secretary of State on this subject. He ought to be dependable:

> The legislative bill has not made adequate provision for the State Department's work. The department is spending $1,187,720 a year at present and is not keeping its work up to date, and has not resumed relations with the central powers or with the newly created States.

Now, I should like to have the Senator listen to these figures:

> It has asked for $1,577,140. It has been granted $833,000, which is $743,000 less than the estimates.

It may be that the Senator's plan of letting deficiencies come in here will be better; but I think, in this crisis of the world, our State Department ought not to be crippled, and I think it ought not to be cut down below what it had last year when we all know that it is behind in its work. It is a small amount compared with the appropriations we have given to other departments.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what I stated in relation to the estimates that were submitted to the Appropriations Committee was correct. It is true that there was $300,000 estimated for that the Senate committee did not allow, and it is also true that when an explanation was asked of the heads of the divisions as to where this money was to be spent there was no information granted; the mere statement was made that "We want that amount of money." When there was any information given as to the additional number of clerks that were wanted, in nearly all of the cases they were granted to the State Department.

I wanted to say to the Senator from Nebraska that as far as I am concerned as a member of the Appropriations Committee, we are going to stop these lump-sum appropriations, and this is a good time to begin it right now. The State Department got along all right when we were at war with $200,000. We gave them $200,000 beginning July 1, 1919, and running until June 30, 1920. Not only am I opposed to these lump-sum appropriations for employees of the State Department, but I say now that the time will come when they will be cut out of every department of the Government, and the sooner the better. Every investigation that we have made in relation to the salaries paid to employees of the Government from lump sums has developed the fact that they are out of all reason, taking into consideration the salaries that are paid by statute; and I think a great deal of the wicked waste of the public funds comes through this practice that has grown up, particularly during the war, of appropriating a lump sum and telling the head of a division or a bureau or a department to spend it as he likes.

Mr. OVERMAN. From a statement naming the positions, I have just made a calculation to see how much we have expended for clerical service, and it amounts to over $700,000. That is for clerical help besides this lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to call the attention of the Senators to it. I have a paper here showing all the estimates and the existing law, the number of employees, and what the Senate committee has allowed. I want to say now that if there was not a single dollar given more than what is given by the Senate committee and any kind of care was taken in the handling of the money, there would be not a deficiency but an amount that would be unexpended at the end of the year.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to ask the Senator if he has noticed the number of lump-sum appropriations carried in this bill? There are five or six——

Mr. SMOOT. There are more than that. There are nearly 20 of them.

Mr. CURTIS. I mean very large sums.

Mr. SMOOT. There are 20 large amounts, I will say, in this bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I remind the Senator that, through the report of the committee, Congress took action at one time in regard to lump-sum appropriations requiring that an itemized statement should be made, stating the amount asked for in each case.

Mr. SMOOT. That was the case; and before the war, as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] well knows, and as every member of the committee knows, we had most of the lump-sum appropriations eliminated; but when the war came the departments said, "We do not know what is going to happen; we want enough"; and, knowing that no investigation could be made, a lump sum was given. When one department asked for a million or $500,000,000 and said that it was absolutely necessary in order that the affairs of the Government and the administration of the same should be successfully carried on our practice was to give them just what they asked. So these lump-sum appropriations began, and it has become the practice in all our appropriation bills. That is why we find so many in this bill.

I say now that, beginning with the next session of Congress, every lump-sum appropriation has got to be eliminated from the appropriation bills; and I want to say now that any department or any division or any bureau of the Government that can not give an itemized statement and can not provide for appropriations directly instead of a lump sum, as far as I am concerned, can go without any appropriation until they do make an itemized statement.

The time has come, Mr. President, when we have got to scan our appropriations and cut them down. I recognize that in this bill we hardly had the time to do it after the signing of the armistice, but if we had had the time we would have begun it at this session.

Mr. CURTIS. I am very glad indeed to have the Senator from Utah give the notice he has given on the floor of the Senate. In the Appropriations Committee I have been fighting these lump-sum appropriations, and I want to serve notice with the Senator from Utah that I will join with him and other Senators to strike from the appropriation bills lump sums. I think this notice, given now and going into the RECORD, ought to be a sufficient intimation to the heads of departments that when they make their next estimate they must put in an itemized statement of what they require for their departments.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am glad this matter has been brought up. I am entirely in accord with the proposition of elimination. In fact, we had almost eliminated lump-sum appropriations, but when the war came on, as the Senator from Utah has said, there was uncertainty, and all the members of the Appropriations Committee, as well as all other Members of the Senate and, in fact, all good citizens, had to be sure not to take ground against anything necessary to carry on and successfully win the war. So we gave up fighting these things for the convenience of the departments and allowed them to grow up and accumulate. The time has come to discontinue lump-sum appropriations.

Mr. OVERMAN. As the Senator knows, I have fought these lump-sum appropriations for 10 years.

Mr. WARREN. Yes. I want to say that those Members who served on the committee before the war were, all of them, working for that same end. It is not a new matter. It is simply one of the things left over by the war, and we will have to commence anew with it.

Mr. OVERMAN. When my attention was first called to a lump-sum appropriation I wanted to know how it had been expended. I sent to the department and asked what they did with it, and they sent to me a statement showing what they did with it. The statement showed a lot of employees with big salaries, one of them getting $7,500, another $5,000, another $3,000. We knocked out the whole thing, and the Government has been getting along pretty well since.

Mr. SMOOT. We had in one of the bureaus here men drawing the salaries mentioned by the Senator from North Carolina, and we had actually a publicity man drawing $6,000 a year. At the investigation it developed that there was not a soul who dared come before the committee and defend such action.

Mr. KING. I wish to ask the Senator having the bill in charge a question. I call his attention to the paragraph on page 8, after line 18. Is it intended that any part of the appropriation of $600,000 shall be utilized by the Department of Commerce? Also I desire to ask him what steps, if any, have been taken to prevent a duplication of the activities of the Commerce Department by this department or vice versa? It reads:

To enable the President to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service and to extend the commercial and other interests of the United States.

I was wondering if there would not be a duplication under this lump-sum appropriation of some of the activities of the Department of Commerce, because this provides that a portion of the fund may be used for commercial purposes. As there is no limitation upon the use to which it may be put, it seems to me it would be covering a field that may be occupied by the Department of Commerce.

Mr. LODGE. If I may say a word on that, the State Department was established some time before the Department of Commerce—in fact, it was established at the beginning of the Government—and all the commercial information we had from foreign countries came through the Consular Service. The Department of Commerce was established a few years ago and set up its own machinery of commercial agents, with which the State Department has nothing whatever to do.

The only commercial thing in the State Department is the Consular Service. I do not suppose the Senator means to abolish that to-day. It is through that alone that the consular reports come to the State Department, and they deal with it alone. They transfer from the State Department to the Department of Commerce certain commercial statistics, but there is no duplication by the Department of Commerce in the State Department.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to say to the Senator from Utah that in the examination of Mr. Carr, who is at the head of the Consular Bureau in the State Department, he gave us some information, and I will read one statement he made:

Senator OVERMAN. Do I understand you to say that the Commerce Department took your reports and made their reports from them?

Mr. CARR. Our consular reports under the law are transmitted to the Secretary of Commerce, who by law is required to edit and publish them for the benefit of business men; and the bulk of the reports in the publication known as Commerce Reports is furnished by the consular officers.

I am afraid there is some duplication. Mr. Carr says these consular reports are sent over to the Department of Commerce, and I suppose they are for business men, and the commercial attachés get them from the Department of Commerce.

As the Senator from Massachusetts says, the State Department has had for a hundred years these consular officers. They have sent in most valuable reports from South American countries, and these commercial agents are sent from the other department. I understand the consular agents of the State Department reside in the cities in which they are located. These consular agents, I understand, not only stay at the place where the consular office is located, but they go all over the country and advertise our goods and get in communication with people and see what is needed and make reports, together with the reports of the consular agents of the State Department.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I must say I was against the transfer. We had it all concentrated in the State Department, where it ought to have remained; but they transferred that part of it to these commercial agents, who are entirely a new structure, with which we have nothing to do in this bill. I think one should not attack the Consular Service, which we must have, on the ground that it is a duplication of the work of those commercial agents, who have no consular standing, who have no exequatur, who are not recognized by the Government. You can not use them. They can not exist as consuls under a treaty.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Massachusetts, who is usually so alert, misconceives entirely my position. Instead of abolishing, as his sarcasm would indicate, the Consular Department, I want to strengthen it. I believe that the Department of Commerce has encroached upon the Consular Department, and I would have supported the view which the Senator from Massachusetts indicates that he would take with respect to the functions and activities of these two departments. I recognize the splendid work which has been accomplished by the consular branch of the service, and I would be in favor of strengthening the hands of the consular branch of our Government, but I do know from considerable investigation which I have made that the Department of Commerce is trying to encroach upon the activities of the Consular Department.

Mr. LODGE. I am sure of that. My only difference with the Senator is that I do not think we will reach it by crippling still further the Consular Service.

Mr. KING. The Senator misconceives my position again. I am not in favor of crippling the Consular Service at all.

Mr. LODGE. I would like to see this whole business of commercial agency all brought back and consolidated under the Consular Service, where it belongs.

Mr. KING. I agree most heartily with the Senator. The only purpose of my inquiry was to determine whether the line of demarcation separating the two departments was clearly understood and observed. I believe that the Consular Department is attempting to recognize the limitations which the law imposes upon it, but I am afraid that the other department to which I have referred is transgressing it and encroaching upon the activities and the functions and prerogatives of the Consular Service.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, perhaps this would be a good time to call the attention of the Senate to how the appropriations are growing in the Department of Commerce.

Under the head of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce there has been appropriated for this coming fiscal year for salaries and wages of that bureau alone $220,510. That is for salaries and wages alone. Then, for necessary expenses, including field investigation in the United States and abroad and purchases in connection therewith, we appropriated for the coming year $325,000. Then again, to further promote and develop the commerce of the United States in South and Central America, we appropriated $100,000 more. Then, to further promote and develop the commerce of the United States with the Orient, including the employment of experts and special agents in the District of Columbia, and so forth, in that bureau, we appropriate $100,000 more. Now, for commercial attachés, we appropriate $165,000 more.

So when we add all these together we find that what began in a very small way a year or two ago amounts to an appropriation of nearly $1,000,000. I have not any idea but that there is a duplication in the work. There is no question about it.

Mr. CURTIS. On this point I should like to read an item in the testimony before the committee, because perhaps the Senator would like to comment on it:

Senator OVERMAN. Do I understand you to say that the Commerce Department took your reports and made their reports from them?

Mr. CARR. Our consular reports under the law are transmitted to the Secretary of Commerce, who by law is required to edit and publish them for the benefit of business men, and the bulk of the reports in the publication known as Commerce Reports is furnished by the consular officers.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I said, there are nearly $1,000,000 now expended for this Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, and every year it is growing. To think that with the present appropriation there is no duplication would be folly.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. Do I understand the Senator from Utah to name, among the things provided for in the appropriation for the Department of Commerce, commercial attachés?

Mr. SMOOT. I do. I say there is an appropriation for commercial attachés under the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce traveling all over the world, I was going to say, although it is limited somewhat; and there is an appropriation made this year for commercial attachés of $165,000.

Mr. MOSES. The commercial attachés, as I understand them, and I had some association with them at one time in my public service, are accredited diplomatic agents. They form a part of the secretarial staff of our diplomatic missions abroad. They are a part of the force of the household even of the ambassador or the minister. They exercise their function absolutely in a diplomatic sense. They would have no standing aside from that of any traveling salesmen in the country if it were not that they are under the diplomatic protection of the mission to which they are attached in the country to which they are accredited. They are provided for and appropriated for and paid and directed by a department other than the Department of State. There is bound to be confusion not only in the result but in policy.

Referring to the suggestion made earlier by the Senator from Utah, the colleague of the Senator who has yielded the floor to me, I should like to ask the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] if in the course of his investigations he has found recently that the commercial attachés or commercial agents, or under whatever title they are known, have undertaken to encroach upon the consular duties to the extent of attempting to exercise consular functions?

Mr. KING. Of course, that turns upon what you mean by consular functions; but I am firm in the belief, and my investigations have led me to the conclusion, that many of the commercial attachés take offices with the consular agents of the Government, that they do the same work which the consular agents have done and could do with propriety, and with just as much effectiveness as they themselves are doing, and that they duplicate the work. They have not extended as they ought to have done their activities into fields where there are not consular agents. but they confine their labors and their activities largely to the field in which the consular agent can with propriety perform what might be denominated as commercial work in connection with consular activities.

Mr. MOSES. If the Senator will yield further to me——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. The result of the investigation made by the junior Senator from Utah in recent years confirms that which I observed several years ago—that there is duplication in the foreign work of the Government. There used to be duplication even before the commercial attachés were provided for.

It was frequently found that at some post the chief of the mission might be one who was actively interested in the investigation of commercial relations, and that his activities and functions might impinge upon and in some way possibly interfere with the functions that properly should be undertaken by the consul general; but inasmuch as the consul general and all the consulates were under the jurisdiction of the minister or the ambassador, that did no particular harm, because everything in the commercial line by way of official reports made by the consul or the consul general go through the embassy in some form or other. So the duplication was diminished.

But I have had occasion to observe exactly what the junior Senator from Utah has found, namely, that with three agencies—that is to say, a mission, a legation, or an embassy, and the Consular Service, either a consul general or the consulate, and the commercial attachés—operating in the same field the wires are bound to be crossed and a duplication of work will result, and very often there will be such interference that the progress of foreign trade is absolutely hampered instead of being advanced, as it should be.

So far as the commercial attachés are concerned, regarding whom I particularly sought information when I asked the Senator from Utah to yield to me for a moment, that which we have been saying here is borne out by the testimony of Mr. Carr before the committee. I find in the report, on page 3, Senator OVERMAN said:

> Now tell us what the other fellow does.

I suppose he was referring to this fifth wheel in the diplomatic and consular coach, who is known as a commercial attaché, and Mr. Carr answered:

> The commercial attaché is attached to the embassy or legation and has a diplomatic position which enables him, to a certain extent, to go to the different ministers and have interviews with them and endeavor to find out what their policies are or are going to be, and to keep this Government, through the Secretary of Commerce, informed.

There, Mr. President, we come to the inherent weakness in this policy. The commercial attaché, a member of the staff of the embassy, and because of that fact having the right of audience with the cabinet minister, having the right to go to the foreign office or any other department of the government to which he is accredited, a privilege which is not accorded to consular officers, is enabled, as Mr. Carr has said, to have interviews with ministers and to endeavor to find out what their policies are, what they are going to do, and having made this ascertainment, he does not report as other diplomatic officers to the Secretary of State; he reports to an entirely different Cabinet officer, the Secretary of Commerce; and we have a man exercising diplomatic functions and performing his duties under the sanction of his diplomatic position, and reporting not to his immediate chief but to a coordinate department of the Government.

As the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] observed, if that policy is to be changed, if it is reasonable to discuss that policy in its effect and its result not with reference particularly to the increase in appropriations to which the senior Senator from Utah would perfect and present an amendment to this with reference to its bearing upon the good of the service and the benefit of American commerce, I wish the junior Senator from Utah should perfect and present an amendment to this bill so that we might restore to the State Department the exercise of all the functions which go to the maintenance of our foreign relations.

Mr. SMOOT. The next session of Congress will be a long one, and we will not be in a blockade, as we are at the present time. Legislation then can be given more attention than it is possible to give it at this time.

I do not want Senators to get alarmed when I call attention to the duplication of work under the amendment that we are now considering. I say now there is a duplication of work to a greater extent than is found even between the State Department and the Commerce Department relative to our commercial attachés and the work in foreign countries looking to the commerce of the United States. Expensive as it is it does not compare to some other duplications of work found in other departments of the Government. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] knows where it lies, and if it had not been for the war I think myself before this time it would have been weeded out, and it must be weeded out. Appropriations must not be made for the duplication of work.

But, Mr. President, of late years when there is a department created, immediately the man who stands at the head of the department begins to make it one of the most expensive and largest employers of help of any department in the Government. He is not satisfied to do the work that the department was created for, but he must reach out and ask for appropriations to do work that other departments are doing. He thinks that he can do it a little better, and the other department having more employees in number than he has, he is never satisfied until he gets his department carrying just as large an appropriation as any other department of the Government.

Mr. MOSES. Will the Senator yield again?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. Before the Senator from Utah gets too far away from the particular matter that was under discussion, will he be good enough to state once more the amount of appropriations made for the Department of Commerce for maintenance of commercial attachés?

Mr. SMOOT. For commercial attachés the appropriation carried was $165,000. In connection with that, I wanted to call attention to the further appropriations: First, to promote and develop commerce of the United States with the Orient there is $100,000 appropriated, and then to further promote and develop the commerce of the United States with South and Central America there is an appropriation of $100,000.

Mr. MOSES. Making $365,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, further, for the necessary expenses, including field investigation in the United States and abroad, $325,000.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say that I will join with the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Utah to remedy what I consider an evil, but we can not do it on this bill. This bill must be passed. We can not on this bill combine these two services and work out a perfect system. I agree with the Senator from New Hampshire, but I hope he will let the matter go over until the next session, because we shall have another Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill then, and we will have time to consider it fully.

Mr. SMOOT. In connection with that I will state, so that the Senator from New Hampshire may have all the items of expenditure, that for the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce employees and clerks here in the District we appropriated $220,000.

Mr. MOSES. In other words, the totals here brought forth by the Senator from Utah amount to more money than the Government expenditures for the maintenance of the entire diplomatic establishment under which this subsidiary movement has grown up and under which it exercises the function as brought out by the testimony of Mr. Carr. While I agree with the Senator from North Carolina that between now and Tuesday at noon we probably can not find a remedy to write into the statute, I will say to the Senator that this is the first opportunity that has developed in my brief service here in this Chamber of discussing the question from any standpoint whatever.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is so familiar with this question I hope he will think about it and study it, and help us to work out a solution of it, so that we can make a more perfect system.

Mr. MOSES. I pledge to the Senator from North Carolina my constant cooperation in that direction.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I had no idea of taking so much time of the Senate this afternoon, but I think that the time has been well taken, because I am just as positive as I am that I am standing on the floor of the Senate that there must be a halt called somewhere, and now is a good time to call attention to it and to give notice that hereafter the heads of the departments of the Government must understand when they come to Congress and ask for appropriations they have got to give some reasons why they should be made before they shall be granted.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it is evident that the pending bill is going to take a long time to get through. I desire to present to the Senate the conference report on the river and harbor appropriation bill, and I raise the question of its consideration.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator wish immediately to consider the conference report?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the Senator called my attention to the report, I think, about an hour ago, but I have had no chance at all to examine it. I think it is hardly fair to bring it up and ask that it be passed immediately without that opportunity being given. I rather understood that it would not come up to-day, although the Senator did not say that to me.

Mr. FLETCHER. I spoke to the Senator about it early this morning, and gave him the printed report in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. KENYON. That was about an hour ago.

Mr. FLETCHER. I called the matter to the Senator's attention, as I recall, shortly before 12 o'clock.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will withdraw the report now and present it at some later time, then he can have it considered. I do not ask him to present the report and have it lie on the table, because then it will require a motion to take it up; but if the Senator will ask unanimous consent to withdraw the report, then, when we get through with the pending bill, which I think will be shortly, he can renew his request.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Florida is mistaken about calling my attention to the report before 12 o'clock. I was not in the Chamber at that time; I was attending a Senate committee meeting until 1 o'clock, and it was about an hour ago that the Senator gave me the RECORD to look over the conference report. It may have been an hour and a half ago.

Mr. FLETCHER. It was early this morning, because I came right in——

Mr. KENYON. I was in the Appropriations Committee until nearly 1 o'clock.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator is mistaken about that, because I think I came right in the Chamber from the committee when the roll was called.

Mr. KENYON. I do not wish unduly to delay the report, but I am going to have a chance to examine it. That is all I ask for; and if the Senator insists on considering the report now, he will not make any time. I do not think it is fair treatment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not care to be influenced by any threats. I am not pressing the matter unduly. I sent word awhile ago to the Senator when he was out of the Chamber that I was going to call up the conference report, and I understood that he had no objection. I supposed the Senator had had time to read it.

Mr. KENYON. I have not had a moment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is the Senator willing to take it up this evening? It has been about four hours since I called the Senator's attention to it.

Mr. KENYON. Of course, that is a matter as to which there is a difference of opinion.

Mr. FLETCHER. I shall not press that; but I should like to ask at what time the Senator wants to take the report up? Can he be ready to take it up this afternoon before we adjourn?

Mr. KENYON. I prefer to-morrow morning.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Florida that he take up the conference report at another time; that he wait until to-morrow morning.

Mr. KENYON. I think the Senator from Florida is afraid something is going to happen to this report.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not afraid of anything of that kind; but I want to get it behind me; it is here, it has come over from the House, and it should be acted upon as other business is acted upon.

Mr. KENYON. Does not the Senator think that it is a fair request that the report go over for a time in order to enable us to examine it?

Mr. FLETCHER. The report was presented to the House on Monday and was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It was passed in the House to-day. I do not know what more time is wanted. I want to go on with the business of the Senate in the regular way.

Mr. KENYON. Then let us do it now with the pending appropriation bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. I would not have a right to present the report if it were not a privileged question. I have a right to present it now.

Mr. KENYON. If there is an evening session, I am willing to have it taken up this evening. I will be here—I understand the Democratic caucus has agreed to hold evening sessions—and so far as I am concerned, I am willing to dispose of it this evening.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I wish to say that there are a number of other Senators who desire to discuss the conference report besides the Senator from Iowa, who are not now present in the Chamber. There were many amendments added to the river and harbor appropriation bill on the floor, offered after the committee amendments were disposed of, in which Senators are interested. I myself have in mind two or three Senators on this side of the Chamber who are not now present who are interested in this bill, and I think, out of courtesy to them, an opportunity should be afforded to examine the report.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask leave to withdraw the report, and I will submit it later. I give notice now that I am going to bring it up at the very first opportunity, and I am not going to trouble to send around hunting up Senators and asking them to be here.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator does not have to hunt up any Senators. I was out of the Chamber this morning in connection with a committee meeting. The Senator will not make any time by trying to push it through in the way he indicates.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am not trying to push it through. I wish to say to the Senator I am extending every possible consideration and courtesy I can.

Mr. KENYON. The manner of the Senator would not indicate that he is extending many courtesies.

Mr. FLETCHER. I spoke not with reference to what the Senator from Iowa has said, but with reference to the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire that there were other Senators who wanted to be consulted about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Florida withdraws the conference report presented by him.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14516) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 12, after line 9, to strike out:

INTERNATIONAL PRISON COMMISSION.

For subscription of the United States as an adhering member of the International Prison Commission, and the expenses of a commission, including preparation of reports, $2,550.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. I do not think to save $2,550 we ought deliberately to break an agreement which we have entered into, and, not only that, but which we have initiated.

Mr. MOSES. May I ask the Senator to what amendment he is referring?

Mr. LODGE. I am speaking of the item on page 12, in reference to the International Prison Commission, which the committee proposes to strike out. The International Prison Commission was organized as a result of the initiative of the United States under the provisions of a joint resolution of March 7, 1871. The United States by the act of June 11, 1896, became an adhering member, and our bills have ever since provided for it. This international association was organized, as I have said, on our initiative; we have been a member for years, and it seems to me a most unfortunate time to give the impression to other nations associated with us in a work of this kind that we are ready to abrogate it in order to save $2,550.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator how many nations are interested in this commission?

Mr. LODGE. Thirty-eight countries.

Mr. KENYON. And what is their line of work? What does the commission do?

Mr. LODGE. They deal with the suppression of crime, the proper treatment of criminals, the moral rescue of children, and many other similar questions which are taken up and in connection with which they try to secure international action. It has undoubtedly been a very beneficial work.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, does the Senator know of any reports or any recommendations they have made?

Mr. LODGE. I have seen both reports and recommendations from them.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, it was my fortune to have had charge of this bill a few years ago. At that time I asked for some information with reference to the work of some of these commissions, but there was nothing forthcoming.

Mr. LODGE. I do not say there has been a report during the years of the war, but they reported before that, I know.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I may ask the Senator a question, When was this commission first established?

Mr. LODGE. It was established in 1871.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does not the Senator think they have about had time to finish their work?

Mr. LODGE. I mean in 1871 we passed a resolution which started the whole thing.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How long has the commission been at work?

Mr. LODGE. I think it has been at work since that time. I think it has held meetings. I do not know whether or not they have been annual. We became formally an adhering member in 1896.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am asking these questions for information, because the Senator's information is so much better than mine. The Senator knows, of course, as well as I do, that after we organize these commissions they continue forever if you leave it to them. Does not the Senator think that they have had ample time to have finished their functions and to have made a final report?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think it is a matter in which we can have a final report, for these meetings of nations relate to questions involving the general improvement of prison conditions throughout the world.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was not contemplated, of course, that it should go on forever. If the Senator will pardon me, it reminds me a little of a commission of which a friend of mine was once a member. He had been a Member of Congress; and I once said to him, "Judge, have you not about finished that work?" He replied, "No, John." "Well," I said, "how long do you think it will take you?" He said, "John, with anything like good luck"—he was getting along in years—"I think the work will last as long as I do." And it did.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am no more friendly to useless commissions than is the Senator from Mississippi, but I very much dislike that the United States should abrogate anything in the nature of an international agreement. I have made no resistance to the cutting down of the Mexican commission, which I think is one of those the Senator has just described, and concerns only ourselves and Mexico; but as to these others, with very small and trifling amounts involved, I think to give an impression to 38 other countries that we are ready to break this commission up because we want to save $2,550 is a mistake. I do not think it is a good thing in our general relations with other countries to refuse to make such provisions. Some of those that are thrown out are absolute violations of treaties. They go much further than in this case.

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. There is no treaty obligation under this at all, is there?

Mr. LODGE. There is no treaty obligation. It was, as I understand, simply that an association was formed on the basis of a resolution proposed by the United States, which invited other nations to join in this matter. Then they formed this organization, and the United States became an adhering member.

Mr. KENYON. Do we send any commissioners to these meetings?

Mr. LODGE. We always do.

Mr. KENYON. These meetings are held mostly across the sea, are they not?

Mr. LODGE. They generally have been held at Brussels, I think.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, that leads me to say, if the Senator from Massachusetts has concluded——

Mr. LODGE. I am through on that matter, yes.

Mr. KENYON. That leads me to say that the thought that ran in the minds of some of the members of the committee in striking out this item, and in striking out a number of other items, was, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has suggested, that there are a lot of commissions growing up—they ought to be grown up by this time; they have been in existence long enough—that seem to be largely for the purpose of giving commissioners or prominent gentlemen trips across the sea at the expense of the American people. We did not, of course, in the committee intend to violate any treaty, and, if it can be shown that these provisions should be made because of treaty obligations, I assume nobody wants to prevent it; but in the past, in connection with this bill, there have been many instances of commissions of this kind, which simply amount to nothing except to give an opportunity to somebody to put on a high hat and go across the sea as a commissioner.

Here is the prison commission; here is an international bureau of the permanent court of arbitration, which is stricken out. I do not know whether it is a treaty proposition or not. Here is an international commission on annual tables of constants, and so forth. That does not involve very much; just enough to give somebody a trip across the sea.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; if the Senator will pardon me. That is a mere contribution to scientific purposes and involves an appropriation of only $500.

Mr. KENYON. I know it is a small amount.

Mr. LODGE. It is to enable us to join in publishing and receiving these tables of constants, which are thought to be very valuable scientifically.

Mr. KENYON. Here is an international boundary commission, United States and Mexico.

Mr. LODGE. I offer no defense of that.

Mr. KENYON. That is a resting place for "lame ducks."

Mr. LODGE. The Senator will notice that I made no objection to cutting that down.

Mr. KENYON. I am glad the Senator did not. I suppose it is a commission to go down and sit on the banks and watch the Rio Grande change its course. Then, there is the Bureau of Interparliamentary Union for Promotion of International Arbitration, at Brussels. There may be good purposes in some of these items. Then, here is the International Institute of Agriculture.

Mr. LODGE. That is a matter of treaty.

Mr. KENYON. That we always have. Is there no way to stop such a useless thing as that, when we enter into a treaty to get agricultural statistics from Rome that are of no use to anybody? Then, here is the International Sanitary Bureau. I suppose that is probably based on a treaty. Here is the International High Commission. So all the way through.

Mr. LODGE. I was going to take those up as we reach them.

Mr. KENYON. I will not pursue the matter if the Senator is going to do that, but it seems to me the only thing this commission has ever done apparently is to take trips around with battleships to South America and other places at the expense of the Government. I think there is a determined feeling among certain members of the committee that we ought to get rid of these useless barnacles on the ship of state; and they are not very ornamental, either. However, if the Senator from Massachusetts is going to discuss them as we go along, I will not now proceed further.

Mr. LODGE. I intend to take those up as they are reached in the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MOSES. I want to say to the Senator from Iowa that he evidently has never seen an American diplomat appearing in the broad noonday sun with evening clothes on, or he would not dismiss them as not ornamental.

Mr. LODGE. I dislike especially to see these international obligations interfered with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 12 to strike out the clause from line 10 to line 14.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Pan American Union," on page 12, line 16, after the word "Union," to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$50,000," so as to make the clause read:

Pan American Union, $50,000: Provided, That any moneys received from the other American Republics for the support of the union shall be paid into the Treasury as a credit, in addition to the appropriation, and may be drawn therefrom upon requisitions of the chairman of the governing board of the union for the purpose of meeting the expenses of the union and of carrying out the orders of said governing board: And provided further, That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized to print an edition of the Monthly Bulletin not to exceed 6,000 copies per month, for distribution by the union, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. LODGE. That is a very important matter, and I think this reduction is most unfortunate in every way. The Pan-American Union by international agreement was made in Washington in 1889. It was supported by joint quotas of 21 constituent governments. Those quotas are determined by the governing board of the union, composed of the Secretary of State and the diplomatic representatives of the 20 Latin-American Governments. Each member of the board reports to his government its allotted quota, and an appropriation is made accordingly. It is allotted on the basis of population, and the total amount is $150,000. Our share, on the basis of population, is $85,000, seventeen-thirtieths, and the other Governments pay thirteen-thirtieths. It became absolutely necessary to increase the expense owing to the general increase in all prices. The countries all agreed to increase the total amount $27,000, which raised our quota to $100,000. That is an addition of 18 per cent, and is the only increase which has been made for several years, though the general increase of their expenses has been from 15 to 100 per cent greater than in the last fiscal year before the United States entered the war.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to ask the Senator what proportion of this expense is paid by our Government?

Mr. LODGE. We pay, as I have stated, seventeen-thirtieths and the other countries pay thirteen-thirtieths.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. MOSES. Has the Senator before him the list of countries contributing and the sums which are contributed?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I have.

Mr. MOSES. I should like to have that information.

Mr. LODGE. Argentina, with her present estimated population of 7,740,396, contributes $6,448.45; Bolivia, with a population of 2,520,538, contributes $2,099.84; Brazil, with a population of 22,992,937, contributes $19,155.19; Chile, with a population of 5,000,000, contributes $4,165.45. I will not further give the populations, althought the contributions are based on population. Colombia contributes $4,559.17; Costa Rica contributes $356.23; Cuba, $2,004.51; Dominican Republic, $547.57; Ecuador contributes $1,249.64; Guatemala contributes $1,743.51; Haiti, $1,691.17; Honduras, $493.75; Mexico, $12,629.95; Nicaragua, $574.74; Panama, $322.32; Paraguay, $666.47; Peru, $3,748.90; Salvador, $1,044.82; the United States—that is, on the estimate of this year—contributes $84,315.37; Uruguay, $1,021.30; Venezuela, $2,341.85. The last allotment of the quotas, which was made in 1915, was based on the combined population of 21 Republics of approximately 181,469,232.

Mr. CURTIS. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. What was the cause of the increase this year?

Mr. LODGE. The increase of $27,000 was distributed amongst them all.

Mr. CURTIS. I mean, what was the cause of that? Why should it cost more this year than last year?

Mr. LODGE. They did not ask for it before the increase occasioned by the war. Their expenses have ranged from 50 to 100 per cent greater than for the last fiscal year before the United States entered into the war.

Mr. CURTIS. Last year our proportion was $85,000.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. Now, this year, the war being over, they ask for $100,000?

Mr. LODGE. They do.

Mr. CURTIS. What I want to know is what increase will there be in the expenses for the coming year over those of the last year, which was a war year?

Mr. LODGE. They refrained as long as they could from the increase, but their expenses have gone up, as the expenses of everything have gone up. I think it is very moderate—$27,000 to be divided, and we only have to pay $15,000. The Senate sits here and deliberately votes $200,000,000 to be distributed among the roads of this country, and then it grudges this $15,000 additional. In fact, the committee go far below that reduction; for they proposed to cut off $50,000 from the Pan American Union. There is a building which has been given that has cost the Government nothing, which is worth, with its contents, something like $2,000,000. That building must be kept up; it is one of the most beautiful buildings in Washington, and it cost the Government, as I have said, nothing to build. It was a gift; but since 1914 their expenses have increased so that we are to give $15,000 more and the other countries $12,000 more. It seems to me that is a great mistake for us to cut down that appropriation. The South American countries take a very great interest in the Pan American Union. I think it has done an immense deal of good work in improving our relations and our trade with all the countries to the south of us. Their publications go to all the countries that are members of the union. We agreed to these quotas.

Now, not only does this bill propose to refuse the $15,000 increase, but it cuts off $35,000 from the $85,000 which we have been paying for years and years. I can assure the Senate that the 20 American republics associated with us and their representatives will feel anything but gratified by our attitude in regard to it, for they have all made their contributions, large and small, readily and freely. I earnestly hope that the Senate will not cut down this appropriation which the House, usually much narrower in these matters than we are, has fixed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I agree fully with what the Senator from Massachusetts says. It seems to me that if there is one thing of importance now, it is to maintain the relations which exist between the United States and the other Republics of the Western Hemisphere. We have attained the undoubted leadership, and this relationship, which has grown up and which has been strengthened from year to year, is destined inevitably to have an important commercial influence in the years that are immediately to come.

These other countries attest their confidence and their estimate of the importance of this matter by making what are for them really large appropriations. The buildings are in the United States, here at the National Capital; the meetings are here; the associations are here; and it seems to me that it would be a great mistake to make the cut which the committee proposes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to say that generally I am in favor of putting an end to a great many of these commissions, national and international, because they never put an end to themselves. Not one of them ever confessed that it had finished its work. The Pan American Union, however, is upon a different footing; and whatever we may think about the value of the work which it has done or the value of its reports—and I do not think, myself, that they are very illuminating or enlightening—still the Pan American Union has done a work of the utmost importance for this hemisphere. It has tended to bring about a feeling of amicableness, friendliness, concord, and harmony of purpose that nothing else has tended to do in so large a degree. Even if you consider it as nothing but a place at which every now and then representatives of these different countries meet, and whence they go to report back home how nicely they have been treated, it is still worth $100,000 a year, which, in view of the immense expenses to which we are being put all around, is but a drop in the bucket.

As the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] says, cutting down this item to $50,000 not only cuts off our proportion of the increase that all these nations together with our representatives have agreed to make, but it cut off $35,000 of what we have hitherto been paying. Unless they all cut down in a similar proportion, we are not acting very nicely; it is not a very nice sort of thing to do.

While I generally accord with the committee in cutting off commissions, I do not accord with them in this reduction, and I hope the committee amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I only want to express the same feeling in regard to this amendment. I think it would be altogether deplorable to cut down the amount provided in the bill originally as it came from the House. I think the Pan American Union is a very admirable institution and is doing a great deal of good work—not so much in the way of its reports as in bringing about a feeling of harmony and good-fellowship among all our neighbors to the south.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Making people acquainted with one another.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Getting acquainted with each other is a great thing, and the Pan Americans all over the Western Hemisphere feel that here is a common home where they can meet together and meet as friends. They go home and in their own surroundings they appreciate how comfortable and pleasant it has been in Washington to feel that they have here a home that they are glad to go to and where they are always well received.

I sincerely hope that the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I join the Senator from Delaware in his views about this amendment. I think it would be most unfortunate to reduce this appropriation. The Pan American Union is an agency for creating better understandings with these Latin-American countries, and it has been doing splendid work heretofore. The effect has been all that could be desired, and this is a very meager amount for the Government to contribute toward this cause. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. The building itself was largely given to them, not paid for by the various Governments at all.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the agreement seems to be universal as to the beauty of the Pan American Building, the excellent quality of the entertainment there furnished, and the mellifluous ring of the oratory which constantly flows from it; but, Mr. President, that seems to me to be beside the mark. It can not be that the committee reduced this appropriation by $50,000 without acting upon some basis of judgment; and if the case for the prosecution has been completed, I should like to have something for the defense from some member of the committee that framed the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRAMMELL in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. KENYON. I call for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator in charge of the bill kindly yield to me to send to the desk a resolution which is a matter of course and ask for its present consideration?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I send to the desk a resolution which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 466), as follows:

Resolved, That the standing committees of the Senate, as constituted at the end of this session, be, and they are hereby, continued until the next session of Congress, or until their successors are duly elected.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that that go over.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Does the Senator want it to go over? Similar resolutions have been offered for a hundred years, and it is a stereotyped matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the resolution go over, and it will go over under the rule.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 14516) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the top of page 13, to strike out:

INTERNATIONAL BUREAU OF THE PERMANENT COURT OF ARBITRATION.

To meet the share of the United States in the expenses for the calendar year 1918 of the International Bureau of the Permanent Court of Arbitration, created under article 22 of the convention concluded at The Hague, July 29, 1899, for the pacific settlement of international disputes, $2,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, that is a treaty obligation.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; it is not a treaty obligation. The Senator is mistaken. There is no treaty about it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have here a memorandum from the State Department saying that the United States is bound by the treaty of July 29, 1899, to the contribution of its quota of $2,000; hence, the item should be restored.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I have here a letter from the Department of State, written in response to a request for a list of those matters and things which were not governed by treaty, and I understood that this was one of them. I may be mistaken about it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This memorandum says that we are bound to do this by the treaty of July 29, 1899.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am mistaken about that, Mr. President. The Senator is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the adoption of the committee amendment.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, can the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] give the Senate information as to whether all of the other signatories to the convention of 1899 have been and are still contributing to the support of The Hague court, or whether the suspension of the activities of The Hague court during the four years of war has caused any accumulation of funds under previous appropriations made by the Congress of the United States, or by other parliaments, so that this item might not now be necessary?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; I have no information on the subject, but I assume that if we are observing our treaties we should live up to our part of it until the treaty is abrogated. It is a very small obligation, but it is a real obligation. It is a treaty obligation, specified as such in the bill itself. I hardly think we should undertake simply to violate our obligations under that treaty.

Mr. MOSES. I had no intention of urging that. I was simply seeking information. Of course, if this was a general treaty, to which many nations were signatory, it may have lost its validity through the destruction of some of the powers signatory to the treaty, or in other manner it may have become nugatory. I was simply seeking information. Inasmuch as the committee itself, judging from the statement of the Senator from North Carolina, was under a misapprehension when this was stricken from the bill, possibly if the Senator from North Carolina holds that view there may be other members of the committee present who have more information about it—the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], possibly.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the particular matter about which the Senator is talking is simply carrying out the treaty of July 29, 1899, in which we agreed to pay $2,000 a year. If we take this action it will be a breach of a treaty obligation. There is no question about it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think that is true. I think it is a treaty obligation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 13, after line 7, to strike out:

INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION ON ANNUAL TABLES OF CONSTANTS, ETC.

To the International Commission on Annual Tables of Constants and Numerical Data, Chemical, Physical, and Technological, as established by the Seventh International Congress of Applied Chemistry in London and as continued by the eighth congress in New York, as a contribution by the United States toward the publication of annual tables of constants, chemical, physical, and technological, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 16, to strike out:

BUREAU OF INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION FOR PROMOTION OF INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

For the contribution of the United States toward the maintenance of the Interparliamentary Union for the Promotion of International Arbitration, at Brussels, Belgium, $2,000.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, possibly the Senator from Nebraska will know whether or not that is a treaty obligation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think it is not a treaty obligation. I do not think it is a very valuable commission, either.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator has no objection to its going out, as to its effect upon international relations?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; I have not.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, before that is thrown out in order that we may save $2,000, I merely want to put into the RECORD a statement with regard to it.

This bureau is located in Brussels. Twenty of the principal countries of the world make annual contributions. The members are made up of the various international parliaments that are in favor of submitting all disputes between nations to arbitration. The American Congress joined the union in 1904, and the first appropriation of $2,500 was made in 1912. America has participated in five conferences of the union, and Congress made an appropriation of $50,000 for the entertainment of the delegates to the congress held in St. Louis in 1904. It is for the submission of all disputes to arbitration.

Mr. KENYON. These questions will largely be taken care of by the league of nations, will they not?

Mr. LODGE. Personally, I do not think that every conceivable dispute can be submitted to arbitration, but this is an excellent purpose. I only wanted it to be known.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, one page 13, after line 22, to strike out:

INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF AGRICULTURE.

For the payment of the quota of the United States for the support of the International Institute of Agriculture for the calendar year 1920, $8,000;

For salary of one member of the permanent committee of the International Institute of Agriculture for the calendar year 1920, $3,000;

For the payment of the quota of the United States for the cost of translating into and printing in the English language the publications of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, $5,000.

Total, $16,600.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, that is a treaty obligation created by the treaty of June 7, 1905, which was ratified by the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. While it is a treaty, our obligation——

Mr. LODGE. The payment of the quota for the support of the institute is the treaty obligation. The salary of the member is not a treaty obligation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; our quota is the part to which we are bound by the treaty. That is what I was going to say.

Mr. LODGE. Neither is the quota for printing in English part of the treaty obligation.

Mr. MOSES. Why is the word "quota" used, then?

Mr. LODGE. The payment of the quota of $8,000 for the support of the institute is an international obligation.

Mr. MOSES. But what about printing in the English language, "for the payment of the quota of the United States"?

Mr. LODGE. The memorandum which I have from the State Department says:

The payment of the quota is an international obligation created by the treaty of June 7, 1905, which was ratified by the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will ask the Senator about the $3,600 salary.

Mr. LODGE. The salary of the member of the permanent committee is not a treaty obligation; neither is the quota for printing in English, which is only a part. The other quota is for the expenses of the commission, which is a permanent one, in Rome.

Mr. MOSES. This is the commission on which David Lubin was our representative, is it not?

Mr. LODGE. It is.

Mr. MOSES. And he is now dead.

Mr. LODGE. Is he? I did not know it.

Mr. MOSES. Then, of course, not knowing he was dead, the Senator from Massachusetts does not know the name of his successor, does he?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know the name of his successor; but our quota for maintenance is a different thing.

Mr. MOSES. Can the Senator from Nebraska inform the Senate who is the American representative on this institute now, since the death of Mr. Lubin?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. He died within a few months, and I do not know whether or not a successor has been appointed.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think any successor has been appointed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But I am disposed to move to amend this amendment of the committee.

Mr. LODGE. There are three amendments there.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Have they been read as separate amendments?

Mr. LODGE. There are three separate amendments. The first one, for the payment of the quota of the United States for the support of the International Institute of Agriculture, is a treaty obligation.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think that ought to be agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; that ought to be agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. That is a treaty obligation, and ought not to be stopped.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. The salary of the member, and the payment of the quota for the cost of translating into and printing in the English language the publications, are not treaty obligations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And the chances are that we can get, through our diplomatic representatives in Rome, or through the consul there, whatever information we desire in regard to the labors of this commission. I think the first paragraph, however, should be restored to the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree to that, inasmuch as it is a treaty obligation. I should like to take a vote on the other two.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question, then, will be upon the first subdivision of the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have no objection to agreeing to that. I wanted to insist on that myself. I think it ought to be done; but I want to say something about the others. That may be agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want the amendment striking out the first paragraph rejected.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Nebrasks asks to have the question divided, so that the payment of the quota of the United States for the support of the International Institute of Agriculture for the calendar year 1920, $8,000, shall constitute one question. The committee proposes to strike out those words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on adopting the amendment. Senators wishing to reject it should vote in the negative.

Mr. OVERMAN. The committee agrees to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as to the first subdivision.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. OVERMAN. Also, the title should be restored.

Mr. FLETCHER. That covers the title, lines 23 to 26?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Now, with reference to the other items, Mr. President, I think we ought to maintain a member of the International Institute of Agriculture. They have been doing very excellent work. There are 55 nations participating in it under treaty agreements; their reports, especially their crop-reporting service, have been most valuable to every country concerned. The appropriation of $3,600 for salary is really a merely nominal appropriation. Mr. Lubin gave his whole time to that work, and was expending right along many times over the amount of his salary in connection with the work.

The appropriation for translating the reports into English also ought to be maintained, for otherwise we will not get very much value out of it. All their publications are in French, the official language of the institute, and it is necessary to translate them into English if we are to get much value out of it. The appropriation of $5,000 for that work is really not adequate. Mr. Lubin supplemented that out of his own pocket from time to time.

We are pledged to contribute our share to keeping up that institute, and I think we ought to have a member there who is obliged to stay there permanently. The members representing the 55 nations that participate under the treaty are permanent members, and they have to live there to carry on the work. Mr. Lubin lived there. It is unfortunate that Mr. Lubin has passed away, because he was an extraordinary man in many respects and had a vision and a grasp of this work that probably no other man can have.

In that connection, I want to put into the RECORD a letter from Mr. Lubin to me, dated April 8, 1918, which explains the work of this International Institute of Agriculture. I will not take the time to read it. If this matter goes into conference, it may be of some value to the conferees. It deals with the work in considerable detail and will save my going over it and discussing it now; but I think we ought to disagree to both the remaining committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

ROME, April 8, 1918.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: I have your esteemed letters of March 7 and 9, and the copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 4 which you were good enough to send me.

I have gone over the debate reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and it seems to me that the opposition of Senators OVERMAN and SMOOT to the appropriations for salary and for printing is mainly based on some misapprehensions. I therefore append some comments and explanations, showing facts with many of which you are already acquainted, though some points may be new to you.

All these facts have been clearly shown in my several reports to the Secretary of State, which I think should henceforth be printed for the information of Members of Congress on just such points as those which have now arisen.

I was very much pleased to note the success of the efforts of your good self and of your worthy colleagues on behalf of the International Institute of Agriculture. This is in line with your previous pioneer stand on behalf of this institution. The time will surely come when these efforts will be appreciated at their true value.

I am sending a copy of this letter and statement to the Secretary of State with the request that it be printed for the information of the Senate and of the House.

Thanking you for your valued and kindly offices in the matter, I am, with high esteem,

Yours, very sincerely, DAVID LUBIN.

I see from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 4 that Senator SMOOT and Senator OVERMAN are under the impression that the International Institute of Agriculture is a body holding occasional conventions or meetings, and that "during the war," as Senator OVERMAN says, the meetings have not been held. I notice that the question has been raised whether the war has not stopped or curtailed the work of the institute, and if so, what becomes of the $8,000, the United States's quota?

No; the war has not stopped or curtailed the work. The meetings of the institute are held regularly as before the war. The work of the institute is going along as before the war, in fact, with increased activity. Nor have any of the belligerent nations abrogated the treaty; all the 55 adhering Governments are still full members. Communications with the central empires, with permission of the Government, go on regularly through Switzerland.

The institute, as is known, is a permanent, official body, established under international treaty, working the year around, just as is the Department of Agriculture, and the war has only brought out into clearer relief the importance of its labors.

In his report to Parliament (August, 1916) the minister of external affairs of Australia said:

"The work of the institute and the information disseminated by it is of the greatest value to the Commonwealth. * * * The Statistical Crop-Reporting Bulletin, which is really an international summary of the supply, is the main factor in determining the world price of the staples of agriculture."

The Journal Officiel of the French Chamber of Deputies (Mar. 2, 1918) gives the remarks of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture. On a measure for bringing in to the institute all the French colonies and protectorates, he said:

"The crop statistics which the institute assembles and publishes monthly are the one authoritative statement. * * * The services rendered by this institute are recognized throughout the world."

The measure was favorably reported on by the Committee on Agriculture and by the committee on foreign affairs of the French chamber and was approved by the minister of colonies and will add additional adherents to the 55 governments now members of the institute.

The world crop reports of the institute are cabled regularly each month to the United States Department of Agriculture, which gives them publicity. The department also receives regularly for free distribution to its mailing list the monthly publications of the institute, its six-monthly world balance sheet for the supply and demand of cereals, and its yearbooks of International Agricultural Legislation and of International Agricultural Statistics.

From time to time urgent requests have reached me from the United States Government for a larger number of these publications than those to which it is entitled by the quota. These requests have been complied with as far as possible.

With regard to the delegate, Senator SMOOT says (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Feb. 4, 1918) "I think Mr. Lubin has not very much to do as a delegate"; and Senator OVERMAN asks: "During the war, does he have any duties as a delegate? Are there any conventions held? If there is no convention held, is it necessary to make the appropriation?"

It will be seen from the statements before made as to the work of the institute that the presence of the delegate is as necessary in time of war as in time of peace; in fact, even more so. And as to the position of delegate, in his report on the Diplomatic and Consular Appropriation bill (64th Cong., 1st sess.) the Secretary of State says:

"It is a conventional obligation under the convention mentioned that the United States should be represented by one member on the permanent committee of the institute. The amount of the salary to be paid to him, however, is fixed by Congress, and has been $3,000 a year."

As for the permanency of this salary appropriation, the House ruled (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Mar. 28, 1912) that, in accordance with section 3687 of Hinds' Precedents, vol. 4, "In the absence of a general law fixing a salary the amount appropriated in the last appropriation bill has been held to be the legal salary."

Senator SMOOT says that "Mr. Lubin * * * spends a good deal of time in writing articles upon policies that he thinks ought to be adopted by the Government of the United States."

Senator SMOOT is right. I do spend a good deal of time on such work, and so should any delegate of the United States to this institute who attends to his duties properly. Were Senator SMOOT familiar with the scope and purposes of the institute he would know that the functions of a delegate here are twofold. On the one hand, I am expected to attend to the duties and routine of the labors of the institute from the international standpoint and to keep the State Department informed on these matters. On the other hand, I also believe it to be my duty to make observations from the point of vantage which the institute affords as a world observatory of economic progress touching agriculture in the several countries and to crystallize these observations into definite statements for public consideration. Some of these statements have been made into public documents, but by far the larger number I have had printed here in Rome and mailed to the United States.

And what were these statements about? Some related to the world crop-reporting service, some to the marketing of farm products, some to rural credits, and some to the cost of ocean carriage on the staples of agriculture in its relation to the home price of the products and in its economic and political influences on the Nation.

Some of this work is still pending; some has already led to practical results, as Senator SMOOT is no doubt aware, for he must have voted on rural credits and on the joint resolution calling for an international conference (to be held in Rome at the close of the war) on the proposal for an international commission on ocean freight rates.

"But," says Senator SMOOT, "it is costing the Government of the United States I do not know how much each year."

I think Senator SMOOT is mistaken. This special work does not cost the Government one cent. The time may come when the economic value of such labor will be more generally recognized and when Congress will make an appropriation to cover the cost. At this time there is no appropriation for this purpose; but realizing the economic value of the work to the United States, I have been and am paying out of my own means to cover the cost of extra copies of the public documents and for printing and mailing those articles which are got out from Rome. This cost aggregates to an amount several times in excess of the sum allowed me by Congress for salary. I do this because I feel the needs for the work, because I believe it to be of benefit to the American people.

And now for the $5,000 for printing, which they seem to consider unnecessary. By referring to the Secretary of State's report on the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill (64th Cong., 1st sess.) they will see the reason for it. Let me quote:

"In view of the fact that, as is customary in international organizations of this character, the publications and proceedings of the institute were printed in French they were of little or no value to agriculturists in the United States and in Great Britain. For this reason the United States and Great Britain have each undertaken to contribute the sum of $5,000 to the institution for the purpose of having all of the publications printed in English as well as in French."

In addition to this, it may be said that if there were no such appropriation the Government of the United States, instead of the hundreds of copies in English of each edition which it now receives for free distribution, would only be entitled to 10 copies of each publication in French.

Senator OVERMAN and Senator SMOOT could have obtained an idea of the importance of the work of the institute from the press of the United States and of the principal countries of the world. They could have seen from the press that the former contradictory, unofficial, manipulating statements on the world's supply have been replaced by the institute's official world crop reports, which now form the world standard, the determining factor in arriving at the world's price of the staples of agriculture. They could have seen that the institute's monthly crop reports afford the official data on which the Governments of the allied countries base their food-control policy. They could have seen that the timely warnings given by the institute in these monthly crop reports and in its half yearly world balance sheets of supply and demand have enabled the allied Governments, through their food controllers, to ward off impending famine which would have affected millions in the trenches and in the homes. They could have seen that some of the articles and statements sent out were the result of hearings given by the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Labor, the Department of Commerce, the Department of State, and of hearings before congressional committees, and they could have seen that some of the policies therein advocated have already formed the basis of legislation adopted by the United States.

Respectfully submitted.

DAVID LUBIN,
Delegate of the United States,
International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, Italy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I agree with the committee about this amendment. I think the committee is right, and that the committee amendment ought to be adopted.

The main reason given for keeping up this thing is that they make reports of the crops of the various countries. All we have to do in the world is to go and get the statistical reports already made by every civilized nation in the world, and bring them together, and publish them in one volume, instead of publishing them in several volumes. It is mere work of compilation and translation.

I do not believe that the thing has ever been worth a tuppence to the United States since it was started. Everybody can always get later information about the crops here than they can get from Rome; and you can get just as quick information, if you want it, by going to any place where the statistics and annual reports of foreign countries are kept, and getting the information that you want.

I never have understood why this institute was organized, except as a fad of a man who is now dead, and, of course, we are all very sorry that he is dead. I never have seen how it could do me, as a farmer, or do anybody else as a farmer, here or in France or in Germany or in England, one particle of good. It is not even a fifth wheel; and I say to the committee in the work of doing away with them, "Onward, Christian soldiers, onward!"

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Florida, who seems to possess more knowledge with reference to the International Institute of Agriculture than any member of the committee who is defending this amendment, whether he knows, with reference to the other 19 representatives—he said, as I recall, that there are 20 nations represented in the institution—whether the representatives of the other 19 nations aside from the United States are distinct officials, sent to Rome and maintained there simply for the purpose of affording their countries representation in the institute, or whether they are consular or diplomatic officers who are detailed for that purpose?

There are many international bodies with which I have had some acquaintance in which the representation, in whole or in part, has been made up by the detail of some consular or diplomatic representative, a consul general or a secretary from the embassy or legation staff, to afford the represented nations their representation in those bodies; and if other nations now represented in the International Institute of Agriculture in Rome are so represented, it is easily feasible for the United States to be so represented. Everyone knows that the personnel of the embassy in Rome and the personnel of the consulate in Rome have been very largely increased in the last few years, so that we would have entirely adequate representation in the institute, if this work is of no larger importance than as described by the Senator from Mississippi, by detailing some secretary from the embassy, or some vice consul from the consulate, to represent us in this body.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator's inquiry, just briefly, the executive authority of the institute is entrusted to the permanent committee, which is subdivided into four permanent commissions. Each State is represented on the committee by one delegate, who resides in Rome.

Mr. MOSES. That could easily apply to a secretary of embassy or consul.

Mr. FLETCHER. The permanent committee meets at least once a month, except during the vacation period, from July to September; and I think they continued those meetings right along even during the war. There may be a few of the countries that were not represented; but they began with about 20 nations, and there are now 55 nations participating.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. May I ask the Senator, Are those delegates from each State and nation?

Mr. FLETCHER. They are appointed by the States like our delegate is appointed through the State Department.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. They are not attachés of our diplomatic legation?

Mr. FLETCHER. Not at all.

Mr. MOSES. May I ask the Senator if he is nominated and confirmed as other members of the diplomatic establishment?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think this delegate is appointed by the President through the State Department. I am not sure whether he is confirmed by the Senate or not. He gets his commission through the State Department.

Mr. OVERMAN. The committee could not see why we should pay a man $3,600 a year to go to Rome to attend a meeting once a month. That is about all this is. They have a meeting, and what they resolve is published in Latin. We can send over and get that matter without paying $5,000 for a person to translate it. I doubt whether anyone in the Senate ever saw a single report unless the Senator from Florida.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have and I do not see any use in it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I never saw it and never saw anyone before who had seen it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will state that they are regular reports, regular bulletins. They issue a bulletin monthly known as the International Crop Report and Agriculture Statistics; one an International Review of the Science and Practice of Agriculture; another publication is the half yearly International Movement of Fertilizers and Chemical Products Used in Agriculture; another publication is called Documentary Leaflets on Available Supplies and Prices; another on Miscellaneous Agriculture Products in Tropical Countries; another the Monthly International Review of Agricultural Economics; another the half yearly Statistical Notes on Cereals; then The World's Agricultural Supply and Demand Balance Sheet, International Yearbook of Agricultural Legislation, the International Yearbook of Agricultural Statistics, the Inventory of the World Agricultural Resources, Areas, Production, Exports, Imports, Prices, Freight Rates, and so forth. Those are the publications.

Mr. OVERMAN. He has been writing all the time he was there, but the committee thought they might send there one of the commercial attachés we have been talking about and let him attend the meetings and make the reports, instead of spending $5,000 for a translation which we could get through one of our own translators here.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is immaterial to me; I have no personal interest in it; but I think it would be a mistake to abandon our representation there. I simply want to correct the Senator's misapprehension that this amount is paid to send some one to Rome to attend meetings once a month or once a year. The law requires that the delegates representing the States shall be permanently in Rome. They have to live there, and, as I have said, the executive committee meets at least once a month, except during the vacation of July to September, and it is composed of delegates from the States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the committee striking out the first three lines on page 14, proposing to appropriate $3,600 for salary of one member of the committee of the International Institute of Agriculture.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 4 to 8, inclusive, on page 14, in the following words:

For the payment of the quota of the United States for the cost of translating into and printing in the English language the publications of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, $5,000.

Total, $16,600.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask if the amendment on pages 13 and 14, which is really three amendments, which part was stricken out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first three lines on page 14, by the vote just taken.

Mr. KENYON. Lines 14, 15, 16, and 17 were stricken out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They were left in. The question was divided into three parts.

Mr. KENYON. Lines 11, 12, and 13 went out?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They did. The question is on the amendment on page 14, to strike out lines 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Salaries and Expenses, United States Court for China," on page 15, line 4, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$8" and insert "$6," so as to make the clause read:

The judge of the said court and the district attorney shall, when the sessions of the court are held at other cities than Shanghai, receive in addition to their salaries their necessary actual expenses during such sessions, not to exceed $6 per day each, and so much as may be necessary for said purposes during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, it seems to me that is a very small item and that the amendment reported by the committee should not be agreed to. It relates to the per diem allowed the judge., which is reduced from $8 to $6. As a matter of fact, living was never so high in China as it is to-day. Our officials in the Chinese extraterritorial court number four, I believe—the judge, the district attorney, the clerk, possibly an assistant clerk—I am not sure about that—and the marshal.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Can the Senator advise the Senate how much travel this judge has to do?

Mr. SAULSBURY. My recollection is that the extraterritorial court is held in four places. The judge and the court officials live in Shanghai. They hold court in Tientsin, I think, in Canton, and in Hankow. It goes without saying that when the court officials are not at home their expenses are much more than $6 per day. You can not live anywhere, I know, at $6 a day. You could not live in China when I was there in 1915, when the exchange was on the basis of about 2.40 or 2.50 for each American dollar, and of course it is very much higher now.

I do not think that this is the time to reduce the allowance of these officials. They have most important work to do. Every question that comes up about an American in the whole Republic of China is attended to by this court. It seems to me that their per diem ought to be left as it has been.

I have some information here from the State Department with regard to this matter. I know all these officials. I think they are all admirable men. Judge Lobingier, who is a man of wide experience in the East, has told the State Department that with the most rigid economy while holding a session at Tientsin his expenses were nearly three times the $6 a day, and he thinks that it ought to be restored where it was. It was $10 a day until the last bill was passed, I think.

I hope the amendment will not be agreed to for the reasons I have suggested.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say in support of the action of the committee that our own employees in this country do not get over $4 and $5 per diem. We found several places in the bill where some men were getting $8 and $10 a day and we cut them down to $6, and this judge's per diem went with the others. We did not want to discriminate in favor of this judge in China, although there is some provision in the bill about remunerating a man for loss in exchange. But whether that is so or not, our own employees here, where the cost of living is pretty nearly as high as in China, get $4 and $5. This judge gets $8,000 a year. Some of them get only as high as $3,000 a year. So we give them $6, which is a dollar more than we pay anybody here.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator a question. He is discussing this as though it were the arbitrary payment of $6 or $8, as the case may be, for expenses. The reading of the bill shows that it is for actual expenses not exceeding that amount. The Senator certainly would not object to paying the amount of actual expenses. This provides for actual expenses not exceeding a certain amount.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is our own law in regard to our own employees, and why should we give a man in China more than our people get?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill and such other Senators as are present give me their attention in regard to this particular item. The judge of the extraterritorial court in China is the highest official anywhere in China except in Pekin, where the minister ranks him. Shanghai is a great international city. It is called the Paris of the East. The judge of that court wherever he goes in China is bound to preserve a certain amount of dignity. He can not go to a cheap boarding house and live when he is holding court. We must consider the dignity of a man who represents this country in a foreign town like Shanghai, which is the eastern capital as far as that is concerned, except diplomatically Pekin is, for more people from all over the world go to Shanghai than to all the other cities in China.

Mr. OVERMAN. Does he live in Shanghai?

Mr. SAULSBURY. He does.

Mr. OVERMAN. He does not get his expenses paid when he lives in Shanghai?

Mr. SAULSBURY. He does not get his expenses paid, but he must travel to four places widely scattered in China, and when he goes he should be paid a reasonable amount to maintain the dignity which public sentiment and public opinion impose on judges of the United States when they are representing a great country like this. I think it is only proper. I think it is a pitiful allowance as it is, but it is very necessary that he should have these expenses paid; and I think it is only justice that he should be reimbursed for them.

Mr. SPENCER. Will the Senator from Delaware yield for a question?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. SPENCER. The judge to whom you refer is Judge Lobingier?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes.

Mr. SPENCER. Does the Senator think the amount allowed by the committee is sufficient?

Mr. SAULSBURY. His statement to the State Department is that his expenses when he goes to Tientsin to hold court are about three times $6 a day; in other words, $18 a day.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope the Senator will allow me to say that that judge is one of the highest class men in the judiciary of the United States. He is a man whose statement in regard to his expenses is absolutely to be taken without any qualification. He is a gentleman and a scholar and a lawyer, and whatever his own judgment was as to the need of the situation would certainly be entirely conclusive upon me.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will say to the Senator he bears that reputation where he is serving. Among the many foreign courts I have understood that the American court in Shanghai is the most highly regarded.

Mr. MOSES. The reference to the inadequacy of compensation of a representative of America in a foreign field creates in my mind a reminiscent and painful line of thought. I am in full accord with what the Senator from Delaware has said in reference to the allowance made to the officials of this court. In this connection I am led to ask the Senator in charge of the bill why it is that the provision made at the bottom of page 7 for the payment of loss by exchange is confined to members of the embassies and legations and not made applicable to the members of the court? It must be obvious that in times like these the loss by exchange to our officers in China is considerable, more perhaps than in almost any other nation where we are maintaining representation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

STANDING COMMITTEES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the Senator in charge of the bill has yielded to me for just a moment. I offered a resolution, and the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] objected to it. He now, after investigation, withdraws his objection, and I ask that it may be submitted to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 466), as follows:

Resolved, That the standing committees of the Senate as constituted at the end of this session be, and they are hereby, continued until the next session of Congress or until their successors are duly elected.

Mr. LODGE. I am entirely in favor of that resolution. We have always passed a similar resolution. I only wanted to speak to the Senator from Virginia as to his understanding being the same as mine, that none of these committees, with the exception of the Committee on Contingent Expenses, exists by statute, and none of them, of course, would transact any business whatever between the expiration of this Congress and the assembling of the new Congress. The Senator from Virginia agrees with me entirely about that.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do. When this Congress expires all these committees expire, except the vitality given by this resolution. I ask that the resolution may have present consideration.

Mr. LODGE. I will just ask the question. Of course, if there is a special session of the Senate, the committees are reorganized.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Whenever there is a special or a regular session this resolution ends.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement in reference to the Indian appropriation bill, because a large number—I should say a dozen Senators—wish to know when the bill is going to be presented and discussed. I do not want to keep them waiting. They had expected to have it considered this afternoon. I am sure the Diplomatic and Consular bill will take another half hour, and then the fortifications appropriation bill will be considered, I apprehend.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think they are waiting to consider that bill.

Mr. ASHURST. That would make it obvious that we could not consider the Indian bill this evening. Therefore I wish to say that in the morning, when the end of the morning hour arrives, I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. I appeal to Senators to remember that it was the unfinished business some two or three days ago, but was displaced—and of that I make no complaint—by the conference report on the leasing bill. The Indian bill will be next in order, according to the calendar, as having been reported next. I do not think it will take over a day or a day and a half to pass it. I wish to say to Senators interested that I will make no attempt to get up the Indian bill for consideration to-night.

Mr. LODGE. I entirely sympathize with the Senator from Arizona about taking up the bill, but I wish he would not say that he told Senators they might go away, because we want to get this bill through now and we may need a quorum.

Mr. ASHURST. I was unfortunate in my expression. I did not mean that Senators should go away; in fact, I know they will not go; but what I meant was that the Senators are waiting about, I know, of course, expecting the Indian bill to come up, and they wish to be prepared with certain data on certain amendments. I wish to give notice, therefore, that the Indian bill will not be considered to-night, but that I will use every endeavor to lay it before the Senate to-morrow morning at the end of the morning hour.

REPEAL OF DAYLIGHT-SAVING LAW.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that, during the consideration of H. R. 15018, I shall move to suspend that provision of paragraph 3 of Senate Rule XVI prohibiting any amendment proposing general legislation to any general appropriation bill, for the purpose of offering the following amendment to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 15018):

"An act entitled 'An act to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States,' approved March 19, 1918, is hereby repealed."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13026) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CLARK of Florida, Mr. BURNETT, Mr. GRIFFIN, Mr. AUSTIN, and Mr. LANGLEY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13277) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the Government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SISSON, Mr. MCANDREWS, and Mr. DAVIS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13366) permitting any person who has served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the present war to retain his uniform and personal equipment, and to wear the same under certain conditions.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5279) to authorize the resumption of voluntary enlistment in the Regular Army, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13306) to authorize the payment of allotments out of the pay of enlisted men in certain cases in which these payments have been discontinued.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 4723. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 204. An act to provide for the fitting up of quarters in the post-office building at the city of Sacramento, Cal., for the accommodation of the district court of the northern district of California and its officers; and

H. R. 3217. An act providing for an increase of authorization for the Federal building at Steubenville, in the State of Ohio.

ENLISTMENTS IN THE ARMY—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5279) to authorize the resumption of voluntary enlistments in the Regular Army, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the amendment of the House insert the following:

"Provided, That from and after the approval of this act, one-third of the enlistments in the Regular Army of the United States shall be for a period of one year, and the remaining two-thirds thereof shall be for the period of three years. Any person enlisting under the provisions of this act shall not be required to serve with the reserves. The pay of the men enlisted hereunder shall be the same as that provided by the act entitled 'An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States,' approved May 18, 1917: Provided further, That after the expiration of one year those enlisting for the period of three years may be discharged in the discretion of the Secretary of War under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by him after one year of service."

And the House agree to the same.

GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
G. M. HITCHCOCK,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
S. H. DENT, Jr.,
W. J. FIELD,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14516) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 15, to strike out:

INTERNATIONAL SEISMOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION.

For defraying the necessary expenses in fulfilling the obligations of the United States as a member of the International Seismological Association, including the annual contribution to the expenses of the association, $800.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Senate to disagree to this amendment for the reason that the Senate committee, since striking out this item, has ascertained that it would require six months' notice before it can be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 21, to strike out:

ARBITRATION OF OUTSTANDING PECUNIARY CLAIMS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN.

For the expenses of the arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims between the United States and Great Britain, in accordance with the special agreement concluded for that purpose August 18, 1910, and the schedules of claims thereunder, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, as follows:

Salaries, United States agency: One counsel and joint secretary, at $2,750; stenographer, at $1,200;

Expenses, United States agency: Necessary and contingent expenses, $300;

In all, $4,250.

Mr. LODGE. These pecuniary claims have been settled by a commission appointed under an agreement with Great Britain, and the work of the commission has been suspended by the war. The department feels that it is very important that this one officer——

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to ask the Senator if he considers an agreement between the United States and Great Britain, to carry it out as possessing the same dignity as a treaty?

Mr. LODGE. It was made under the arbitration treaty.

Mr. OVERMAN. Was it a treaty really?

Mr. LODGE. It was an agreement made under the arbitration treaty.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It was a special agreement, if I may interrupt the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. It was a special agreement made under the treaty.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes; made under the treaty.

Mr. MOSES. Do I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to contend that these pecuniary settlements can not go on unless these salaries are provided for?

Mr. LODGE. There were three commissioners from the United States and three from Canada, Chief Justice Fitzpatrick being one of the members, and they were disposing of these claims, which was a very desirable thing to do. There were an immense number of the claims, and it is very desirable that they should be disposed of. They were disposing of them rapidly when the war came, and everything was suspended and everybody was dismissed except one counsel and joint secretary. There is a library here and archives and all the correspondence.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator ought to disagree to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WOLCOTT in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 16, after line 19, to strike out:

INTERNATIONAL HIGH COMMISSION.

To defray the actual and necessary expenses on the part of the United States section of the International High Commission, arising in such work and investigations as may be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, $25,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I hope the committee does not seriously intend to press the amendment. I think the committee failed to fully understand just what the International High Joint Commission is, so I called attention in the hearings before the House committee to a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury appearing on pages 50, 51, and 52, and subsequent documents submitted to the House committee explaining the work of this commission. It is a very important commission that is of great significance and of value in connection with our relations, particularly with the Latin-American Republics. The prime requisite of the Pan American Financial Conference, distinctly dealing with the commercial and financial needs of the American continent, was supplied by the constitution of the International High Commission, a composite body represented in each American Republic by a national section of not more than nine members, of which the minister of finance, or in the United States the Secretary of the Treasury, is ex officio the chairman.

The International High Commission is the aggregate of the members of the national sections. The United States section was placed upon a regular legislative basis by the act of Congress of February 7, 1916:

For the more effective coordination and direction of the work, the International High Commission, at its first general meeting, which was held at Buenos Aires in April, 1916, created, as its common organ or agency, a Central Executive Council, consisting of a president, a vice president, and secretary general, and an assistant secretary general; and assigned to these positions, respectively, the chairman, vice chairman, secretary, and assistant secretary, of the United States section.

That section is an executive council. Each section is composed of nine members. Each of these 20 Latin-American Republics is entitled to participate, and does participate, in the membership of the Joint International High Commission. Now, let us see what the program of the commission is:

The program of the International High Commission, as laid down by the Pan American Financial Conference, at Washington, covered a wide but well-considered range, embracing: (1) The establishment of a gold standard of value; (2) bills of exchange, commercial paper, and bills of lading; (3) the uniform (a) classification of merchandise, (b) customs regulations, (c) consular certificates and invoices, (d) port charges; (4) uniform regulations for commercial travelers; (5) the international protection of trade-marks, patents, and copyrights; (6) the establishment of a uniform low rate of postage and the improvement of money-order and parcels-post facilities between the American countries; and (7) the extension of the process of arbitration for the adjustment of commercial disputes.

I am reading this from the statement made by Dr. John Bassett Moore, who is vice chairman of the American section. He continues:

In addition to these subjects, the International High Commission, at its meeting in Buenos Aires, dealt with the extension of banking facilities and of credits and the stabilization of exchange; the uniformity of laws for the protection of merchant creditors; international agreements for uniform labor legislation; the question of uniformity of national regulations and policies regarding mineral oils; improved transportation facilities between the American Republics; and telegraph facilities and rates, including the use of wireless telegraphy for commercial purposes.

The work prescribed by the International High Commission has been steadily and energetically carried on. Valuable publications, intended to prepare the way for the measures which the commission has in view, have been prepared, printed, and circulated, and appreciable progress has been made in obtaining the adoption of those measures. Actual ameliorations of methods of customs administration have been secured in various quarters. Efforts have been made to relieve the burdens and inconveniences caused by the war. But, with a view to practical achievement, the Central Executive Council has singled out, and has pressed with special vigor, certain measures of a comprehensive and systematic nature, and I am glad to say that the results have been most gratifying and encouraging.

Among these measures one of the most important is that bringing into operation the convention adopted by the International American Conference at Buenos Aires in 1910 for the protection of patents and trade-marks. By that convention the American Republics were divided into two groups—the southern and the northern. Of the southern group—

In other words, we register trade-marks now in all the Latin American Republic by registering in the International Bureau at Habana. Heretofore we had to register trade-marks in each one of the countries and be controlled by the laws in each and every one of those countries.

Another measure specially pressed is the convention to facilitate the operations of commercial travelers. In a number of the American countries local taxes, practically prohibitive in amount, on the operations of such travelers, have for many years existed. A convention was formulated by the central executive council, and, after examination and revision, was submitted by the Department of State to the American Government, looking to the substitution for all local taxes of a single national fee. This convention, first signed and ratified by the United States and Uruguay, has so far been accepted by 11 other countries.

That is another great advance in our relations with these countries, whereby we agree that one fee shall cover the entire license taxes for all the countries.

Another measure preferentially dealt with, because of its significance for the future as well as for the present, is the treaty for the establishment of the international gold clearance fund.

And so on various other matters which I shall not take up the time of the Senate now to deal with, for evidently there is very little attention being paid to the matter. Those who want to strike down the commission would probably do it anyway; those who know something about its work will probably keep that knowledge to themselves; those who vote in favor of striking it out do not desire to know, and so I might as well stop talking about the matter.

It is gratifying to state that the central executive council has had in its work the hearty and active cooperation of various bodies, such as the American Bankers' Association, the Committee on Commercial Law of the Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws, the United States Chamber of Commerce, and the National Foreign Trade Council. Their assistance has been helpful and reassuring.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to know from what report the Senator from Florida is reading.

Mr. FLETCHER. As I have stated, I have been reading from the statement made by Dr. John Bassett Moore, who is vice chairman of the section of the United States.

Mr. CURTIS. Is that his official report?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; it is not an official report. It is a statement made by Dr. Moore recounting to the section here what had been going on and what had been accomplished. If the Senator from Kansas desires to know something about the official statement, he will find it in the House hearings.

Mr. CURTIS. I have read the report which is printed in the House hearings, but I did not recognize the language in the statement which the Senator from Florida has been reading, and that is why I asked the Senator from what he was reading.

Mr. FLETCHER. The letter in the House hearings is written by the Secretary of the Treasury, who is chairman ex officio of the Joint International High Commission and the chairman of the national section.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. MOSES. Can the Senator from Florida state why this commission appears in the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill when its functions apparently are altogether framed and directed by the Treasury Department? Is this another of these dislocated administrative bodies such as we have been discussing in prior portions of the bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. I should scarcely say that it is a diplomatic commission at all. In a part of its functions it may be somewhat associated with diplomatic relations. It cooperates with the State Department, but it likewise cooperates with all the other departments of the Government. It has no really diplomatic status as such. It is intended to promote a better understanding, to remove barriers to our trade, our commercial, our financial, and other relations with our friends to the south of us.

Let me say to the Senator that if the United States does not take advantage of the conditions which now exist to strengthen and build up the good will and business opportunities and the trade relations which are possible now with all of these countries to the south of us, we shall make a very great mistake. Now is our opportunity to get in closer touch and on a firmer basis of understanding with our friends to the south of us, and surely we ought not to strike down any agency that helps to accomplish such a desirable result.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the general statement of the Senator from Florida is one which meets my full approval. The International High Commission, I understand, is a beneficent agency growing out of Secretary McAdoo's trip to Latin America a few years ago. The necessity for it was developed by an investigation which was the outcome of that trip, and I have no doubt that the work of the International High Commission is highly beneficent not only for us but for the Latin American Republics in general.

The question which I immediately rose to ask was with reference to the presence of this item of appropriation on this bill, when the commission evidently is subsidiary to the Treasury Department? I assume, Mr. President, that the commission appears in the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill because it is given some quasi diplomatic standing; in other words, it seeks diplomatic privileges and immunities while carrying on strictly commercial or Treasury functions.

The appealing remarks of the Senator from Florida with reference to the necessity and great desirability of preserving and supplementing the good relations existing between the United States and the Latin American Republics embody a sentiment which no Member of this Chamber will attempt to oppose. As a matter of fact, I had been but a few days a Member of this body when I introduced a resolution looking to that particular object by urging the Senate to express its opinion that recognition should be extended to the existing government in the Republic of Costa Rica. As I have gone through this bill this afternoon, I have found many items which have strengthened me not only in the general conviction but in the specific conclusion that the Republic of Costa Rica should be brought into the family of Latin American relations. For example, I find that that Republic is contributing its quota of money to the Pan American Union, and yet the representative of the existing government of Costa Rica is denied the privilege of presenting his country's communications officially to the State Department.

Mr. President, if these various bodies are to be made an agency for cementing the relations between this Republic and the Republics to the south of us, I implore the Senator from Florida and other Senators on the other side of the Chamber to join in action which is much more direct and much more vital to those Republics than the mere appropriation of money, namely, by giving them official recognition and extending to them an official hand.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the committee struck out the provision for the International High Commission. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] feels that that provision should be reinstated. I have heretofore said a word or two about some of these apparently useless commissions. It is, of course, easy to construct some commission and then to point out the great work that it is doing, and we vote away the money in a free and easy way.

In the hearings before the House committee there is testimony as to this commission. Outside of printing a few pamphlets and books and after-dinner speeches on trips to South America, I do not find that this commission has done much of anything except to draw salaries and take a trip to South America with some Senators and Members of Congress under the chaperonage of the Secretary of the Treasury.

On page 59 of the House hearings there is an accounting of the former appropriation. Of the $40,000 appropriated, $23,453.32 was spent in salaries, $8,668.73 was spent in a South American trip of "United States section and staff." I do not know what the "staff" was. I have seen pictures of this distinguished commission, in high hats and black ties, traveling around on a battleship to South America; and, as I remember the newspaper reports, about all that we got out of that was trouble with Peru. Now, if it does any good, all right; but if it is merely an institution for joy rides on American battleships on the part of gentlemen in high hats, let us get rid of it.

This commission, however, has published some articles, and they appear to be very interesting articles. The titles appear on pages 59, 60, and 61 of the House hearings. They are such articles, for instance, as the following:

"The Feasibility and Desirability of Securing Uniformity of Legislation Governing Warrants (Warehouse Receipts) as a Means of Facilitating, Extending, and Guaranteeing Credit for Goods," an exceedingly interesting document.

"The Extension of the Means of Arbitration of Commercial Disputes." We have this Pan American Union over here, with its dinners and oratory, to cement the South American Republics with us.

"Uniformity of Regulations for Commercial Travelers and Their Samples in the American Republics."

"Memorandum on the Topics Submitted by the United States Section of the International High Commission to the Argentine Government, with a Favorable Recommendation for Inclusion in the Program of the First General Meeting of the International High Commission, at Buenos Aires"—high-sounding phrases, at least.

"Report of the United States section of the International High Commission on the first general meeting of the commission, held at Buenos Aires, April 3–12, 1916."

Then there are such interesting documents as the following:

"Importance of our South American Trade," by Hon. Andrew J. Peters, at the City Club, Boston, November 16, 1916.

"International High Commission," by Hon. W. G. McAdoo, at Conference of International High Commission at Buenos Aires, Argentina, April 4, 1916.

Address of Hon. Andrew J. Peters before the section of Legal Education of the American Bar Association on the subject of "The Importance of the Study of the Law of the Latin American Republics in Our Law Schools."

I will venture the statement that no one except the men who made the speeches has ever read any of these articles.

"Some International Aspects of Public Education," by Hon. W. G. McAdoo, at the annual convention of the National Educational Association, held in Madison Square Garden, New York City, on July 6, 1916. What has that to do with the International High Commission?

Another address by the Secretary of the Treasury at the first meeting of the commission in Buenos Aires.

Another address by the Secretary of the Treasury on "The Republic of Chile."

The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], I think, was on that trip to the South, and, of course, he feels very enthusiastic about the work of the International High Commission; but if there is anything on earth that they have ever done, outside of taking these delightful trips, I should like to know what it is.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he noticed the amount of salaries that had been paid?

Mr. KENYON. Yes. What did not go to pay for the trip to the South went to pay salaries.

Mr. CURTIS. I should also like to know if the Senator observed that many of these reports were printed and circulated as Senate or House documents?

Mr. KENYON. I had not observed that. That is very encouraging.

Mr. CURTIS. "The Republic of Chile," address by Hon W. G. McAdoo, is Senate Document No. 437, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session.

Mr. KENYON. Yes. You will find those all piled up somewhere, and never even circulated, and, of course, never read. They ought to be referred to the Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments.

I hope this item will go out as the committee has voted, and, I think, quite unanimously voted. These are small things, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has said; but if we never begin on anything because it is small we never are going to be able to cut down and pare down any of these appropriations. This is one bill that comes out of the committee cut down to the extent of about $500,000. I do hope we can establish a precedent here that there can be at least one bill in a session of Congress where the appropriations are cut down somewhat by the committee, and then sustained to some extent by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think it is my duty to send to the desk a letter I have just received in regard to this matter from the Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask that it be read?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, February 12, 1919.

MY DEAR SENATOR OVERMAN: Referring to our conversation over the telephone, I venture very briefly to emphasize one point which, perhaps, does not immediately occur to one when considering the need for an appropriation for the International High Commission. I refer to the unfortunate effect, both material and otherwise, which would be produced if the Congress of the United States were to cause the work of the central office of the commission to terminate at the end of this fiscal year by not appropriating funds for its continuance.

It is true that no hard and fast international convention or contract binds this Government to carry on the work of the central office of the commission. The obligation is rather a moral one, proceeding from the fact that it was this Government which called the first Pan American financial conference and urged the establishment of a permanent commission to bring about uniform commercial law and to remove the obstacles to closer financial and commercial relations between the American Republics. As in many other instances where international cooperation among the American Republics has required the outlay of funds in order that enduring and tangible results might be achieved, the burden of maintaining the central office of the commission from its outset and for some time to come properly belongs to the United States, both because of preeminence in population and in wealth among the free nations of the hemisphere and because nearly all the things that such international agencies can bring about inure directly to our interest and require legislative or administrative changes on the part of the Governments of Latin America.

The commission has a technical program, the successful realization of which requires careful study, frequent consultations, and, by no means least in importance, an adequate lapse of time in which matters of this sort may be handled with due regard for the views of all concerned. Nevertheless, in its 30 months of practical operation since the late spring of 1916 the commission has made a definite record of accomplishment and with a relatively small outlay. Notice that the Congress of the United States had decided to withdraw the relatively small appropriation for the maintenance of the central office of the commission would reach the Governments of Central and South America just at the time when various proposals submitted by that central office through the accustomed diplomatic channels were being given serious examination. It is not necessary for me to point out to you the unfortunate impression which this notice would cause.

I feel, therefore, my dear Senator, that it would be most unfortunate if the Congress were to withdraw the appropriation for the International High Commission, not only because of its disastrous effect upon the important work now before the commission, but also by reason of the unfavorable impression which such action would create throughout the countries of Central and South America.

I remain, my dear Senator OVERMAN,
Very cordially, yours,

CARTER GLASS.

Hon. LEE SLATER OVERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if he can inform the Senate to whom the salaries were paid out of the first appropriation of $40,000? I see that out of the $40,000 appropriated, $23,400 went for salaries.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have seen that, but I am sorry to say I can not give the detailed information now.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to suggest that that all appears in the House hearings?

Mr. CURTIS. I have the House hearings here, and it does not appear at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. Look at page 16.

Mr. CURTIS. It simply says that here is $23,000 for salaries. If there is an itemized statement of them I should like to see it.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator will look on page 58, he will see to whom the salaries have been going; and I want to say that not a member of the commission gets any salary or ever had any salary. Any imputation to that effect is utterly without any foundation.

Mr. KENYON. Who gets the salary?

Mr. FLETCHER. I say no member of the commission ever got any salary.

Mr. KENYON. No; but who does get the salary?

Mr. FLETCHER. On page 58 of the hearings you will find that the assistant secretary, Dr. McGuire, receives $3,600 per year. The juristic expert receives the same amount. The executive clerk receives $1,800 a year; and then follows the further statement. On page 52 you will find the organization as it appeared on October 7, 1918.

Mr. CURTIS. On page 58 of the hearings before the House committee there are only two salaries mentioned, assistant secretaries receiving $3,600; executive clerk, $1,800; and the report shows $23,453 paid out as salaries.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is, from the beginning of the commission—that means clerk hire.

Mr. CURTIS. But that is out of the $40,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; from the beginning, not last year or this year.

Mr. CURTIS. From February 16, 1916, to January 1, 1918.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; that includes the entire staff of the commission.

Mr. CURTIS. From October 1 to June 30, 1918, salaries, $8,900. I think the Senate ought to know what salaries have been paid and to whom the salaries have been paid.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question. Does the Senator find anything in the duties to be performed by this International High Commission that can not be equally performed under the general instruction or supervision of the Department of State, through its ministers and consular agents?

Mr. OVERMAN. I have just read a letter into the RECORD about that.

Mr. FLETCHER. This is a very active commission.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Secretary of the Treasury says that this country above all countries is interested in this matter, and he thinks we are morally bound to continue it. That is what he says.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not see why that work can not be done equally well by the request of the Secretary of the Treasury through the general instruction and supervision of the State Department, without this appropriation.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator is with the committee, then.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, but I was asking a question for information.

Mr. OVERMAN. The only information I have is from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SAULSBURY. My impression in regard to this particular commission is that it has been of rather more importance to us than a great many of the commissions provided by this Congress. I understand the chief objection to making appropriations for the International High Commission is that Secretary McAdoo went to South America on a warship. The commission did not pay for the warship. I am told it is a very active commission in considering questions relating to trade and commerce with South America. Among other things it has under consideration now the establishment of an international gold clearance fund to regulate exchange between this country and the countries of South America.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The duty devolves upon the Treasury Department to look after this question of exchange, and we have in addition to that the Federal Reserve Board, which is giving attention to that matter to my knowledge.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. KING. They are attempting to stabilize exchange between this Republic and the South American Republics. It seems to me that there is no reason for the perpetuation of this organization. Certainly the reason assigned by the Senator does not justify the appropriation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I only stated some information in regard to it. I do not think anybody can know too much about the subject. These gentlemen are some of the ablest gentlemen in the United States, men who are extremely able in regard to finance, who have had great experience, and it seems to me to be a very good reason for paying the small amount needed to continue this high commission.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not know the sore point was about the Secretary of the Treasury going to South America on a battleship. It may be, but at that time it was impossible to get transportation in any other way. That was in 1916, when we had no boats to go there. He went not on a battleship, but on a cruiser, the Tennessee, assigned by the Secretary of the Navy. This Joint High Commission is composed of 9 delegates from 20 Latin American countries, meeting in conference and dealing in convention with all these various subjects.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SAULSBURY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to state that I am one of the Senators who have been opposing this appropriation in the committee as well as on the floor, and the fact that Secretary McAdoo went to the south with this commission has had nothing to do with my opposition to it. I am opposed to it because I think it is unnecessary. I agree with the suggestion made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that this work could better be done by the Consular Service and through the Treasury Department asking our representatives there to gather this information.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I, of course, accept the Senator's statement and——

Mr. CURTIS. Another reason why I object to it is because out of the $40,000, $23,400 of it has gone for salaries.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I, of course, accept the Senator's statement in regard to the ground of his opposition. I was only sensing the result of this symposium to which I have been listening for the last hour or two about battleships and junket trips to South America. I am going to read to the Senate the names of the commissioners. I do not undertake to say that because some very eminent men are members of the commission there should be a useless commission continued, but I know very well that the men who are members of this commission would not engage in useless work, because they have other things to do that are useful. I desire to read to the Senate the names of the members of this commission:

Mr. McAdoo was chairman. He has been succeeded by Secretary Glass. I suppose that he is practically an ex officio member.

Hon. John Bassett Moore is vice chairman, and I think attends to the duties of the chair, whatever they may be. I think his opinion in regard to matters relating to Latin America or on any matter that might come before any international commission would be most valuable.

Mr. John H. Fahey has been the head of the United States Chamber of Commerce. Practically all of us know him and know what sort of a man he is, how well he stands, and how useful his work is.

Senator FLETCHER, of course, we know personally.

Andrew J. Peters was a Member of Congress for years and went into the Treasury as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and they thought so much of him in his home town of Boston that he is now the mayor of it.

As to Samuel Untermyer and Paul Warburg, of course, to mention those names is to refer to two men who are of the brightest and most intellectual type in America.

It seems to me if these men are willing to give their services in connection with a commission of this kind, which I believe is active, we should continue it. I have a sort of recollection, although I will not be positive, that on the recommendation of this commission we have passed through Congress certain laws relating to trade and commerce and banking which they have recommended. I will not state that as an absolute fact, because I can not refer to the acts. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] suggests to me that they were acts relating to commercial travelers and trade-marks. Anyone knows how important those acts are to trade. I do not think these commissions can be cut up by the roots and destroyed on information that is presented in a catch-as-catch-can debate in the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the Senator know how extensively commercial travelers from this country visit South American countries?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have heard some very ridiculous stories about the way they try to do business when they get there in competition with European commercial travelers.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator has been to South American countries he has found that there are very few commercial travelers who visit those countries, and that is one of the main reasons why we have not more trade with South American countries. We try to do it through the medium of catalogues.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest to the Senator that one reason is that we find a tax in every State and town and county, almost, in South America that has to be paid. They have to pay a separate tax wherever they go, in every State, every county, and every city throughout South America. The work of this commission has been to eliminate that and have one tax for each country, one for Brazil, one for Chile, and thereby facilitate our commercial relations.

Another thing is that under a law, for instance, of Argentina, in regard to registering trade-marks, the person first registering it becomes entitled to rights and privileges under it. Some time ago there was a shipment of a cargo of freight to Buenos Aires. It went out by an American manufacturer under a trade-mark. It was found down there that the goods were coming and some one in Buenos Aires immediately registered that trade-mark in his own name, and when the American goods arrived and were ready to be delivered in Buenos Aires there stood this fellow ready to confiscate the entire outfit, because he said they were infringing his trade-mark. The work of this commission is to do away with this sort of thing and they are doing it.

Mr. MOSES and Mr. CURTIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am ready to yield to the other Senators until they have finished.

Mr. CURTIS. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I did not mean to express it in any offensive way, because I was enjoying what other Senators had to say. I trust the Senator will understand me.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield the floor?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I yield the floor?

Mr. MOSES. The recital made by the Senator from Florida compels me to delve once more into my own experience and to state that this commission could not possibly have functioned in the manner he describes, because a commission created as this and acting under the authority which this bill describes the commission to possess could not have access to the ministers and other agencies of government in the Argentine. They could be an agency of a complaint, that complaint, however, to be registered at the foreign office by the ambassador, who alone had access to the ministry for that purpose.

Again I say that the debate on this item has brought out as it has in numerous other instances in the consideration of this bill the absolutely extravagant manner in which we have multiplied machinery in our foreign relations and have separate, cumbersome, and costly pieces of mechanism all trying to do the same piece of work.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I only want to say I did not mean to convey the idea that the commission went in and intervened and actually remedied the troubles which I have indicated as existing in carrying on our trade with South America, or that the commission can correct them, but what I am attempting to impress upon the minds of Senators is that it is the work of the commission, composed as it is of representatives of all these countries, to bring them together and agree upon legislation and upon conventions that will remedy these troubles. We have to have on agency like that to effect legislation in the various Republics and agreements that will correct by further legislation and by conventions the difficulties which I mention. I do not mean that the commission have authority to go in and do this, that, or the other, but it brings about through the various members of the commission in the various Republics coordinating legislative action and executive action to relieve those difficulties.

Mr. MOSES. In other words, the commission is an international lobby.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, when this specific item first appeared in the bill there was opposition to it at that time. The opposition was silenced, however, by stating that the Secretary of the Treasury had already, through the President of the United States, issued an invitation to these people to attend this convention to be held in the United States. At that time I stated if it ever got into the bill it would be next to impossible to get it out. I think that more than likely will be true, for it has continued in the bill since the first appropriation was made in 1916.

Mr. President, is this International High Commission organized to secure commerce for the United States from South American countries or any other countries in the world? If so, we find another duplication of work such as we have been discussing this afternoon. The Department of Commerce in the legislative appropriation bill that has already passed the Senate, and the conferees are now ready to report on it, carries nearly $1,000,000 for this purpose. The pending appropriation bill carries nearly the same amount, duplicating the work. It is a wicked waste of money.

It is true, Mr. President, that this $25,000 is only a small drop in the bucket which does not amount to anything, or perhaps it is so insignificant nowadays that we ought not to pay any attention to it. But the longer this item remains in the bill the harder it will be to get it out. It will be hoary headed in a little while, and you will never get it out of the appropriation bill in any way.

Mr. President, I do not care for an appropriation of any kind where it takes 50 per cent of the appropriation to pay employees located in the District of Columbia. If we are going to expend any money, let us expend it and let those who are paid for the work go where we expect to have results.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. FRANCE. Does the Senator mean to say that he does not believe in making the world safe for democracy?

Mr. SMOOT. I believe in making it safe for liberty, and that is the only thing we have ever voted to appropriate money for. I do not care by what name it is called; that is what we intended to do, and that is what we have undertaken to do.

It would be very interesting, Mr. President, to suggest the names of the employees paid from this appropriation. Perhaps it would be unwise for me to refer to any of them in any way, but if we want to just throw money away it would be better to put it this way if we want to employ a certain number of people in the District of Columbia, just keep up this kind of an appropriation.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to state to the Senator that he need not have any worry about knowing who are the employees. I am sure there is no secret about it. If he wants to know who they are all he needs to do is to ask. They are supposed to be set out in the hearings. I have the hearings here and there is no secret about it.

Mr. SMOOT. The names of the commissioners are set out. I have not a word to say about the commissioners, but I want to say to the Senate that the commissioners give so little time to the work of the commission that it is hardly worthy of consideration. I was delighted with the action of the committee in striking this item from the bill and I sincerely hope that the Senate of the United States will support the committee in it.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in order to save the time of the Senate, so that it can attend to public business, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an editorial from the New York Times of February 25, entitled "Mr. Wilson's return."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WOLCOTT in the chair). Without objection——

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I also make the same request——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the first request of the Senator from Mississippi be disposed of. Does the Senator from Utah make any objection to the first request of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. I merely wish to say a word. I think, Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi has already asked today to have put into the RECORD two or three editorials. I want to say to the Senator from Mississippi that every page of the RECORD costs the Government of the United States over $60. I thought that I would say nothing about the filling of the RECORD with editorials until after the 4th of March——

Mr. WILLIAMS. This editorial is on the league of nations, and it will not take up any more time than it would to fill the RECORD with the speeches which have been made by Senators upon the subject.

I will furthermore say to the Senator from Utah that it will not cost the Government any more for me to have these editorials inserted in the RECORD without reading them than for me to have to read them in my place, which, of course, I have a right to do. The Government, therefore, does not save a dollar should objection be made to their insertion in the RECORD without reading. I want the President's side of this matter to be heard.

Now, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an editorial from the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin of New York of February 25, entitled "The league of nations."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object, because I know the Senator from Mississippi can take the time of the Senate to read the editorials into the RECORD. I simply call the Senator's attention to the fact I have stated; and if he desires to take into consideration the expense that it is to the Government I should like to have him do so. If not, I am not going to object. Let the editorials go in.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, has my request been granted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the requests of the Senator from Mississippi are granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Times of Feb. 25, 1919.]

MR. WILSON'S RETURN.

"I have not come to report the proceedings or the results of the proceedings of the peace conference," said the President in his brief address in Boston yesterday. Nevertheless, he did make a report, and a most inspiring report, upon the great purposes which guide the deliberations of the conference. The war has wrought a spiritual transformation among the peoples of the world, and Mr. Wilson has labored with unflagging zeal to help on that transformation. He returns from great labors and great triumphs abroad to new labors here, in which we predict for him new triumphs not less brilliant. The people will welcome him all the more warmly because, although they regretted his departure, they now understand the immense value of his service in Paris. They feel that without him the progress of the conference in the greater works it has undertaken could not have been so marked, and, although they felt that he was much needed at his post here, they perceive that the business of the executive department has not visibly suffered from his absence. He has proved that the ocean is no more a barrier to the transaction of public business than it is to private business.

The President defers his exposition of the league of nations plan, but he brings a message which the American people may profitably ponder while they are awaiting what he has to say on that subject:

"The peoples of Europe are buoyed up and confident in the spirit of hope," he told his Boston audience, "because they believe that we are at the eve of a new age in the world when nations will understand one another, when nations will unite every moral and every physical strength to see that right shall prevail."

That is the very soul of the league of nations. We can imagine that the senatorial opponents of the league will dismiss it as another example of Mr. Wilson's idealism. Then, what in the name of reason and right is their ideal? What is their plan? With what projects and proposals will they respond to this spirit of hope that possesses the peoples of Europe and the people of this country as well?

Not one suggestion of any other plan, any substitute proposal of a defense against the horrors of war, any hint of a means by which the feeling of cordial friendship between the nations united against Germany, the intense longing for an assurance of peace and justice among nations, that can be turned to account has come from any of the senatorial sneerers at Mr. Wilson's ideals.

They seek to destroy what he has helped to create; they have given no sign that they would create anything themselves. For all that they have said to the contrary, we may assume that they would be quite willing to declare the forfeiture of every permanent gain secured by the war, and see the world revert to the prewar condition, with every nation which cherishes a ruthless ambition left free to fall upon its neighbors with fire and sword—in short, all this agony to be gone through with again and again.

The President has a very different conception of the world in its present temper. He sees the nations eager to unite in a society of peace, as partners bound by articles of association that make right and justice the rule of conduct. His senatorial opponents see the nations still "red in tooth and claw" from the last deadly struggle, secretly harboring the purpose of new ravenings. And, the most astounding thing of all, they present to our view the United States as the intended victim of their onslaught, a weak and defenseless little lamb unsuspectingly putting its head into the snare which they have contrived to strangle it. It is our opinion that Mr. Wilson is a more competent witness to the present spirit and temper of the nations than the Senators who oppose him. It is our belief, too, that the event will show him to have a profounder understanding than they now have of the feeling of the American people in respect to the league of nations.

—

[From the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin, of Feb. 25, 1919.]

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

The great question before our people to-day is the position the Nation is to assume in regard to the terms of peace and the means of preserving it when established, and insuring safety for the future against such terrible sufferings as have been undergone since the 1st of August, 1914. The position of the President of the United States is well known and it should become fully understood. It seems to be his purpose to make it so and to rally the people to its support so far as that is possible. The league of nations plan is not to be regarded as exclusively or mainly his, though he has exerted a strong influence in giving it form for consideration at the conference in Paris and no doubt will continue to exert it in whatever modification it may undergo and in securing agreement for its support by all the allies and associated powers. It is not a personal or even an official matter with him, but a national issue for a people united in favor of free and progressive government, as the result of the most terrible and destructive conflict in history, a repetition of which on a still more dreadful scale is to be prevented.

The doctrine on which the plan for a league of nations is based is distinctly American, and it is the general sentiment of the country that has given it birth, and no design of an individual leader or any special organization. There has been no formulation of it here in advance of the occasion calling it forth, but it came from the spirit awakened when the Government of the Republic was organized under the statesmanship of Washington's day. It is consistent with that and with the strengthening of it in the time of Monroe, when England joined with America in something comparable in a minor way with a league for safety and peace between the nations of two continents separated by a wide ocean, at a time when the separation was far greater than it is now. The development of the last century has overcome that separation to an extent that brings the nations on the two sides of the ocean into closer relations than they had on either side in those days. The doctrine, not of Washington or Monroe, but of the statesmanship of their time, has become applicable to the nations of the world for their safety and the rights of their subjects.

The President of the United States has amply justified his purpose in going over to take part in the consultation of representatives of other nations, whatever may have been the doubt about it when he went. The main result thus far has been the formulation of the plan for a league of nations, and his return after the term of Congress expires will be justified by the need of his influence for completing it, not his influence as an individual, but as the official representative of the Nation, its principles of government, and its spirit of liberty and progress. His landing at Boston was evidently in view of the need of appealing to the sentiment of the country in advance of his arrival at the National Capital. That sentiment is not yet well developed or fairly directed, and the New England States were an appropriate place for starting the direct appeal and setting it on the move to the West and South before meeting the representatives of the Nation as a whole in Congress at Washington.

He had already arranged for a preliminary meeting there with Members of the two Houses who constitute their committees on foreign relations of the Government and foreign affairs of the people, for consultation on what should be done in behalf of our Government and of the Nation in association with other nations for a common purpose. His main object is to secure as complete an agreement as possible in support of the plan for a league of nations. There is now no reasonable ground for failing to do so, but most potent reasons why it should be done without further dispute or contention.

Our people should be impressed with the idea that this is no political design aimed at our domestic administration or the internal affairs of the country, except in their relation to the affairs of other nations with which we inevitably must have closer connection than ever before, for the common progress and general welfare and the safety of the world. It must be remembered that the representatives of our Government at Paris are not acting independently with reference to our interests at home, but in association with those of a number of powerful European nations and a larger number of the less powerful whose destiny is at stake. It is no narrow or domestic question, but one affecting our relations now and in the future, with the leading nations of the Eastern Continent, upon which our future success, progress, and safety, as well as theirs, will largely depend. It is a time for the United States of America to exhibit its character and maintain its reputation, and for that it is necessary to hold a leading place among the nations, for maintaining a peace of high civilization and preventing war hereafter which might prove more destructive and frightful in consequences than that which we took a decisive part in ending.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President, I want to make one remark in about two sentences.

In the first place, I am adding nothing to the expenses of the Government; secondly, I am putting nothing into the RECORD that is not pertinent to a matter of the greatest importance that is now being discussed by the Senate.

Mr. OVERMAN. I must object. I want to go on with the pending bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the objection?

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand the Senator has had permission to have inserted in the RECORD the editorials he desired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request has been granted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That has gone and passed.

In the third place, Mr. President, I find by actual intellectual experience that the great editors of the great metropolitan newspapers of this country write so much better than Senators speak that the contribution I am making to the RECORD is, in my opinion, more valuable than are the speeches which have been made upon the same subject.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14516) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill how long he expects to proceed with its consideration?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think there are only a few items left which will cause any debate. My idea is that we can get through with the bill in about half an hour.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am willing to come back here at 8 o'clock. I dislike to keep dragging along here every evening until about 7 o'clock and then having trouble getting a quorum. We have not anything like a quorum present, and I suggest to the Senator that he move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Senator not to call for a quorum. I think we can get through by 7 o'clock.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think we ought to get away from here before 7 o'clock.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think we can finish the bill before that time.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have a yea-and-nay vote on this matter if there is going to be any real objection to the action of the committee. I do not, however, want to call for the yeas and nays on it, if it is not necessary to do so.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator had just as well call for a yea-and-nay vote, for we are not going to have the thing go by default.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Senator from North Carolina had better let the bill go over until to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator to have this matter passed over temporarily.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let us pass this over temporarily, Mr. President, and see how long it will take to conclude the consideration of the amendments not objected to. I ask that the item be temporarily passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be temporarily passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Waterways Treaty, United States and Great Britain: International Joint Commission, United States and Great Britain," on page 17, line 19, before the words "per day," to strike out "$8" and insert "$6," so as to make the clause read:

For salaries and expenses, including salaries of commissioners and salaries of clerks and other employees appointed by the commissioners on the part of the United States, with the approval solely of the Secretary of State, including rental of offices at Washington, D. C., expense of printing, and necessary traveling expenses, and for one-half of all reasonable and necessary joint expenses of the International Joint Commission incurred under the terms of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the use of boundary waters between the United States and Canada and for other purposes, signed January 11, 1909, $75,000, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for subsistence of the commission or secretary, except for actual and necessary expenses, not in excess of $6 per day each, when absent from Washington on official business.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Fifth International Conference of American States," on page 18, line 7, before the word "appropriation," to strike out "The" and insert "Not exceeding $25,000 of the," so as to make the clause read:

Not exceeding $25,000 of the appropriation of $75,000 "to meet the actual and necessary expenses of the delegates of the United States to the Fifth International Conference of American States, to be held at the city of Santiago, Chile, beginning in September, 1914, and of their clerical assistants, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of State," made in the act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and extended and made available for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1916, 1917, 1918, and 1919, not having been expended, is hereby extended and made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 19, to strike out:

INTERNATIONAL GEODETIC ASSOCIATION FOR THE MEASUREMENT OF THE EARTH.

To enable the Government of the United States to pay its quota as an adhering member of the International Geodetic Association for the Measurement of the Earth, $1,500: Provided, however, That the sums expended by the United States for the maintenance of the International Latitude Observatory at Ukiah, Cal., and for the continuance of the international latitude work there until the International Geodetic Association shall find it possible to resume its support of the observatory, shall be deducted from the quota due from the United States as such adhering member.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 12, to strike out:

NINETEENTH CONFERENCE INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION.

The appropriation of $40,000 "For the purpose of defraying the expenses in Washington City incident to the Nineteenth Conference of the Interparliamentary Union, to be held in Washington in 1915, to be expended under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe," made in the act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and extended and made available for the calendar years 1916, 1917, 1918, and 1919, not having been expended, is hereby extended and made available for the calendar year 1920: Provided, That said sum may, in the discretion of the Secretary of State, be expended within the United States, but not elsewhere: Provided further, That an itemized account of all expenditures shall be reported to Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 3, to strike out:

INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION ON PUBLIC AND PRIVATE INTERNATIONAL LAW.

The appropriation of $15,000 for the payment of compensation to and the necessary expenses of the representative or representatives of the United States on the international commission of jurists, organized under the convention signed at the Third International American Conference August 23, 1906, approved by the Senate February 3, 1908, and ratified by the President February 8, 1908, for the purpose of preparing drafts of codes of public and private international law; and for the payment of the quota of the United States of the expenses incident to the preparation of such drafts, including the compensation of experts under article 4 of the convention, made in the act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and extended and made available for the fiscal years 1916, 1917, 1918, and 1919, not having been expended, is hereby extended and made available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Salaries of the Consular Service," on page 21, line 2, after the word "service," to strike out "$1,974,500" and insert "$1,849,500," so as to make the clause read:

For salaries of consuls general, consuls, and vice consuls, as provided in the act approved February 5, 1915, entitled "An act for the improvement of the foreign service," $1,849,500. Every consul general, consul, vice consul, and, wherever practicable, every consular agent shall be an American citizen.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 7, after the word "Total," to strike out "$2,009,500" and insert "$1,884,500," so as to make the clause read:

Total, $1,884,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, after line 7, to insert:

PAYMENT TO MRS. NATALIE SUMMERS.

To Mrs. Natalie Summers, widow of Madden Summers, late consul general to Moscow, $5,500, one year's salary of her deceased husband, who died at his post of duty.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Expenses of consular inspectors," on page 21, line 18, before the words "per day," to strike out "$8" and insert "$6," so as to make the clause read:

EXPENSES OF CONSULAR INSPECTORS.

For the actual and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses of consular inspectors while traveling and inspecting under instructions from the Secretary of State, $25,000: Provided, That inspectors shall be allowed actual and necessary expenses for subsistence, itemized, not exceeding an average of $6 per day.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the Senate disagree to that amendment, because in another clause of this bill a similar committee amendment has been disagreed to, and the provisions of the bill should be made to conform to one another.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina will find on page 17, in line 19, that a similar amendment was made.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask to reconsider the vote whereby that amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to reconsidering the vote whereby the amendment on page 17, line 19, was agreed to?

Mr. SAULSBURY. What is that amendment?

The SECRETARY. On page 17, line 19, an amendment was agreed to striking out "$8" and inserting "$6."

Mr. OVERMAN. In view of the fact that on motion of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] a similar amendment was rejected, I desire to make the provisions of the bill conform to each other, and I ask that the amendment just stated by the Secretary be rejected.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MOSES. The effect of the motion by the Senator from North Carolina will be to make this allowance in all cases $8 a day?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is what the Chair understands. Is there objection to reconsidering the vote whereby the amendment on page 17, line 19, was agreed to? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, on page 21, line 18.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Post allowances to consular and diplomatic officers," on page 22, line 9, after the word "allowances" to strike out "during pendency of existing war and for six months after its termination," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the President, in his discretion and in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe, to make special allowances by way of additional compensation to consular and diplomatic officers and consular assistants and officers of the United States Court for China in order to adjust their official income to the ascertained cost of living at the posts to which they may be assigned, $700,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what this appropriation of $700,000 will be used for? As I understand, compensation is provided in the bill for consular and diplomatic officers and for the various and necessary employees of the State Department. I am not clear, as the bill does not indicate the use to which the $700,000 is to be put.

Mr. OVERMAN. The amount is to compensate or to try to compensate our consular and diplomatic officers on account of the high cost of living, especially in China, where it has been found they can not live on their salaries. It is intended to allow the Secretary of State for the time being to give them what are called "allowances" or additional sums to enable them to pay their expenses.

Mr. KING. Has there been any estimate or have any figures been submitted showing that this amount is necessary?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; the committee went thoroughly into this matter and had figures from the department and letters from ambassadors and consuls.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I should like to ask, if the Senator from Utah will permit me, is this a new provision?

Mr. OVERMAN. This provision has been made during the war.

Mr. PENROSE. Oh; during the war?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PENROSE. The war is over, and I thought perhaps we could stop these lump-sum appropriations.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is left to the discretion of the Secretary of State, and, of course, as the price of living goes down he can reduce the allowances.

Mr. PENROSE. Now that the war is over, I thought we were going to stop leaving anything to the discretion of the heads of the executive departments.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think it can be done in this instance because of the excessive cost of living in foreign countries.

Mr. PENROSE. Then we ought to raise the salaries and not camouflage the situation.

Mr. OVERMAN. It would be impossible to get this Congress to do that, and Congress ought not to do it. This provision will only be required for a short time; it is only temporary.

Mr. PENROSE. It looks like an attempt to do by indirection what would encounter failure if attempted directly. I do not suppose that it is possible to defeat this paragraph. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] suggests to me that the phrase "during the war" has been left out. Was that in previous bills?

Mr. SMOOT. It was in the previous bills, and the House put in this bill the words "during pendency of existing war and for six months after its termination." That was stricken out by the committee.

Mr. PENROSE. I hope the language of the House bill will be restored and that the Senate committee amendment will be disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is about to be put upon agreeing to that amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. Then, I hope it will not be agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to say that we had a great deal of evidence presented to us, showing what it costs to live in foreign countries. It is almost impossible for these officers to live on these salaries, and prices are just as high now, and will be for the next year, as they were during the war.

Mr. PENROSE. Let us leave it as the House had it.

Mr. OVERMAN. If this item shall go out of the bill, then these officers will not be able to properly feed and clothe themselves. We have had a great many resignations because of the fact that they could not live on their salaries. Men receiving $1,500 and $2,000 a year stationed in cities in foreign countries can not live on such salaries.

Mr. PENROSE. I never heard of any resignations under the present administration in any of these places.

Mr. OVERMAN. There have been a great many threatened resignations during the war.

Mr. PENROSE. There have been enforced resignations on the part of officers belonging to the minority party.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not in the Consular Service.

Mr. PENROSE. I know of a number from Pennsylvania who were invited to resign.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I think possibly I can give an explanation of this item which seems to me reasonable. I happened to be in the room of the Committee on Appropriations when some of the testimony was being taken in regard to this bill, and I was impressed by the statement of the Acting Secretary of State and the head of the Consular Service that the rate of exchange of American money into foreign money all over the world is so uncertain that the State Department has found it desirable to arrange so that when exchange is very much disturbed these officers may be allowed, as I understand, something of an arbitrary rate of exchange, of which advice is sent to the resident consuls from the State Department. My understanding of this appropriation is that it is to meet such cases where great hardship would ensue unless the State Department had some power to relieve the situation. I do not think it is in any sense a proposition to increase salaries, but it is to fix for the time being an arbitrary rate of exchange.

I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that that condition will continue for a long time even after there is a formal declaration of peace. We are not fighting anybody just now, but the financial conditions in all countries throughout the world and the state of trade between us and the other countries of the world will have a tendency to upset the rate of exchange everywhere. This appropriation is to allow a certain liberty of discretion in the State Department to make those adjustments. I think that is the object of the provision.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that every consular officer in Chile resigned because they could not live on the salaries paid without some additional allowance. I should like to read in this connection a statement made in the hearings before the committee:

> The history of prices after previous wars shows that as a rule prices have been higher 12 months after the war than they were during the war, and that they did not really fall to anywhere near the prewar level for several years after the war; so that if you were to strike out this appropriation six months after the treaty of peace is signed, I am perfectly certain that you would destroy our service in several countries.
>
> If you will remember, when I came before the committee last year and asked you to remove one of the limitations on the appropriation, I said that I then had in my hands a telegram from the consul general in Chile transmitting the resignations of every officer in Chile. We also came very near having a complete disintegration of the service in China. You saved that by extending this appropriation to China. So I am quite sure that you are going to have that exact situation repeated if this language remains, terminating the appropriation six months after the war; whereas if you will repeat the existing appropriation, Senator, the State Department can be depended upon to make a real effort to gradually readjust this whole question of post allowances until we can get back to somewhere near a prewar level, as nearly as the prices will permit us to do so.

This is Mr. Carr, by the way, a Republican gentleman who has been in that office for years and years, and who knows what he is talking about.

Mr. PENROSE. That is probably the only reason why he has been retained—because he was needed there.

Mr. OVERMAN. There are many others there.

Mr. PENROSE. Would the Senator have any objection to making this "during pendency of existing war and for one year after its termination"?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think we ought to make it "one year"; just leave it alone.

Mr. PENROSE. No; I do not want to make it a permanent policy of the Government to continue this wasteful method of distributing lump sums.

Mr. OVERMAN. Why, this is only an appropriation for one year.

Mr. PENROSE. I know it is, but there is nothing in the bill to show that it is to be discontinued.

Mr. OVERMAN. You people, when you take charge of the Senate, can change it if you want to. I am carrying out what the department say is necessary. They say that these men can not live; they resign; they threaten to get out all the time; and that you will absolutely disintegrate the whole service if these words are not stricken out.

Mr. PENROSE. I only want the distinct assertion in the bill that it is a temporary proposition. I will not oppose it, and will not detain the Senate on it, if the Senator will accept an amendment to restore the House language, making it 12 months instead of 6 months.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think we ought to leave it as it is. I really think this is very, very important. An absolutely new bill will come in next July.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that this section of the bill aims to do a very good thing in a very bad way.

Mr. PENROSE. That is it.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], I think, has been led into error by the language of this section, inasmuch as it is on page 7 that provision is made for the payment of loss by exchange. The payment of loss by exchange has been a permanent feature of the compensation of consular and diplomatic officers. It has varied from time to time. Occasionally a diplomatic officer may profit by exchange; but in case he loses, the Government always makes him good, the assumption of the Government being that a foreign representative is paid in gold the full face of his salary at the place of his residence; and that is taken care of by the language which appears at the top of page 7 of the bill, which, to my mind, needs some slight amendment, which I intend to offer when occasion arises.

This provision, Mr. President, while inserted in the bill in the first instance to take care of the acute situation growing out of the war and the world-wide increase in the cost of living, covers also a situation which has been chronic in our foreign service. The inadequacy of the salaries paid to our foreign representatives is notorious. The United States is the only government in the world which sends its ministers and ambassadors to the capitals where they are accredited and leaves them there homeless. We are the only government in the world that compels its foreign representatives, out of their own pockets, to pay the chief expenses of the Government's representation on post. This provision aims to rectify in some degree that injustice which has so long characterized our foreign service; and while I agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania that we should not resort to camouflage in doing a thing which is entirely justifiable upon every ground, it does seem to me that it is entirely necessary to leave this measure, in order that we may have this as a basis when the next Diplomatic and Consular bill is taken up, from which to compute the reasonable salaries which should be paid to our representatives abroad.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I can not agree with my esteemed colleague from New Hampshire that we should proceed in this way—an irregular way, which I sincerely hope we will not witness a repetition of with the expiration of this Congress—deceiving the taxpayers and the American public in general. We proclaim a schedule of salaries, and appropriate a total amount, and then we hide away here a provision of almost $1,000,000—a small amount in the minds of some, but it will look larger when the taxes under the new revenue bill come to be paid—for accomplishing by indirection what the acting chairman of the committee admits Congress would not be willing to do if he came out in a candid, straightforward way and asked for an increase of salaries.

This is a very old question in the Senate. The Senator from New Hampshire is entirely correct in stating that we have always—it is an American tradition—not paid our diplomatic and consular personnel adequately; but why begin now to do a thing that is a deceit upon the taxpayers and the public? That is what I complain of.

The acting chairman said he could not get through the Senate a bill directly providing for larger salaries. I am willing, so far as I am concerned, to vote for increased salaries. We have had this matter debated in the Senate many times. I remember that the late Senator Gallinger spoke at great length some 10 or 15 years ago on this very question.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will say that Senator Gallinger supported this provision in the last committee.

Mr. PENROSE. Because it was limited to the war.

Mr. OVERMAN. Well, times have not changed so far as the war is concerned.

Mr. PENROSE. All of us supported things while the war was on that most of us in the minority have registered a solemn oath we will not continue to support.

Mr. OVERMAN. This is an exception, as the Senator will see from the testimony, if he will read it.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not care anything about the testimony. That goes to the root of the evil, that we underpay these men; but it is no excuse for deceiving the American public. I want them to know, if this bill passes, that the acting chairman of the committee has stated here in the open Senate that he could not get a bill through providing for increased salaries, but that he is willing to resort to camouflage and indirection to get nearly a million dollars for a purpose he did not dare ask the Congress for directly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I said that I was in favor of increased salaries, but they can not live on the present salaries. It is impossible for us to rearrange this whole system at this Congress; and I am willing—and that is no camouflage—to leave it in the discretion of the President of the United States, according to the form laid down here, when a man can not live on his salary, to allow him enough to live on, so as to hold his service there. That is no camouflage.

Mr. PENROSE. Why does not the Senator increase the salaries directly?

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator knows that we can not rearrange every salary in the United States in a bill of this kind.

Mr. PENROSE. Not every salary in the United States, but the salaries carried in this comparatively small bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. I mean in foreign countries.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I suggest that in this instance the evidence showed that the prices so differed in different sections of the same country that it would be impossible to raise the salaries so as to satisfy all concerned? For instance, if the Senator will observe in the report, in one place a suit of clothes cost $125. In another town in the same country a suit of clothes cost $150; in another, $180. In one town a pair of shoes cost $70, in another town $25, and in another town $50 to $75.

Mr. PENROSE. That disparity has existed for a hundred years.

Mr. CURTIS. Not to that extent.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not know about that.

Mr. CURTIS. Not in the same country. I am talking now about the same country. These are different cities in the same country.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE WILLIAM P. BORLAND.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, after consultation with the Senator in charge of the bill, as he has no objection to the resolution being offered at this time, I am going to ask unanimous consent to claim the indulgence of the Senate. First, I ask that the resolutions of the House of Representatives be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
February 22, 1919.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. WILLIAM P. BORLAND, a Representative from the State of Missouri.

Resolved, That a committee of 20 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House by authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I offer the following resolutions and ask for their adoption.

The resolutions (S. Res. 468) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM P. BORLAND, late a Representative from the State of Missouri.

Resolved, That a committee of 10 Senators be appointed by the Vice President, to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, to attend the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I move, out of respect for the memory of the late Representative BORLAND, that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 26, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 25, 1919.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We lift up our hearts in gratitude to Thee, our Father in Heaven, that the President of the United States has landed safely on the shores of America from over the sea, where he went on a mission to assist in establishing a world-wide peace.

We pray that his wisdom may have enlightened the entente powers on the gigantic problems which confronted them; that he may be able to make plain to our people the constitution of the peace league entered into by the wise men who framed it; that it may fulfill its purpose and insure to all the world the peace which all good men have prayed for from time immemorial. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 227. Joint resolution creating a committee to consider arranging for the celebration of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims;

S. 5555. An act to amend the war-risk insurance act;

S. 5313. An act authorizing a commission to acquire and maintain a cemetery in France in the name of the United States for the reception and interment of the bodies of American officers and men who lost their lives in connection with the European war, and to appropriate $500,000 therefor, and for other purposes;

S. 2933. An act for the relief of the Philippine Scouts;

S. 4893. An act transferring the tract of land known as Craney Island from the jurisdiction of the War Department to the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department and transferring the tract of land known as Fishermans Island from the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department to the jurisdiction of the War Department;

S. 4947. An act to provide for a survey and classification by the Secretary of the Interior of all unentered public lands of the United States and all unused, cut-over, logged, and swamp lands and other unused lands of the United States, with a view to disposing thereof to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors and others, and for other purposes; and

S. 4970. An act to amend the first paragraph of section 302 of the act entitled "An act to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war," approved March 8, 1918.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 10891) to amend and reenact "An act for the establishment of a probation system for the District of Columbia," in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill with the following title:

H. R. 13037. An act to amend the fiftieth article of war.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 13277) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. HARDWICK, Mr. SMITH of Arizona, and Mr. CURTIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had excused Mr. FRANCE on his own request from further service as a conferee on the bill (H. R. 13026) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines, and Mr. LENROOT was appointed in his place.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 204. An act to provide for the fitting up of quarters in the post-office building at the city of Sacramento, Cal., for the accommodation of the district court of the northern district of California and its officers; and

H. R. 3217. An act providing for an increase of authorization for the Federal building at Steubenville, in the State of Ohio.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 4723. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, bills and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 4893. An act transferring the tract of land known as Craney Island from the jurisdiction of the War Department to the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department and transferring the tract of land known as Fishermans Island from the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department to the jurisdiction of the War Department; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 4947. An act to provide for a survey and classification by the Secretary of the Interior of all unentered public lands of the United States and all unused, cut-over, logged, and swamp lands and other unused lands of the United States, with a view to disposing thereof to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors and others, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 4970. An act to amend the first paragraph of section 302 of the act entitled "An act to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war," approved March 8, 1918; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 5555. An act to amend the war-risk insurance act; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 2933. An act for the relief of the Philippine Scouts; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 5313. An act authorizing a commission to acquire and maintain a cemetery in France in the name of the United States for the reception and interment of the bodies of American officers and men who lost their lives in connection with the European war, and to appropriate $500,000 therefor, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. J. Res. 227. Joint resolution creating a committee to consider arranging for the celebration of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims; to the Committee on Rules.

ATLAS LUMBER CO. ET AL.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up S. 4225.

The SPEAKER. What is the parliamentary status of it?

Mr. SCHALL. It has been reported out of the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there a House bill of the same import on the calendar?

Mr. SCHALL. This bill is on the calendar.

Mr. GARD. May we have the bill reported?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of S. 4225. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (S. 4225) for the relief of the Atlas Lumber Co.; Babcock & Willcox; Johnson, Jackson & Corning Co.; and the C. H. Klein Brick Co., each of which companies furnished to Silas N. Opdahl, a failing Government contractor, certain building materials which were used in the construction of Burke Hall at the Pierre Indian School, in the State of South Dakota.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. I intend to object——

The SPEAKER. Well, then, the gentleman had better do it now.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

HOSPITAL AND SANATORIUM FACILITIES FOR DISCHARGED SOLDIERS, ETC.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 13026, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table H. R. 13026, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 13026) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanatorium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the Senate amendment is radically different from the bill as it passed the House. The House took certain action on some fundamental propositions, one in particular denying the privilege of these hospitals to any person who might be entitled to treatment by the Public Health Service. We all know the ambitions of the Public Health Service to make this a national agency for cure-alls of every sort and kind. I am not willing to have this bill go to conference unless we can have some assurance that it will come back in a way along the lines on which it passed the House.

Mr. BURNETT. If the gentleman has reference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], I am very much in favor of that amendment myself, and I shall insist on its being retained in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not now recall what that amendment was.

Mr. BURNETT. That struck out the treatment generally of people by the Public Health Service, confining it to soldiers, sailors, and marines, Army nurses, and some others—just as it passed the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Limiting it to those designated in the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. BURNETT. Yes; I shall favor that and shall insist on it, and I believe that the conferees will do the same thing.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Senate amendment also provides for taking over a large number of hospitals, which would involve the Government in tremendous expense in the future. I think we ought not to go wild at the present time in the expenditure of money for such purposes as these. Here is one for Cook County, involving the expenditure of $3,000,000. We have not had any time to investigate the merits of the proposition. There are others involving the expenditure of $7,000,000.

Mr. BURNETT. I want to say that I will have to be convinced that we ought to designate any particular hospital. I say that as one of those who, perhaps, will be upon that conference. I believe, as the gentleman does, that we ought not to go into designating specific hospitals. I do not say that in order to save the bill; I will not yield on that, but I feel like it ought not to be done.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, I should like to have an expression from the gentleman, yet I do not wish to tie his hands on this point. The Senate provision directs the Secretary of War to turn over any number of hospitals now needed for war purposes at various camps. I know, of course, how ambitious the chief of the Public Health Service is to get everything.

Mr. BURNETT. That is true of the chief of any bureau.

Mr. STAFFORD. He is exceptional in his desire to get everything within reach.

Mr. BURNETT. I understand that the Secretary of War was consulted in regard to that. I am not sure my information is correct, but I understand the Surgeon General of the Army was consulted, and that these hospitals were agreed upon by the War Department, although that is another question that I want to investigate very carefully.

Mr. STAFFORD. We do not want to have the Secretary of the Treasury take property away from the Secretary of War, when the War Department may need these hospitals for Army purposes until the boys on the other side are all returned and discharged.

Mr. BURNETT. My information is that they have agreed upon that.

Mr. STAFFORD. With the assurance of the gentleman that he is not in favor of taking over these separate hospitals, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. CLARK of Florida, Mr. BURNETT, Mr. GRIFFIN, Mr. AUSTIN, and Mr. LANGLEY.

PENSIONS—CORRECTION OF A NAME.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 73.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 12211) entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strike out the name "Hermann" and to insert in lieu thereof the name "Herrman" where it appears in line 19, page 11, of said bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

On February 24, 1919:

H. R. 12863. An act to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

On February 25, 1919:

H. J. Res. 289. Joint resolution for the appointment of four members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers;

H. R. 1607. An act for the relief of David E. Gray;

H. R. 8828. An act increasing the limit of cost for the acquisition of a public building site at Yonkers, N. Y.;

H. R. 10663. An act to convey a strip of land on the site of the Federal building at Princeton, Ind.;

H. R. 11948. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Great Southern Lumber Co., a corporation of the State of Pennsylvania, doing business in the State of Mississippi, to construct a bridge across Pearl River, at or near the north line of section 22, township 8 north, range 21 west, west of the basis meridian, in the land district east of Pearl River, in the State of Mississippi;

H. R. 12001. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911;

H. R. 12881. An act to increase the cost of the public building at El Dorado, Kans.;

H. R. 12996. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio;

H. R. 12997. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio;

H. R. 13004. An act extending the time for construction of a bridge and for the maintenance of a pontoon and pile bridge by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. across the Missouri River at or near Chamberlain, S. Dak., and providing additional requirements for the bridge to be constructed;

H. R. 13143. An act extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River near and above the city of New Orleans, La., or for the construction of a tunnel or tunnels under said river in lieu of said bridge;

H. R. 13232. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North, between Traill County, N. Dak., and Polk County, Minn.;

H. R. 13273. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and an act in amendment thereto approved October 6, 1917;

H. R. 13353. An act to extend the provisions of the homestead laws touching credit for period of enlistment to the soldiers, nurses, and officers of the Army and the seamen, marines, nurses, and officers of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States who have served or will have served with the Mexican border operations or during the war between the United States and Germany and her allies;

H. R. 13708. An act providing for the relief of such populations in Europe and countries contiguous thereto, outside of Germany, German Austria, Hungary, Bulgaria, and Turkey, as may be determined upon by the President as necessary;

H. R. 15140. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes;

H. R. 15219. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes;

S. 41. An act to authorize the sale of certain lands at or near Yellowstone, Mont., for hotel and other purposes;

S. 1847. An act to authorize the addition of certain lands to the Wyoming National Forest;

S. 2552. An act to provide for a leave of absence for homestead entrymen in one or two periods and for longer times;

S. 2784. An act to authorize the purchase by the city of McMinnville, Oreg., of certain lands formerly embraced in the grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. and revested in the United States by the act approved June 9, 1916;

S. 3220. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make investigations, through the Bureau of Mines, of lignite coals and peat to determine the practicability of their utilization as a fuel and in producing commercial products;

S. 3384. An act to amend the public-building act approved March 4, 1913;

S. 5318. An act granting a pension to Edith Carow Roosevelt; and

S. 5354. An act extending the time for completion of the bridge across the Delaware River authorized by an act entitled "An act to authorize the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. and the Pennsylvania & Newark Railroad Co., or their successors, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Delaware River," approved August 24, 1912.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 5627. An act to fix the time of holding court in the Amarillo division of the northern district of Texas.

INTERALLIED RADIO CONFERENCE.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I call up privileged resolution H. Res. 577, and I move to discharge the Committee on Naval Affairs and agree to the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House resolution 577.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish forthwith to the House of Representatives the originals or copies of all papers, documents, and correspondence on file in the Navy Department relating generally to the subject of an interallied radio conference, together with specific information showing the origin, if a matter of record, and the stated purpose of such conference, what countries have agreed to be represented thereat, what naval officers or other persons have been appointed as representatives of the United States thereto, whether any radio companies in the United States are represented in the American delegation, and what instructions, if any, have been given to said representatives.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to discharge the committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the gentleman—if I caught the reading of the resolution it did not say "if not incompatible with the public interests."

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. No; because I do not think it is incompatible with public interests.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the gentleman think the resolution ought to contain that language?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. No; I do not.

Mr. MANN. It is not usual to say that when the resolution is directed to the head of a department, but only when addressed to the President.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is very often done when the resolution is directed to the head of a department.

Mr. MANN. It is sometimes done.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I put this resolution in a week ago Friday and have never heard a word from it from the Naval Committee.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no objection to the resolution unless it is incompatible with public interests.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I suppose the Secretary of the Navy will take advantage of it if it is. There is no trouble about him; he will find it out if it is incompatible with the public interests. I do not think he needs any instruction from the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ask the committees of the House when they have such resolutions as the one just offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts to get busy and make a report on them. If they do not, we will have this kind of performance every morning.

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE—BRITT AGAINST WEAVER.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I herewith file the minority views in the election case of Britt against Weaver (H. Rept. No. 1115, pt. 2).

THE RIVER AND HARBOR BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman if he will agree to move the previous question within an hour.

Mr. SMALL. I am satisfied that that will be sufficient time.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in Senate amendment 144, if it is in order at this time.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order.

Mr. COLLIER. Then I will move to recommit with instructions.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 41, 134, 136, and 144.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 135, 138, 140, 141, 142, and 143, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following:

"It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress that water terminals are essential at all cities and towns located upon harbors or navigable waterways and that at least one public terminal should exist, constructed, owned, and regulated by the municipality or other public agency of the State and open to the use of all on equal terms, and with the view of carrying out this policy to the fullest possible extent the Secretary of War is hereby vested with the discretion to withhold, unless the public interests would seriously suffer by delay, moneys appropriated in this act for new projects adopted herein, or for the further improvement of existing projects if, in his opinion, no water terminals exist adequate for the traffic and open to all on equal terms, or unless satisfactory assurances are received that local or other interests will provide such adequate terminal or terminals. The Secretary of War, through the Chief of Engineers, shall give full publicity, as far as may be practicable, to this provision."

Transfer item so modified to page 28 of the bill, after line 13.

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 40: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment strike out the language proposed and insert the following: "$108,000; continuing improvement of St. Johns River between Jacksonville and the ocean, $125,000; continuing improvement and for maintenance of Oklawaha River, $95,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment strike out the numerals "$347,000" and insert in lieu thereof the numerals "$337,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment strike out the word "completing" and insert in lieu thereof the word "continuing"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment strike out the numerals "$1,375,000" and insert in lieu thereof the numerals "$1,733,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 68: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the proposed amendment add the following:

"The Secretary of War is requested to investigate and submit to Congress on or before the 1st day of January, 1920, a report showing what progress, if any, has been made toward providing satisfactory and adequate public terminals at the several cities and towns located on the Ohio River from December 1, 1918, to December 1, 1919, inclusive."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 69: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment strike out the period at the end of the item, insert in lieu thereof a colon, and add the following proviso: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation for continuing improvement by the construction of locks and dams shall be expended until the channel spans of the bridges forming unreasonable obstructions to the navigation of the Allegheny River at Pittsburgh have been modified as heretofore directed or shall hereafter be directed by the Secretary of War, or until the Secretary of War shall have received satisfactory assurances that such modifications will promptly be made contemporaneously with the prosecution of the work of improvement"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 77: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the proposed amendment add the word "Harbor"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 91: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment strike out the word "for" following the word "maintenance," and insert in lieu thereof the word "of," and make a separate paragraph of this item; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 92: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the numerals proposed insert the following: "$141,500," and transfer the item to the end of line 15, page 23; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 114: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the second line of the proposed amendment strike out the words "appropriated for," and insert in lieu thereof the word "adopted"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 122: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 122, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: "Waterway connecting Merrimack River, Mass., and Piscataqua River, N. H."; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 137: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment strike out the word "And" at the beginning of the first line, and insert in lieu thereof the words "Missouri River, South Dakota," and strike out the words "South Dakota" in line 2 of the amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 139: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 139, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the period at the end of the proposed amendment insert a comma and add the following: "including any recommendation for cooperation on the part of local interests"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 145: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 145, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment change the section number from "8" to "7," and strike out the last four lines, reading as follows: "Freight routed a part way by water and a part way by rail shall be charged only the waterway freight rate for the water haul and the proportional through rail rate for the rail haul"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 146. That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 146, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment change the section number from "9" to "8"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 147: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 147, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment change the section number from "10" to "9"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 148: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 148, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment change the section number from "11" to "10"; and the Senate agree to the same.

JNO. H. SMALL,
THOMAS J. SCULLY,
CHAS. A. KENNEDY,
Managers on the part of the House.
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
JOS. E. RANSDELL,
W. L. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed upon:

The rivers and harbors bill as it passed the House carried cash appropriations in the sum of $27,114,344. The amount added by amendment in the Senate was $6,274,020, making the total of the bill as it passed the Senate, $33,388,364. As a result of the conference the amount involved in the Senate amendments has been reduced from $6,274,020 to $6,264,020, making the total of the bill as it now stands $33,378,364.

The following statement shows the action taken by the conference on each of the Senate amendments:

On amendment No. 1, page 1: Item provided that prior to the expenditure of funds appropriated the Secretary of War shall be satisfied that there now exists, or shall secure satisfactory assurances that local interests will provide sufficient areas of water frontage and suitable and adequate public water terminals to accommodate the commerce on the several waterways which shall be open to the public on equal terms.

House conferees recede with an amendment, substituting for the language proposed the following:

"It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress that water terminals are essential at all cities and towns located upon harbors or navigable waterways and that at least one public terminal should exist, constructed, owned, and regulated by the municipality or other public agency of the State and open to the use of all on equal terms, and with the view of carrying out this policy to the fullest possible extent the Secretary of War is hereby vested with the discretion to withhold, unless the public interests would seriously suffer by delay, moneys appropriated in this act for new projects adopted herein, or for the further improvement of existing projects, if in his opinion no water terminals exist adequate for the traffic and open to all on equal terms, or unless satisfactory assurances are received that local or other interests will provide such adequate terminal or terminals. The Secretary of War, through the Chief of Engineers, shall give full publicity, as far as may be practicable, to this provision."

On amendment No. 2, page 2: Tenants Harbor, Me. Item increases amount appropriated by House for completing new project from $12,500 to $18,750. House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 3 and 4, page 2: Gloucester, Beverly, Salem, Lynn, Plymouth, and Provincetown Harbors, Mystic, Malden, Weymouth Fore, and Weymouth Back Rivers, and Dorchester Bay and Neponset River, Mass. Item appropriates $2,000 for maintenance for this group of projects. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 5, page 3: Providence River and Harbor, Pawtucket River, Newport Harbor, harbors of refuge at Point Judith and Block Island, entrance to Point Judith Pond, and Great Salt Pond, Block Island, R. I. Item appropriates $1,500 for maintenance for this group of projects. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 6, page 3: Pawtucket River, R. I. Item increases amount appropriated by House for completing new project from $61,440 to $91,160. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 7, page 3: Point Judith Harbor, R. I. Item increases amount appropriated by House for completing new project from $35,000 to $52,500. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 8, page 3: Item changes figures showing total of appropriations made in paragraph. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 9, page 4: Item amends House provision verbally.[1] House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 10, page 4: Item amends House provision verbally.[1] House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 11, page 5: Item amends House provision verbally.[1] House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 12, page 6: Hackensack River, N. J. Item adopts new project and appropriates $88,000 for its prosecution. House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 13 and 14, page 6: Delaware River from Philadelphia to the sea. Items reduce amount appropriated by House from $2,500,000 to $1,000,000. House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 15 and 16, page 6: Items appropriate $5,000 for maintenance of Cooper River, N. J., $10,000 for maintenance of Salem River, N. J., $5,000 for maintenance of Raccoon Creek, N. J., and makes[1] verbal change in the House provision adopting a new project for Raccoon Creek. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 17, page 6: Absecon Inlet, N. J. Item strikes out proviso that no part of the funds appropriated in the act shall be expended on Absecon Inlet. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 18, page 7: Item amends House provision verbally.[1] House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 19, page 7: Wilmington Harbor, Del. Item increases amount appropriated by House for maintenance from $50,000 to $65,000. House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 20, 21, 22, and 23, page 8: Items appropriate $4,000 for maintenance of Tyaskin Creek, Md., $5,000 for maintenance of Broad Creek, Md., and makes[1] verbal change in House provision adopting new project for Tangier Channel, Va. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 24, page 9: Item appropriates $20,000 for maintenance of Potomac River at Washington, D. C., $5,000 for maintenance of Potomac River at Lower Cedar Point, Md., and $7,000 for maintenance of Occoquan Creek, Va. House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 25 and 26, page 9: Items appropriate $2,000 for maintenance of James, Nansemond, Pagan, and Appomattox Rivers, Va., and make[1] verbal amendment in House provision adopting new project for Pagan River. House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 27 and 28, page 10: Items appropriate $2,000 for maintenance of Blackwater River, Va.; Meherrin and Roanoke Rivers, and Newbegun Creek, N. C., and make[1] verbal amendment to House provision adopting new project for Newbegun Creek. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 29, page 10: Item amends House provision verbally.[1] House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 30, page 10: Item amends House provision verbally.[1] House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 31 and 32, page 11: Channel connecting Thoroughfare Bay and Cedar Bay, N. C. Items increase amount appropriated by House from $5,200 to $9,000. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 33, page 11: Item amends House provision verbally.[1] House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 34, page 11: Waterway between Charleston and Winyah Bay, S. C. Item increases amount appropriated by House from $20,000 to $28,000. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 35, page 11: Savannah River at Augusta, Ga. Item appropriates $50,000 for maintenance. House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 36 and 37, page 12: Waterway between Beaufort, S. C., and St. Johns River, Fla. Items increase amount appropriated by House for maintenance from $23,000 to $50,000; adopts new project for Generals Cut, appropriating $1,000 for its completion, and makes[1] verbal amendment in House provision for Back River, Ga. House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 38 and 39, page 12: Brunswick Harbor, Ga. Items increase amount appropriated by House for prosecuting new project from $240,000 to $500,000. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 40, page 12: Item appropriates $125,000 for continuing improvement of St. Johns River between Jacksonville and the ocean, and $5,000 for maintenance of Oklawaha River. House conferees recede, with an amendment reducing the amount appropriated for maintenance to the figures in the House bill and amending the paragraph by providing $95,000 for continuing improvement and maintenance of the existing project on the Oklawaha River.

[1] This amendment, striking out the word "completing" and substituting therefor the word "for," was occasioned by the fact that the Chief of Engineers reported that owing to the increase in the cost of labor and materials since the submission of the report on this project the amount originally estimated to complete the improvement proposed will not now be sufficient to complete.

On amendment No. 41, page 13: Oklawaha River, Fla. Item adopts new project and appropriates $100,000 for the prosecution thereof. Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 42, page 13: Item showing total of appropriations for separate works appropriated for in this paragraph. House conferees recede with an amendment changing the figures from $347,000 to $337,000.

On amendment No. 43, page 13: Item amends House provision verbally. House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 44 and 45, page 13: Items adopt new project for Sarasota Bay, Fla., and appropriate $92,000 for the prosecution thereof. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 46, page 14: Item appropriates $15,000 for maintenance of Apalachicola Bay, Fla., $30,000 for maintenance of St. Andrews Bay, Fla., $15,000 for maintenance of Flint River, Ga., and $27,000 for maintenance of Chattahoochee River, Ga. and Fla. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 47, page 15: Item increases amount appropriated by House for continuing improvement and maintenance of Gulfport Harbor, Miss., from $50,000 to $100,000. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 48, page 15: Item appropriates $15,000 for maintenance of Pascagoula River, Miss., in addition to $2,500 appropriated in House bill. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 49, page 15: Item appropriates $550,000 for improvement of passes at the mouth of the Mississippi River in addition to amount appropriated in House bill. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 50, page 17: Item appropriates $7,000 for maintenance of Bayous Vermilion, Nezpique, des Cannes, Plaquemine Brule, and Queue de Tortue, Mermentau River, and Calcasieu River and Pass, La. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 51, page 17: Item increases amount appropriated in House bill for removing the water hyacinths in Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas from $20,000 to $30,000. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 52, page 17: Item appropriates $25,000 for maintenance of Galveston Harbor, Tex. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 53, page 17: Item increases amount appropriated in House bill for continuing improvement of seawall extension to protect Galveston Channel from $400,000 to $758,000. House conferees recede with verbal amendment substituting the word "continuing" for the word "completing."

On amendment No. 54, page 17: Item adopts new project for Houston Ship Channel, Tex., and appropriates $950,000 for the prosecution thereof, and provides that not more than $275,000 shall be expended in the construction of each of the four dredges the construction of which is recommended in the report at an estimated total cost of $1,400,000. House conferees recede with an amendment correcting a clerical error.

On amendment No. 55, page 18: Item adopts new project for Brazos Island Harbor, Tex., and appropriates $66,000 for the prosecution thereof. House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 56 and 57, page 18: Items increase amount appropriated in House bill for improvement of harbor at Beaumont, Tex., from $50,000 to $75,000. House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 58 and 59, page 18: House provision appropriating $15,000 for maintenance of the Ouachita and Black Rivers, Ark. and La., is amended so as to provide $12,000 for maintenance of the Ouachita and Black Rivers, $14,000 for maintenance of the Red River, $5,000 for maintenance of Boeuf River, $3,000 for maintenance of Bayous D'Arbonne and Corney, and $1,000 for maintenance of Tensas River and Bayou Macon, all in Arkansas and Louisiana. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 60, page 19: House provision appropriating maintenance funds of $8,000 for Yazoo River, Miss., $5,000 for Tallahatchie and Coldwater Rivers, Miss., and $4,000 for Big Sunflower River, Miss., is modified so as to appropriate maintenance funds of $9,500 for Yazoo River, $3,000 for Tallahatchie and Coldwater, $17,200 for Big Sunflower River, $2,800 for Tchula Lake, and $2,500 for Steele and Washington Bayous, all in Mississippi. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 61, page 20: Item appropriates $50,000 for removal of snags and wrecks from the Mississippi River below the mouth of the Missouri, and from Old and Atchafalaya Rivers, La., in addition to amounts expended under permanent appropriation provided by act of August 11, 1888. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 62, page 20: Item increases amount appropriated in House bill for continuing improvement and maintenance of Mississippi River from the mouth of the Missouri River to Minneapolis, Minn., from $250,000 to $500,000. House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 63 and 64, page 20: Items appropriate $10,000 for continuing improvement of Mississippi River between St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minn. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 65, page 21: Item appropriates $2,000 for maintenance of Warroad Harbor and Warroad River, Minn., and $1,000 for maintenance of Zippel Bay, Minn. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 66, page 21: Increases amount appropriated in House bill for completing improvement of Baudette Harbor and River, Minn., from $2,750 to $5,000. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 67, page 22: Tennessee River, Tenn. and Ala. Item waives condition precedent requiring local interests to assume and pay all claims for flowage damages in project adopted in 1916. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 68, page 22: Ohio River. Item appropriates $3,000,000 for continuing construction of locks and dams. House conferees recede with amendment requesting the Secretary of War to report progress made by local interests in the construction of adequate terminal facilities during the year ending December 1, 1919.

On amendment No. 69, page 22: Allegheny River, Pa. Item appropriates $8,000 for maintenance of open-channel work and $1,000,000 for continuing construction of locks and dams. House conferees recede with amendment providing that no part of the funds shall be expended until either the channel spans of bridges at Pittsburgh, forming unreasonable obstructions to navigation, have been modified as heretofore directed by the Secretary of War, or until the Secretary of War shall have received satisfactory assurances that such modifications will promptly be made.

On amendments Nos. 70 and 71, page 23: Duluth-Superior Harbor, Minn. Items increase amount appropriated in House bill for completion of new project from $24,000 to $33,000. House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 72 and 73, page 23: Items increase amount appropriated in House bill for maintenance of Manistique Harbor, Mich., Menominee, Oconto, Green Bay, Algoma, Kewaunee, Two Rivers, Manitowoc, Sheboygan, Port Washington, Milwaukee, Racine, Kenosha, and Waukegan Harbors, Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship Canal, and Fox River, Wis., from $38,000 to $80,000. House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 74 and 75, pages 23 and 24: Illinois River, Ill. Items appropriate $30,000 for maintenance work. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 76, page 24: Item increases amounts appropriated in House bill for maintenance funds for Frankfort Harbor from $7,000 to $17,000, for Grand Haven Harbor from $12,000 to $53,000, and for St. Joseph Harbor and River from $8,700 to $19,500, all in Michigan. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 77, page 24: Item substitutes the word "Duluth-Superior" for the word "Duluth." House conferees recede with an amendment so as to make it read "Duluth-Superior Harbor."

On amendments Nos. 78 and 79, page 25: Items appropriate $5,000 for maintenance of Mackinac, Cheboygan, Rogers City, Alpena, Harbor Beach, and Monroe Harbors, Saginaw, Black Clinton, and Rouge Rivers, Mich. House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 80, 81, 82, 83, and 84, pages 25 and 26: Items amend House provision verbally.[1] House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 85 and 86, page 26: Items appropriate $125,000 for continuing improvement of Black Rock Channel and Tonawanda Harbor, N. Y. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 87, page 26: Item increases amount appropriated by House bill for prosecution of new project for Buffalo Harbor from $132,000 to $145,000. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 88, page 26: Item changes figures in House bill showing total amount appropriated in paragraph. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 89, page 27: Item increases amount appropriated in House bill for completion of new project for Oswego Harbor, N. Y., from $38,000 to $50,000. House conferees recede.

[1] This amendment, striking out the word "completing" and substituting therefor the word "for," was occasioned by the fact that the Chief of Engineers reported that owing to the increase in the cost of labor and materials since the submission of the report on this project the amount originally estimated to complete the improvement proposed will not now be sufficient to complete.

On amendment No. 90, page 27: Item increases amount appropriated by House bill for completion of new project for Ogdensburg Harbor, N. Y., from $54,000 to $72,000. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 91, page 27: Item appropriates $10,000 for maintenance of the Government levee on the Gila River near its junction with the Colorado River at Yuma, Ariz. House conferees recede with amendment making verbal change and providing that a separate paragraph be made of this item.

On amendment No. 92, page 27: Item changes figures in House bill showing total amount appropriated in the paragraph. House conferees recede with amendment transferring item to the end of the preceding paragraph and making change in total caused by separation of Colorado River provision from the paragraph.

On amendment No. 93, page 27: Item amends House provision verbally. House recedes.

On amendment No. 94, pages 27 and 28: Item amends House provision verbally.[1] House recedes.

On amendment No. 95, page 28: Item amends House provision verbally. House recedes.

On amendment No. 96, page 28: Item amends House provision verbally.[1] House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 97 and 98, page 28: Items appropriate $30,000 for improvement and maintenance of San Joaquin River, Cal., $16,000 for Stockton, Mormon, and Fremont Channels, Cal., increases amount appropriated in House bill for maintenance of Mokelumne River, Cal., from $800 to $1,000, and increases amount appropriated in House bill for maintenance of Sacramento River, Cal., from $65,000 to $175,000. House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 99 and 101, page 29: Items increase amount appropriated in House bill for improvement and maintenance of Coos Bay, Oreg., from $74,000 to $121,000. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 100, page 29: Item amends House provision verbally. House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 102 and 103, page 29: Items increase amount appropriated in House bill for Columbia and Lower Willamette Rivers below Vancouver, Wash., and Portland, Oreg., from $424,000 to $465,000 for the purpose of providing additional dike work in the lower Columbia River. House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 104 and 105, page 30: Items increase amount appropriated in House bill for maintenance of Willamette River above Portland and Yamhill River, Oreg., from $27,000 to $54,000. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 106, page 30: Duwamish waterway, Seattle Harbor, Wash. Item adds proviso requiring local interests to furnish a place of deposit for the dredged material and the bulkheads necessary to confine such material. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 107, page 31: Skagit River, Wash. Item adds provision requiring that before work on new project is commenced the report shall be referred to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors for review with a view of reporting whether the project should be modified to meet existing conditions or whether conditions of local cooperation should be imposed. House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 108 and 109, page 31: Anacortes Harbor, Wash. Items increase amount appropriated in House bill for completion of new project from $56,000 to $89,000. House conferees recede.

On amendments Nos. 110 and 111, page 31: Items appropriate $125,000 for continuing improvement of Honolulu Harbor, Hawaii. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 112, page 32: Item strikes out proviso attached to House item adopting new project for Nawiliwili Harbor, Hawaii, providing that no expense shall be incurred by the United States for acquiring lands needed for the improvement, and inserts in lieu thereof a proviso that the Territory of Hawaii is authorized to condemn land fronting on the proposed wharf sites and rights of way for the breakwater and construction work thereon subject to the approval of the Secretary of War; that the work shall not be commenced until the Territory of Hawaii shall have commenced condemnation proceedings to acquire such lands; that no expense shall be incurred by the United States for acquiring or using such lands; that the Secretary of War is authorized to condemn a quarry site or sites, with rights of way thereto, the awards therefor to be paid out of funds appropriated for this project, and that the quarries when so acquired may be made available to any contractors for work on this project on terms to be fixed by the Secretary of War. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 113, page 33: Item reduces amount appropriated in House bill for emergencies from $1,000,000 to $500,000. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 114, page 33: Item provides that no work shall be undertaken upon any new project herein adopted unless the Secretary of War shall be of the opinion that the project can be completed at a cost not greater than 40 per cent in excess of the estimate of cost in the report upon such project. House conferees recede with verbal amendment substituting the word "adopted" for the words "appropriated for."

On amendment No. 115, page 34: Item amends section 2 of House bill, governing the allotment of funds appropriated in the bill in an aggregate amount for groups of projects, by taking away from the Secretary of War the discretion to reallot such funds after separate amounts are given to individual projects. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 116, page 34: Item provides that in all cases where a project herein, heretofore, or hereafter authorized, provides for the construction or use of Government dredging plant, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, have the work done by contract if reasonable prices can be obtained. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 117, page 34: Item declares a portion of Little River, Ark., to be not a navigable waterway of the United States within the meaning of the laws enacted by Congress for the protection of such waterways. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 118, page 35: Item appropriates $18,000 and directs that this sum or so much thereof as may be necessary may be paid to Walter H. Denison for any loss he may have sustained, under contract for levee work, between April 6, 1917, and July 18, 1918, on account of the increase in cost of labor and materials due to the war. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 119, page 36: Item renumbering section of the bill. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 120, page 36: Item increases amount appropriated in House bill for examinations, surveys, and contingencies for rivers and harbors from $150,000 to $250,000. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 121, page 36: Survey of Merrimack River, N. H. and Mass., with a view to the construction of storage reservoirs at or near its headwaters. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 122, page 37: Survey for waterway connecting Merrimack River, Mass., and Piscataqua River, N. H. House conferees recede with an amendment making verbal amendment.

On amendment No. 123, page 38: Survey of Kill van Kull and Newark Bay, N. Y. and N. J. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 124, page 38: Survey of Rahway River and Staten Island Sound, N. Y. and N. J. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 125, page 38: Survey of Raritan Bay and Raritan River, N. J. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 126, page 38: Survey of waterway from Chincoteague Bay, Va., to Delaware Bay and Mispillion River, Del. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 127, page 39: Survey of Cape Fear River below Wilmington, N. C. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 128, page 39: Survey of waterway from Newbern, N. C., to Wilmington, N. C., via Trent River and Northeast Cape Fear River. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 129, page 40: Survey of St. Andrews Bay, Fla. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 130, page 40: Survey of Bayou Texar and entrance, Florida. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 131, page 40: Survey of waterway from Pensacola Bay, Fla., to Mobile Bay, Ala. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 132, page 40: Survey of Little Caillou Bayou, La. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 133, page 40: Item amends House provision for a survey of intracoastal waterway from Galveston Bay to Pass Cavallo, Tex., by providing that same be extended to Rockport and Corpus Christi, Tex. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 134, page 40: Survey of Galveston Channel, Tex., with a view to the extension of the sea wall to and around Fort San Jacinto Reservation. Senate conferees recede.

On amendment No. 135, page 41: Survey of Neches River, Tex., from Beaumont to mouth of Angelina River. House conferees recede.

[1] This amendment, striking out the word "completing" and substituting therefor the word "for," was occasioned by the fact that the Chief of Engineers reported that owing to the increase in the cost of labor and materials since the submission of the report on this project the amount originally estimated to complete the improvement proposed will not now be sufficient to complete.

On amendment No. 136, page 41: Survey of Missouri River, with a view to protecting the banks near Centaur and Gumbo, Mo. Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 137, page 41: Survey of Missouri River at and in the vicinity of Vermilion, S. Dak., with a view to bank protection, and with a view to locating practicable sites in South Dakota for the construction of dams which would prevent erosion and be in the interest of navigation, including consideration of any proposition for cooperation on the part of local interests. House conferees recede with verbal amendment.

On amendment No. 138, page 41: Survey of Monongahela River, Pa., at Lock and Dam No. 6. Item amends House provision so as to make the survey cover the whole of the river in Pennsylvania. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 139, page 41: Survey for a waterway connecting Lake Erie with the Ohio River. House conferees recede with an amendment providing that the report shall contain recommendation for cooperation on the part of local interests.

On amendment No. 140, page 42: Survey for waterway connecting the Great Lakes with the Hudson River suitable for navigation by ocean-going vessels. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 141, page 42: Survey of Morro Bay, Cal. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 142, page 42: Survey of Yaquina River, Oreg., from Newport to Toledo. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 143, page 42: Survey for waterway connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Grays Harbor, Wash. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 144, page 43: Lands subject to overflow from Mississippi River between Brunswick, Miss., and Baton Rouge, La., and Bessie and Memphis, Tenn. Item covers the following section of the bill:

"SEC. 7. That as to the lands investigated, surveyed, or reported on under authority of a provision of the river and harbor act approved July 25, 1912, a full report of which is set out in House Document No. 1010, Sixty-second Congress, third session, and wherein the recommendation is made that the title to said lands be acquired by the United States for their use in river improvement, the owners thereof may institute suit against the United States in the Court of Claims to ascertain the value of said lands before their damage or destruction, and said court shall render judgment therefor: Provided, however, That in the trial of said suits said court shall permit any party who at any time since the damage or destruction of such lands owned or held title thereto or any interest therein, and who has become dispossessed thereof by reason of foreclosure proceedings, or otherwise compelled to sacrifice title thereto as a result of said injuries to appear as a party claimant by filing petition setting up their former interest therein, and said court shall consider the claims of all of said parties and render judgment for whatever amount said court considers equitably or justly due the respective parties."

Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 145, page 43: Control of routing of freight over inland waterways, or partly by such waterways and partly by rail. Item adds new section to the bill, which amends the railroad-control act, approved March 21, 1918, by adding at the end of section 6 of said act the following:

"No provision of this act shall be construed to prevent the routing of freight by a shipper or consignee over any inland canal or coastwise waterway, or a part way over such waterway and a part way by rail. In case the shipper or consignee shall so route the freight, no provision of this act shall be construed as giving power to change the routing.

"Freight routed a part way by water and a part way by rail shall be charged only the waterway freight rate for the water haul and the proportional through rail rate for the rail haul."

House conferees recede, with an amendment changing the number of the section and striking out the last paragraph of the proposed amendment.

On amendment No. 146, page 44: Item renumbering section of House bill. House conferees recede.

On amendment No. 147, page 44: St. Lawrence River. Item requests the International Joint Commission to investigate and report the improvements necessary, and the cost thereof, to make the St. Lawrence River between Montreal and Lake Ontario navigable for ocean-going vessels, together with its recommendations for cooperation by the United States with the Dominion of Canada in the improvement of said river. House conferees recede with an amendment changing the number of the section.

On amendment No. 148, page 45: Relief of contractors on river and harbor work. Item covers a section of the bill and authorizes the Secretary of War—

"to ascertain whether any of the contracts for work on river and harbor improvements entered into but not completed prior to April 6, 1917, the date of the entrance of the United States into war with Germany, have become inequitable and unjust on account of increased cost of materials, labor, and other unforeseen conditions arising out of the war; and to ascertain and report what amounts, if any, in addition to those fixed by the terms of said contracts should in justice and equity be paid to contractors for work performed between April 6, 1917, and July 18, 1918, the date of the approval of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," on account of the increased cost of labor and materials and other unforeseen conditions arising out of the war during that period: Provided, That in every case the amount so ascertained shall not exceed the actual loss sustained by the contractor in performing the work between the said dates: Provided further, That when such amount shall have been ascertained the Secretary of War shall transmit to Congress for consideration a statement or statements of all findings or determinations rendered by authority of this section, the amounts thereof, the names of contractors, and dates of contracts."

House conferees recede with amendment changing the number of the section.

JNO. H. SMALL,
THOMAS J. SCULLY,
CHAS. A. KENNEDY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, the Senate added 148 amendments to the river and harbor bill. A great number of them were unobjectionable to your House conferees. I can present the nature of these amendments very clearly, based upon a summary of them which has been prepared by one of the very efficient clerks of the committee, Mr. J. H. McGann, to which I will refer.

There were 33 amendments which were merely clerical changes; that is, verbal changes of no import and changes of figures showing the aggregate amount appropriated for groups of projects in paragraphs where changes have been made in specific projects.

There are 29 amendments in which the word "completing" was changed to the word "for." That is to say, the original estimate, in the opinion of the Chief of Engineers, might not be sufficient at this time to complete, and therefore the word "for" was substituted for "completing."

Senate amendments were made to 13 items in the bill in which the amounts allowed by the House for the completion of new projects were increased, and the aggregate amount was $438,520.

The Senate added five new projects to the bill, as follows: Hackensack River, N. J., $88,000; General Cut, Ga., $1,000; Sarasota Bay, Fla., $92,000; Houston Ship Channel, Tex., $950,000; Brazos Island Harbor, Tex., $66,000.

The full amount estimated to complete was appropriated for all of these projects, with the exception of the Houston Ship Channel project, for which the total estimated cost to the United States is $2,485,000.

In six amendments the Senate made small appropriations for maintenance of groups of projects for which no appropriations had been made in the House bill, involving a total of $19,500.

In 20 of the Senate amendments appropriations are made for maintenance and continuing improvement on 35 projects for which no appropriations were made in the House bill. These amendments add a total of $4,624,300 to the bill, and they include $3,000,000 for the Ohio River and $1,000,000 for the Allegheny River. With reference to the Ohio River, I may state at this time that after the bill passed the House the Chief of Engineers reported that he had received additional data from the district engineer having in charge the work on the Ohio, and was compelled to revise his original statement that no appropriations were necessary in this bill and that in his judgment the $3,000,000 was now necessary.

As to the Allegheny River—a very important stream having a large commerce, in which the existing project has not been completed—the Senate amendment was based on a later estimate that was submitted by the Chief of Engineers, and $1,000,000 was appropriated for further improvement of the Allegheny River. In 19 of the Senate amendments increases are made in amounts allowed by the House for maintenance and improvement work on 25 projects, adding a total of $1,961,700 to the bill. These increases were all recommended by the Chief of Engineers.

Twenty-three of the amendments, in which the House receded from its disagreement, related to surveys, examinations, and investigations.

Two of the amendments in which the House conferees receded reduced the amounts allowed in the bill. That is to say, the Delaware River from Philadelphia to the sea was reduced from $2,500,000 to $1,000,000 and the emergency appropriation of $1,000,000 was reduced to $500,000. Both of them were made upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers.

Two of the Senate amendments to which the House conferees agreed add conditions to the House items, adopting new projects, which imposed certain work on local interests. These were the Duwamish Waterway, Wash., and at Nawiliwili Harbor, both of which were recommended by the Chief of Engineers.

Senate amendment 107 provides for a reexamination of the Skagit River project by the Board of Engineers, with a view to making the project meet existing conditions and to ascertain if conditions of local cooperation should be imposed.

Senate amendment No. 17 strikes from the House bill the proviso:

That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be expended on Absecon Inlet.

The conferees considered that in any event no money would be expended, because no appropriation was available, and that therefore no harm could be done by agreeing to the Senate amendment; and the dredge which has been used there has already been ordered to another improvement.

Senate amendment No. 117 declares a portion of Little River, Ark., to be not a navigable waterway, to which the House conferees agreed.

Senate amendment No. 1 was agreed to with an amendment. This amendment authorized the Secretary of War to withhold funds appropriated in the bill until adequate public water terminals are constructed by local interests. That amendment was offered by a distinguished Senator, and the House conferees gave it very careful consideration, in conjunction with the Chief of Engineers or his representative, Gen. Taylor. The House conferees, while in sympathy with its purpose, were compelled to reach the conclusion that if adopted in the form authorized by the Senate it would prevent expenditures upon a large number of projects. Your Committee on Rivers and Harbors takes pride in the statement that they have been the leaders in insisting that the construction of adequate water terminals must be contemporaneous with the improvement of rivers and harbors, but of necessity the realization of this ideal to the fullest extent must be slow and must depend upon educational processes. Therefore your conferees drafted an amendment, slightly modified in conference, which, in their opinion, will go very far toward accomplishing this purpose and yet permit public improvement to proceed. The exact language of that amendment which the House conferees proposed and which was accepted by the conferees in the other body appears on page 5 of the conference report, and is as follows:

It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress that water terminals are essential at all cities and towns located upon harbors or navigable waterways and that at least one public terminal should exist, constructed, owned, and regulated by the municipality or other public agency of the State and open to the use of all on equal terms, and with the view of carrying out this policy to the fullest possible extent the Secretary of War is hereby vested with the discretion to withhold, unless the public interests would seriously suffer by delay, moneys appropriated in this act for new projects adopted herein, or for the further improvement of existing projects, if, in his opinion, no water terminals exist adequate for the traffic and open to all on equal terms, or unless satisfactory assurances are received that local or other interests will provide such adequate terminal or terminals. The Secretary of War, through the Chief of Engineers, shall give full publicity, as far as may be practicable, to this provision.

Senate amendment 114 provides as follows:

No work shall be undertaken upon any new project herein appropriated for unless the Secretary of War shall be of the opinion that, based upon the cost at the time of entering upon the work, the project can be completed at a cost not greater than 40 per cent in excess of the estimate of cost in the report upon such project.

To this amendment the House conferees receded with a slight verbal amendment, substituting the word "adopted" in lieu of the words "appropriated for." This amendment promotes economy and will not in the opinion of your conferees postpone work on many projects.

Senate amendment 115 prevents the reallotment of funds appropriated in the bill in an aggregate amount for groups of projects after separate amounts are allotted to individual projects.

That amendment takes away from the Chief of Engineers the power to reallot appropriations for specific improvements in group projects until the improvement is completed. After it is completed, if there is any balance left, he may reallot. It meets the criticism which has been frequently made here, and which your conferees thought was wise, and it will not militate against the proper administration of the river and harbor bill.

Senate amendment No. 116 provides that in all cases where a project heretofore adopted, or adopted in this bill, or which will be adopted hereafter, authorizes the construction or use of Government dredging plant, the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, have the work done by contract if reasonable prices can be obtained. That provision has been in the river and harbor bill for a number of years, and this is only intended to make it a permanent law.

Senate amendment 118 appropriates $18,000 and directs that this sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be paid to Walter H. Denison for any loss he may have sustained under the contract for levee work between April 6, 1917, and July 18, 1918, on account of the increase in the cost of labor and materials, due to the war conditions. The only objection which can be urged to that amendment lies in its selecting this one contractor or claimant and enacting special legislation in his behalf, but it is fair to say that the conferees of the other body and your conferees were strongly impressed with the peculiar facts surrounding this claim.

The contractor who was doing some work upon the lower Mississippi River and who was losing money there was urged by the engineer in charge to complete the work, with the statement that unless the work was completed and if flood water should come in the meantime that great loss would ensue. He appealed to his patriotism, with the result that he went ahead and completed the work, impoverished himself, selling all of his property, and to-day the evidence submitted shows that he is penniless. So your committee agreed to this amendment.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. GORDON. Of course, that is another one of these war claims. Does not the gentleman think that ought to be submitted in a separate private-claims bill and referred to the Committee on Claims for proper investigation?

Mr. SMALL. Well, that may be, and there may be some merit in the gentleman's contention, but if the gentleman had heard all the facts he would be perfectly willing——

Mr. GORDON. The great trouble about it is I do not suppose the gentleman from North Carolina heard all the facts.

Mr. SMALL. Well, whatever facts your conferees did not hear will be presented to the Chief of Engineers when he comes to adjust the matter.

Mr. GORDON. Of course, that delegates the functions of the Congress to the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. HASTINGS. How much is allowed by the conferees for this claim?

Mr. SMALL. A maximum of $18,000. His actual loss ran very much larger than that.

Senate amendment 145 relates to control by shippers of the routing of freight over waterways or partly by such waterways or partly by rail. Your conferees accepted the amendment in part. The conferees eliminated the second section, which attempted to fix the proportional rate partly by water and partly by rail, because under existing law, as provided in the Panama Canal act, the Interstate Commerce Commission is given jurisdiction in that particular phase of the matter, so that the second paragraph was stricken out and the first paragraph only remained.

The Senate conferees receded from four amendments—No. 41, which adopted a new project for improvement of the Oklawaha River, Fla.; No. 134, which provided for a survey of Galveston Channel, Tex., with a view to the extension of the sea wall through and around Fort San Jacinto Reservation; No. 136, which provided for a survey of the Missouri River with a view to bank protection; and No. 144, relating to the claims of riparian landowners on the Mississippi River for alleged damages to their land by reason of levee construction on the river—in all of these the Senate receded.

I will not take the time to go into those Senate amendments from which the Senate receded, except to make this comment about amendment No. 144. I understand a motion to recommit will be made instructing the conferees to recede and concur in this amendment, which seeks to refer to the Court of Claims the claims of certain riparian landowners on the Mississippi River. In the opinion of your conferees, that amendment was simply impossible in this bill. Whatever merit it had, it ought not to have been favorably considered by your conferees. It was not considered by our committee, it was not considered by the Senate Committee on Commerce, but was offered on the floor of the Senate. It involves very important questions. It involves the question of the liability of the United States in the first instance. It involves the question of what lands are damaged, the extent of damage, and the value of the land. It also involves the question of proportional liability between the States and the United States. A great amount of this levee work was done on this project by the States or local interests and not by the United States, and the amendment, in the form here submitted, proposed to submit to the Court of Claims the jurisdiction to ascertain the value of the lands damaged or destroyed. They were not even permitted to consider the question of the liability of the Federal Government or its proportional liability. It is a big question. As a matter of fact, it belongs either to the Committee on Flood Control or the Committee on Claims. Whatever sympathy we may have for these good people whose lands are alleged to have been damaged, it had no place in this bill and certainly required most careful consideration.

Now, Mr. Speaker, while there were 148 Senate amendments, it is fair to make this statement. Your conferees, after the bill passed the Senate, devoted a whole day and part of a night in collaboration with Gen. Harry Taylor, who represents the Chief of Engineers on all river and harbor matters, in studying all the Senate amendments. When we entered upon the conference we knew exactly the amendments to which we could agree and those to which we could not agree, and the amendments which your House conferees decided that in no event we could agree to were receded from by the conferees of the other body, so that while the House receded upon a great many amendments, they were such amendments as to evoke no objection on the part of your conferees or upon the part of the War Department. This expression is not made in any spirit or pride or elation or with the slightest intent to disparage the eminent gentlemen comprising the conferees of the other body, but in appreciation of the compliment implied to your conferees.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if any gentleman has any question he desires to put, I will be glad to answer it if I can.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Senate amendment No. 148, I notice, gives the Secretary of War authority to make inquiry as to those contracts which may have become inequitable and unjust on account of the increased cost of material and labor due to war conditions and report to the Congress. That is the effect of the amendment?

Mr. SMALL. Yes; that is, between certain dates—April 6, 1917, and July 18, 1918.

Mr. WALSH. Why was the date of July 18 fixed?

Mr. SMALL. That was the date of the approval of the last river and harbor act. In that act we provided for work performed by contractors subsequent to that time.

Mr. WALSH. Now, Senate amendment 118, to which the gentleman referred, which is in favor of Walter H. Denison, is an amendment selecting him, one particular contractor who has lost because of the increase in the cost of labor and material, and you make an appropriation of $18,000 to be available as additional compensation or a maximum. Does not the gentleman think that it is hardly warranted under the circumstances to carry a general authorization for investigation and inquiry into these contracts and in the same bill to carry an authorization and an appropriation for one particular contractor?

Mr. SMALL. Prima facie the gentleman's position is well taken. I stated——

Mr. WALSH. I heard the gentleman's statement. The contractor is perhaps fortunate in having somebody to present all the facts in his case, whereas the other contractors may not have had a Member of the other body to do that; but it seems to me it would be a bad precedent to establish in a river and harbor bill, particularly where we carry general authority to investigate these things, to select one contractor who has been unfortunate, and whom, I am sure, would receive every consideration of the Secretary of War and of Congress, and to provide him with immediate relief and to provide the others, where there may be equal merit in their claims, shall wait until the Secretary of War has made an inquiry.

I can not quite see, knowing the gentleman's sense of justice and how he has in the past treated matters with great equity, can justify the action of the conferees in placing their approval upon this method.

Mr. SMALL. I can only repeat that the case made out for this man, Mr. Denison, was, in the opinion of your conferees, sufficient to differentiate it. And I am satisfied that if the gentleman from Massachusetts had heard what we have heard from the man himself, from the evidence that he submitted, he would have been willing to yield this particular objection to the item.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SMALL. In just one minute.

Mr. FREAR. Before his time is consumed?

Mr. SMALL. I will. The only objection is the one the gentleman from Massachusetts states——

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman understands I am not opposing the settlement being made. But I think it was rather inconsistent. There may be other contractors who could have presented claims of equal merit, and if that were done we would have a great many amendments made up of individual claims in this bill, where, I think, at this time they have no place.

Mr. SMALL. Prima facie, the gentleman is right, but the peculiar facts in this case differentiate it.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield me 10 minutes at this time?

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I consumed?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used 25 minutes.

Mr. SMALL. If there are no other questions, I will yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I opposed this bill in the House, and I did so in order to disclose its general character. To my mind the bill which is before the House now, and before it went to the Senate, was the worst bill we have had in the past six years. I have no hesitation in saying that. With over 70 new projects added to the bill, it seemed to me under the present state of public finances it was entirely indefensible. It went to the Senate, and of the 148 amendments, if you will examine them, 140 are cases where the House recedes. Six million dollars, in round numbers, have been added to the bill over on the Senate side.

I will not at this late day consume the time of the House in further discussion of the bill, because I have done that in the past. But I do wish to say that in the discussion of the bill at the other end of the Capitol the other day appeared a poem in protest against the bill, and it seemed to me that we might with advantage change the prosy way we have of discussing these measures in the House. So a brief contribution is offered, as will be explained in the brief statement which I wish to present to the House. The following is the prologue and what follows, with like apologies to Walt Mason, whose shoulders must be broad and generous:

PROLOGUE.

A river and harbor omnibus bill of 300 items, carrying $33,000,000, is reported from conference.

A public-building bill of 500 items, carrying about $60,000,000, has been reported to the House, and a petition in circulation asks that it be made a special rule.

[Lines found in a (deleted) battle-front trench near Paris.]

THE LEAGUE OF BACONS.

(With apologies to the high contracting parties.)

They float by the bridge at midnight, till the roll call answers "it's ours," while the moon and the dipper wink their eyes at the skipper in fair Florida's land of flowers. Two pork barrels wait their congressional fate in the league of fat bacon bills, and both get their bumps, 'mid the snags, rocks, and stumps, as they travel the pace that kills. Now the waterways porker, a time-honored joker, floated by with the pork buildings, when a discussion begun to determine which one could show the most coin in its holdings.

"I have landed my pork after vigorous work from Portland, Me., round to Seattle," quoth the Waterway Bill to the Big Building Bill, as it boastfully started to prattle. "Oklawaha's a joke, for a vigorous poke would dry up my creek in a minute, but a hundred thousand I'll get to keep out of the wet for a creek that has no moisture in it. You of course understand it's both water and land that this thirty-three million now covers, and it's never a halt till the Treasury vault yields cash to the 'help one anothers.'

"Yes, hundreds of millions will soon reach to billions for deserted canal, creek, and river, for Muscle Shoal [1] jokes and the Hennepin [2] hoax, where the freight would not burden a flivver. For the dry Arkansaw [3] and the parched Altamaha, where a boat's whistle used all the steam; for the Scuppernong, Raccoon, and Ouachita [4] Creeks and millions for any old stream. For drainage or power we work every hour on Congress to make an impression, but whatever we do in pushing bills through, it's always to help navigation.

"Instead of real boats our league liquidates votes from the Missouri [5] down to the Trinity,[6] and the parched Oconee and the dry Kissimmee log-roll till they find their affinity. The steamboats and freight are held out for bait, for both are an asset while bluffing, but coin of the realm is what guides the pork helm, and without it they'd knock out the stuffing.

1 Over $20,000,000 of public funds have been wasted on Muscle Shoals, with no traffic.

2 Over $7,000,000 of public funds have been wasted on Hennepin Canal, with no traffic.

3 Over $4,000,000 of public funds have been wasted on the Arkansas River, with no traffic.

4 Over $4,500,000 of public funds have been wasted on the Ouachita River, with no traffic.

5 Over $22,000,000 of public funds have been wasted on the Missouri River, with no traffic.

6 Over $2,500,000 of the public funds have been wasted on the Trinity River, with no traffic.

Over $60,000,000 wasted on six items named through the league of bacon.

So our league goes the limit for millions that's in it and grabs every dollar that's loose; 33,000,000 bones is to dredge mud and stones through gold eggs from the dear public goose."

Now, the old Building Bill, though a pork barrel still, had been dumped in the discard each session, and its bills had been switched and its coin had been ditched as it tailed up the knocked-out procession. "It's not fair nor square to get more than your share," cried the Building Bill, "I am hurt horribly." "Don't worry, old soak," replied Waterway Pork, "our bacon will get down to Florida." "That's true now, you've said it, but you get the credit," cried the League's Building Bill, with a caper, and "my people demand I must lend them a hand to reach Treasury gold with a scraper.

"We have 500 votes, pledged on demand notes, to pay for just 500 prizes, and we've scattered our baits through 48 States and given it out in all sizes. Three hundred crossroads we're told will not grow too bold, for a few million dollars will right 'em, but we keep them all guessing for the pork-barrel blessing, as a vote is assured for each item. Sixty millions of dollars will choke him who hollers, and it's scattered from Quagmire to Blytheville, from Hazard to Dillon, and Jim Crow to Clinton, and from Sequire way out to Pikesville.

"The taxpayers' money is molasses and honey, for the votes we are needing; it ties with a flag upon each as our 'monuments' reach, like taxes, clear up to the skies. We jam our bills through in the way that we do, it's patriotic work 'for the soldier,' but contractors pool, while the public we fool as the barrels get bigger and bolder. We move to suspend all rules to the end, our building pork is in a hurry, for rumor is rife that this building bill's life will be lost for the Senate to bury."

MORAL.

When the people get wise to these barrels of size, now crowded with bacon, well fattened, the staves will be smashed, and the heads will be crashed instead of bulging dry purses now flattened. So the pork barrels float, like a leaky old boat, while their pilots continue to holler, "Look out for your share or short you will fare, without even the sign of a dollar." The lesson is plain, we must hit 'em again till the day that the people awaken to a union of strength that has now gone the length, when they'll turn out the gorged league of bacon.

[Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I can not vouch for the authorship of this extraordinary poetical license, and can not state whether written by the great bard or by Bacon, but I admit deep sympathy with the sentiment expressed in the concluding lines, and I insist that this end of the Capitol shall maintain its standards, when compared with the other, in the matter of poetic license. [Applause.]

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, how much time has the gentleman used?

The SPEAKER. Nine minutes.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the one minute.

Mr. SMALL. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER].

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I have made a motion to recommit this bill to the conferees with instruction to accept Senate amendment 144, which, as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] has told you, seeks to give reparation to riparian owners on the east bank of the Mississippi River for destruction to their property by levees on the opposite bank of the river. For about 20 years the people whose properties were destroyed have been before Congress trying to secure relief. They have gone before the Mississippi River Commission, and the Mississippi River Commission, after going into this matter thoroughly, used the expression—I am quoting from memory, but I am paraphrasing the language correctly—that their situation was pathetic in the extreme and that their lands were doomed to perpetual overflow in order that their neighbors across the river might have their property improved and free from overflow. The commission recommended that the Federal Government buy these lands. We have been before the Commerce Committee in the Senate; we have been time and again before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in the House.

The situation is this: On the east bank of the Mississippi River, a few miles north of Baton Rouge, there commences a chain of hills which runs in a northerly direction, with alluvial soil anywhere from one-half to 25 or 30 miles in width between these hills and the Mississippi River and running in this northerly direction to about 10 miles above the city of Vicksburg. These hills then extend in a northeasterly direction for quite a distance, and then on up to Memphis, creating the great Mississippi-Yazoo Sunflower Delta, the greater part of which is represented here so ably by my colleague [Mr. HUMPHREYS]. Some of these people have owned those plantations on the east bank of the Mississippi River for 50 to 75 years. It is an old, settled part of the State, and only once or twice in 20 or 30 years were they overflowed so that a crop could not be made before these levees were built, because the land was higher on the east bank than on the west bank. Then came the Federal Government and placed levees on the west bank, which confined the Mississippi River between the levee and the hills on the eastern side. This, of course, had the effect of flooding the land on the Mississippi side and in many instances destroying much of this property, which has now grown up in willows. I want to bring this out, namely, that this property is not owned by speculators and new people who have come in there, but nearly all of it is now owned by citizens whose fathers were born on those lands.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. COLLIER. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAKER. Approximately, about how many acres are overflowed and involved in this section?

Mr. COLLIER. There are several hundred thousand acres. Some of it lies in the State of Tennessee, in the district represented by Mr. GARRETT. Some of it lies in Louisiana, a great deal of it. Some of it is in Kentucky.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman stated that there was a recommendation by the Mississippi River Commission that the Government should purchase the land.

Mr. COLLIER. Their recommendation was that the Government purchase the land and use the willows on it for revetment work.

Mr. GARD. Has the matter ever been presented to the Flood Control Committee of the House?

Mr. COLLIER. I think it has been before that committee. I know that a short time ago, just before the creation of the Flood Control Committee, those people came to Washington and presented it to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, but the property has been destroyed to such an extent that they can not keep on paying their railroad fare to come up here and present it to us, and after having several hearings they are now leaving it to us to look after it.

I am simply representing, gentlemen, a class of citizens whose property has been absolutely destroyed, property some of which yielded a bale of cotton to the acre up to 20 years ago. In some instances they have not made one crop in 15 years since that time. I am advocating the cause of some people whose property has been destroyed in order that the property of people across the river should be greatly enhanced in value.

Now, by far the greatest amount of this overflowed land lies in the district represented by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN], and with the indulgence of the chairman I will yield to him.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. According to the gentleman's statement, they built the dike on the wrong side of the river?

Mr. COLLIER. No. They built the levees at great cost on the other side of the river. Instead of building a levee on the east side, they used those hills in order to save money, so that the levees on the Louisiana side are built by man while the levees on the Mississippi side are the natural hills, and all the land there, ranging in width from one-half mile to 20 or more miles of alluvial soil, was condemned to destruction and overflow.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Was it possible to build a dike on your side?

Mr. COLLIER. In some places it would be possible, but in other places it would be only as wide as a canal and would be impracticable.

Mr. Speaker, now there is rarely a year but what these lands are inundated, and often for months at a time. Stages of the river at which these lands, before the Louisiana levees were built, were not affected at all now put them under several feet of water, and the riparian owners on the east bank of the Mississippi River have had their incomes destroyed and their property ruined. It is an intolerable situation, where the property of some of our citizens, without any kind of compensation whatever, is destroyed in order to benefit the property of others.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, whatever time the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] did not use I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] has presented to you a very accurate statement of the facts. Over on the Louisiana side of the Mississippi River in the State of Mississippi we have great levees, constructed through the action of Congress to protect the Louisiana lands. Nature provided on the Mississippi side, in those counties that I can speak personally of in my district—Claiborne, Adams, Jefferson, and Wilkinson—a chain of foothills. Between those hills and the Mississippi River are many thousands of acres of very fertile alluvial soil. Before the levees were constructed over on the Louisiana side of the Mississippi River all this soil was under cultivation, producing a bale of cotton per acre, or from 50 to 75 barrels of corn. The people who own that land now, that being the first portion of the State of Mississippi that was ever inhabited by white men, are the descendants of the people who owned it back yonder 150 to 200 years ago. This once fertile land, with magnificent residences thereon of brick and stone and wood, with their darkey quarters, in plantations of thousands of acres each, has been ruined by the action of the Federal Government, and every time the owners come before this Congress for relief they have been turned down. At one time since I have been here the Claims Committee put out a bill before this House providing that the people should be paid for this land, but the House killed it.

Now the Senate has placed on this river and harbor bill an amendment which will compensate these landowners, these people who have had their property destroyed, not by their own conduct or volition, but by the action of the Federal Government itself in endeavoring to protect land over in the State of Louisiana. A more righteous cause never presented itself to this Congress.

You have had a similar condition in the State of Illinois. When a canal was built there which destroyed certain land the people who owned the land were paid for it. Up in the State of Wisconsin, under similar circumstances and conditions, the American Congress has paid for land rendered valueless; yet these citizens in Mississippi have been knocking at the door of Congress for redress of losses that have come through the action of the American Government and have been turned down. If this river and harbor bill is to pass, it seems to me it should be recommitted and the amendment which the Senate placed on it should be placed back on the bill in order that justice should be done to thousands of citizens of this country.

The ancestors of these men fought in the American Revolution. They fought in the War of 1812. Some of this very land that I am speaking about in Jefferson County was owned by Gen. Jackson, who fought for this Government and saved it in 1812.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

I would like to ask the gentleman if these lands which he speaks of that were ruined by the action of the Federal Government were at all subject to inundation prior to the improvement of the other side by the Federal Government?

Mr. QUIN. I would say to the gentleman that an overflow never came on that land except in periods of 20 or 25 years apart, and that was a help to them rather than otherwise, because of the backwater that went on the land depositing alluvial material. But after these levees were constructed on the other side those lands have been overflowed every time the river rises until the water gets up to these high hills and ruins the crops. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see by the conference report that some slight attention is paid to the needs of New England. There are included in this report two surveys which, while they do not directly affect my district, are of great interest to the eastern sections of Massachusetts and New Hampshire. I wish therefore to give this encouragement to gentlemen directly affected by the inclusion in this bill of these surveys: If it takes as long to complete the surveys, and later on as long to carry out the work recommended by these surveys as has been the case in connection with the Connecticut River they want to start early to ask their constituents to keep returning them to Congress, because it is going to be a long, long time before any direct results come from these surveys. There have been numerous surveys of the Connecticut River, as is well known, and we have had most favorable reports, and I am very glad a little progress has been made at this session. We have received the moral support of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in this branch as well as the Committee on Commerce in the other, if not the actual inclusion of the project in the bill as reported and about to be passed. We therefore have not entirely lost hope that eventually this deserving project may be adopted by Congress.

For this delay I do not lay any blame on the Rivers and Harbors Committee at this time; but I do think there is great blame to be laid at the door of some one who may in some way or other be keeping back the conference report on the so-called conservation bill. I know not where that fault lies, but there is fault somewhere, and the Connecticut River is one of the cases where direct suffering is coming to the people for lack of the passage of some form of legislation which will permit development of water power in connection with navigation. To prevent production is not conservation, but absolute waste, and that is exactly what is being done by this effort to tie up any report whatsoever on the so-called conservation bill. We passed the bill a year or more ago. I understand that the other branch has also passed a bill. Can the interest of the country be so neglected that these conferees can not in some way get together? This session is about to expire, and nothing will be done. We will probably begin all over again in the next Congress. Let us hope that before the expiration of the Sixty-sixth Congress some form of legislation may be enacted which will permit the use of the tremendous energy in water power not now being conserved, but being actually wasted through lack of legislation. That is the situation as it appeals to me when a gentleman like the honored gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] is so afraid that something may be done on public lands for private benefit that in addition to preventing anything being done on public lands he also endeavors to prevent anything being done on a navigable stream. It is unfortunate, to say the least. [Applause.]

I hesitate to submit any statistics at this time, as the subject has been debated so many times and within a comparatively recent period. While the Connecticut River project is comparatively small in proportion to the enormous amount of undeveloped power in the country, it is of the very greatest importance to the section directly affected. The hydroelectric power is very much needed as well as the navigation possibilities which will accompany the power development. Under permission to extend my remarks I include herewith a recent editorial which very thoroughly covers the subject so far as the power proposition is concerned. To this is added the value of navigation in such a project as the Connecticut River.

[The New York Times, Feb. 2, 1919.]

WATER POWER WASTED.

At the conference of the National Conservation Congress in Washington in 1910 one of the speakers said that "it will be hundreds of years before we can maintain anything like the development that God Almighty has planted in these hills of ours and that is running down these valleys." But it "has not been going to waste." It will be there for "10,000 years to come," and so on. Of course, it is being wasted every day it is not used. Immense potentialities of production are neglected, coal and oil are squandered, so long as the water power of the country is not developed.

Fifty-five million hydraulic horsepower is absolutely wasted because the conservationists were so long afraid that somebody would make too much money out of it; that the "interests" and the "trusts" would profit excessively in one of the most uncertain and costly enterprises which private capital can undertake. The United States, under the influence of rigid conservation doctrines, has discouraged, made most difficult and hazardous, the development of water-power plants which at the start cost from twice to five times as much as steam plants of the same size. The compensation comes in the much smaller cost of maintenance, fuel, labor.

In 1917, the year of our entry into the war, when everybody was crying for more productiveness and less waste, the new water-power plants completed amounted only to some 250,000 horsepower. In the 13 Western States, where about four-fifths of the undeveloped water power is, the United States owns about two-thirds of the land. To develop that water power the use of some of that land for the dam site, the flowage, the right of way, is usually indispensable. That use could only be obtained by revocable permit. Not always, as the course of a sometime Secretary of the Interior showed, was flagrant misuse the sole cause of revocation. Who could afford to invest in such a ticklish speculation? Capital was frightened away from water-power enterprises in the West. Of water-power sites not on public lands or in the West many are on navigable streams. A special act of Congress must be passed to authorize the development of any one of these. Such an act has been hard or nearly impossible to obtain.

In short, for years conservation for conservation's sake has been the rule. Just as the Government long sought to make Alaska a sort of hermit country sealed to the world of capital, locked up its great mineral resources, warned the accursed capitalist against trespassing or indicted him, prevented or retarded a natural railway growth in order to build with the people's money, really seemed to be conserving Alaska for posterity, so it has practically kept American hydroelectric energy at a standstill, at what expense of oil and coal, what sacrifice of mechanical power, the breath of industrial life, with what detriment to manufacturing and agriculture and the most productive use of labor, let the statisticians estimate.

Last year the Government waked up or was waked up. A water-power bill, which originated in the Departments of Agriculture, Interior, and War, was introduced into Congress, where Senate and House had long been hopelessly at odds about water-power development. This bill, approved in principle even by stern conservationists, consolidates all water-power jurisdiction, whether relating to navigable streams or public lands, in a Federal commission consisting of the heads of the three departments named. It has been amended, not always for the better, in its passage through Congress. It has been passed, but is still conserved in conference. Made law, it would authorize and give security to a long-delayed work of increasing the productive energies of the United States. Water-power development will both create and save. In that development this supposedly progressive Nation lags. Last September President Wilson called it of "capital and immediate importance as a war measure." It is now of capital and immediate importance as a peace measure.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. May I ask if my colleague [Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa] desires any time?

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. No.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, before moving the previous question, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman referred to amendment No. 1, which, in effect, declares the policy of Congress to be that the Secretary of War is vested with discretion to withhold expenditures in cases where the public interest would not suffer unless some cooperation in public improvements looking toward terminals is procured on the part of States or municipalities. I understood the gentleman to say there was one change in the amendment which did not appear in the printed report.

Mr. SMALL. No; the gentleman misunderstood me.

Mr. WALSH. Is the provision in the printed conference report the one which has been agreed upon?

Mr. SMALL. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, previously I endeavored to point out very briefly the objections to including in this bill Senate amendment 144, referring to the Court of Claims the claims of certain riparian landowners on the Mississippi. I said it involved questions of the liability of the United States. There is grave doubt primarily as to whether the Federal Government is liable at all. This amendment gave no consideration to questions of proportional liability between the several States and the United States. Again, this particular amendment is impossible because it simply confers on the Court of Claims jurisdiction to ascertain the value of these lands alleged to be damaged or destroyed, with no jurisdiction whatever to consider the questions of law or equity involved.

Again, this involves a most important precedent. There are constantly being presented to the committee questions of liability of the United States for damages done to riparian lands by reason of improvements to navigable rivers or harbors, and it is an important and dangerous matter to permit a precedent to be formed in this way. Again, it would involve the Government in a contingent liability of anywhere from $10,000,000 to $40,000,000. Lastly, if the House should vote for the recommittal of this bill to include this amendment, it would destroy the possibility of any river and harbor bill at this session.

Now, Mr. Speaker, just one personal word in conclusion, if I may.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield for one question before he concludes?

Mr. SMALL. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. With reference to the substitute for amendment No. 1. Do I understand that that refers to projects like money appropriated for the Mississippi River?

Mr. SMALL. It does.

Mr. DYER. Suppose some of these cities should not furnish these terminals or facilities. Would that prevent the use of the appropriation for the whole river?

Mr. SMALL. Unless they can bring themselves within the terms of the provision. In other words, they must show that the public interest will suffer or that for some good reason they can not at this time proceed to construct the water terminals.

Mr. DYER. Suppose, for instance, my city of St. Louis is building terminals and docks for this purpose. Suppose Memphis or some other city does not do that. What will be the effect upon the whole project, so far as the river is concerned?

Mr. SMALL. The expenditure will be withheld until assurances are given that the particular city in question will discharge its duty in cooperation with the Federal Government.

Mr. DYER. That would be very unjust to a city which had done its whole duty and had expended a great deal of public money.

Mr. SMALL. I think the force of public opinion and the educational processes which it involves would avoid any substantial difficulty which the gentlemen anticipates.

Mr. Speaker, for two years your Rivers and Harbors Committee, as at present constituted, have been endeavoring to discharge their duty in the formulation of river and harbor bills. They take some pride in the fact that they have initiated certain movements looking toward the provisions necessary for the promotion of water transportation. Among those are the providing of adequate water terminals, sufficient boat lines of appropriate type, the interchange of traffic with the railroads, and the amendment of the interstate-commerce laws in such ways as will bring about a more harmonious relationship between the waterways and the railways, and tend to promote water transportation in larger degree. Your committee hope that they have contributed somewhat toward the rehabilitation, if such were needed, of river and harbor legislation; and in this particular bill, speaking my individual opinion, there is no appropriation or provision in the bill which is not in the public interest. The truth of that, after all, will depend upon the verdict of this House and of the country, and not upon the statement of any individual Member.

This is the last river and harbor bill which the present chairman of the committee will have the honor to report.

Mr. GARD. Oh, no; two years from now.

Mr. SMALL. Gentlemen suggest two years from now. Perhaps the future may provide for that, but not in the next Congress. I wish to make this statement that if perchance the present minority party, which will be the majority party in the next House, shall select as the successor of the present chairman the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENNEDY] [applause], the responsible duties of that position will devolve upon a Member of this House who is competent to discharge them and worthy of the honor. [Applause.] I know him well, I have worked with him, and I appreciate his integrity, his ability, and his capacity, and it will be my pleasure to cooperate with him in the fullest extent in the future. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question, both on the motion to recommit and the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. COLLIER. I have offered the motion to recommit, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COLLIER moves to recommit the conference report to the conferees with instructions to the managers on the part of the House to recede and concur in Senate amendment No. 144, which is as follows:

"SEC. 7. That as to the lands investigated, surveyed, or reported on under authority of a provision of the river and harbor act approved July 25, 1912, a full report of which is set out in House Document No. 1010, Sixty-second Congress, third session, and wherein the recommendation is made that the title to said lands be acquired by the United States for their use in river improvement, the owners thereof may institute suit against the United States in the Court of Claims to ascertain the value of said lands before their damage or destruction, and said court shall render judgment therefor: Provided, however, That in the trial of said suits said court shall permit any party who at any time since the damage or destruction of such lands owned or held title thereto or any interest therein, and who has become dispossessed thereof by reason of foreclosure proceedings, or otherwise compelled to sacrific title thereto as a result of said injuries to appear as a party claimant by filing petition setting up their former interest therein, and said court shall consider the claims of all of said parties and render judgment for whatever amount said court considers equitably or justly due the respective parties.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves the previous question on the conference report and also on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the motion was lost.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, before I call up the conference reports I ask to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 15462, the Military Academy bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 15462. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. DENT, Mr. FIELDS, and Mr. KAHN.

RETENTION OF UNIFORM AND PERSONAL EQUIPMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1127).

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 13366) permitting any person who served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the present war to retain his uniform and personal equipment and to wear the same under certain conditions.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13366) permitting any person who served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the present war to retain his uniform and personal equipment, and to wear the same under certain conditions, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agreed to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 3. That section 126 of the act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, be amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 126. That an enlisted man honorably discharged from the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps since November 11, 1918, or who may hereafter be honorably discharged, shall receive 5 cents per mile from the place of his discharge to his actual bona fide home or residence, or original muster into the service, at his option: Provided, That for sea travel on discharge, transportation and subsistence only shall be furnished to enlisted men: Provided, That naval reservists duly enrolled who have been honorably released from active service since November 11, 1918, or who may hereafter be honorably released from active service, shall be entitled likewise to receive mileage as aforesaid.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the figure "4"; and the Senate agree to the same.

S. H. DENT, JR.,
W. J. FIELDS,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House of Representatives.

GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
G. M. HITCHCOCK,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment to (H. R. 13366) an act entitled, "An act permitting any person who has served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the present war to retain his uniform and personal equipment, and to wear the same under certain conditions," submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed upon:

The House receded upon Senate amendment No. 1 with an amendment giving to enlisted men in the Naval Reserve who have been on active duty the same privileges allowed to the enlisted men in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps upon muster out. The Senate receded from amendment No. 2, providing for extra pay to officers and enlisted men in the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps, this matter having already been adjusted by both Houses in the revenue bill. The only other change, of course, is in the numbering of the sections.

S. H. DENT, Jr.,
W. J. FIELDS,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DENT. Now, Mr. Speaker, unless some Member desires to ask a question, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

RELIEF OF INFORMAL CONTRACTS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Speaker, if we are going to consider this conference report we ought to have a full attendance, and I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. KAHN. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that he call up the other conference report on the resumption of voluntary enlistments.

Mr. DENT. I think that ought to be disposed of, but I have not the consent of the Speaker to recognize me for three different propositions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. DENT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on Senate bill 5279, to authorize the resumption of voluntary enlistment in the Regular Army, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5279) to authorize the resumption of voluntary enlistment in the Regular Army, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House No. 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the amendment of the House insert the following: ": Provided, That from and after the approval of this act, one third of the enlistments in the Regular Army of the United States shall be for a period of one year, and the remaining two-thirds thereof shall be for the period of three years. Any person enlisting under the provisions of this act shall not be required to serve with the reserves. The pay of the men enlisted hereunder shall be the same as that provided by the act entitled 'An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States,' approved May 18, 1917: Provided further, That after the expiration of one year those enlisting for the period of three years may be discharged in the discretion of the Secretary of War under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by him after one year of service"; and the House agree to the same.

S. H. DENT, Jr.,
W. J. FIELDS,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
G. M. HITCHCOCK,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. 5279) to authorize the resumption of voluntary enlistments in the Regular Army, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed upon, to wit: Instead of providing for a period of enlistments for one year only, as decided by the House, the conferees agreed that one-third of the enlistments should be for a period of one year and the remaining two-thirds for a period of three years. The conferees adopted the House provision exempting enlistments from service in the reserve. An agreement was reached as to the House provision making the pay of enlisted men the same as that of the act of May 18, 1917, the act providing for the temporary increase in the Army. The provision was also agreed upon to the effect that those enlisting for three years might be discharged at the discretion of the Secretary of War after the expiration of a period of one year.

S. H. DENT, Jr.,
W. J. FIELDS,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I may state briefly that the conferees on the part of the House and Senate made a compromise on the question as to the period of enlistment by providing that one-third of the enlistments would be for one year and two-thirds for a period of three years.

Mr. HASTINGS. But the number is not increased.

Mr. DENT. No.

Mr. WALSH. Neither one serves in the reserves.

Mr. DENT. Neither one serves in the reserves.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state how the proportions are fixed at one-third and two-thirds?

Mr. DENT. That is largely a matter of guesswork. It was first suggested in conference that a certain number of the Army enlist for a period of one year and the balance for a period of three years.

Mr. WALSH. As I understand it, the Army will have no enlistment for three years with four years in the reserves after this becomes a law?

Mr. DENT. That is true.

Mr. TILSON. What do I understand about the one-third; what does that mean? Suppose you can not get any men under the three-year enlistment, but all want to enlist in the one-third for one year; how many men can you enlist for one year?

Mr. DENT. You could only enlist one-third of the total.

Mr. TILSON. And not one-third of those who enlist?

Mr. DENT. No; one-third of the total.

Mr. TILSON. If the Army constitutes 175,000 men, that would authorize one-third of 175,000, even if no one enlisted for the three-year period?

Mr. DENT. That is undoubtedly the construction to be placed upon the agreement reached by the conferees. Mr.

Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

VALIDATION OF INFORMAL WAR CONTRACTS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, this matter is one of the most important matters awaiting attention, and we ought to have a full attendance whenever it is considered. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will not the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] withdraw that motion and allow us to go on with the appropriation bill?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, this is a very pressing matter, and it is something that necessarily must go back to conference. It does not make any difference what action the House takes, this bill necessarily must go back to conference, because there is a complete disagreement. We are in exactly the same situation that we were when we started. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will not make the point of order that there is no quorum present, but will let us dispose of this matter in some shape. If the matter comes up, it is my intention to make a motion that the House do further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts insist upon his point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I think I shall have to insist upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. WALSH (interrupting the count). Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point temporarily.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thanks the gentleman, and the Clerk will report the conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

S. H. DENT, Jr.,
W. J. FIELDS,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN,
C. S. THOMAS,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a motion to instruct the conferees.

Mr. CANNON. They have already been instructed, have they not?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. But I want to instruct them again.

Mr. GORDON. They have been twice instructed against this same thing.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not the same thing.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman has the right to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that, under a long line of decisions in matters similar to this, there is nothing before the House. Speaker Reed held there was nothing before the House, and such a motion would not be in order at this time.

Mr. FOSTER. Is not this bill before the House?

The SPEAKER. There is nothing in this report that the House has to act on.

Mr. KAHN. The bill is before the House with a Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. That is correct. We are exactly where we started.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the bill goes back to conference, I desire to move to instruct the conferees.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Is a motion now in order that the House concur in the Senate amendment in regard to mining claims, with an amendment that the amount shall not exceed a certain amount?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is not in order to concur in a part of the Senate amendment with an amendment. The House must by its action in the end dispose of the Senate amendment. The House can concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, or it can insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment, but it can not concur in a part of the Senate amendment with an amendment. It must act upon the whole amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is that the case the gentleman from Virginia presents?

Mr. MANN. That is the case, because the gentleman's suggestion was with reference to section 7 of the Senate amendment. The Senate made one amendment to the entire bill. The action taken by the House, whatever it may be, must be upon the entire amendment. Of course we can concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment striking out all of the Senate amendment and inserting what the House thinks should be inserted, but you can not concur in a part of the Senate amendment. You can instruct the conferees before they are appointed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has answered the inquiry of the gentleman from Virginia, and the Chair concurs in his answer.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FIELDS. When this matter was before the House a few days ago, the House instructed the conferees to disagree to section 5 of the conference report. Would a motion be in order to send the conferees back to conference uninstructed?

Mr. MANN. Of course a motion to send the conferees back uninstructed is not in order, because it is not necessary.

Mr. FIELDS. The conferees go back instructed unless the House instructs them.

Mr. GORDON. We have already instructed them.

Mr. MANN. I doubt very much whether they go back instructed. They have reported that they disagree on the instruction that was had. Of course, the conferees might feel obligated to retain the instructions of the House, but when you appoint new conferees my impression is that the old instructions go by the board.

The SPEAKER. The old instructions are played out. We have to start anew again. This matter is precisely where it was when the conferees were appointed.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. The conferees having made a report, and the Speaker having laid the bill before the House, the only action that the House can take at this time is to send it back to conference, is it not?

The SPEAKER. Of course.

Mr. WINGO. Is a motion in order to send the bill back to conference and appoint new conferees?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I make that motion.

Mr. KAHN. It has already been made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] has already made that motion.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes in regard to this matter, which is a very important matter for the business interests of this country and the European nations.

Mr. FOSTER. Would not the gentleman wait until I offer my motion to instruct the conferees?

Mr. GORDON. Oh, well, we want to divide the time on this.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman propose to discuss the merits of the proposition?

Mr. KAHN. No.

Mr. CANNON. On this bill?

The SPEAKER. If it gets in conference, then before the conferees are appointed the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] can make his motion. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House insist on its disagreement and ask for a new conference.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alabama yield me 10 minutes.

Mr. DENT. I yield the gentleman from California 10 minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the conferees on the part of the House, taking the instructions of the House, refused to accept the Senate amendment on the mineral section of the informal-contract bill. The conferees on the part of the Senate are just as firm for the Senate propositon as the conferees on the part of the House. But they suggested that we call to the attention of the House a proposition that they had in mind, namely, that the bill should be limited to a total expenditure of $8,000,000 and that the ores to be paid for should be pyrites, manganese, chrome, and tungsten, the ores that were heretofore spoken of on this floor. The Senate conferees claim they have the assurance of their colleagues in the Senate that this proposition must be insisted upon even with a possibility of the bill failing. It is a serious proposition. There are over 6,600 informal war claims involving an aggregate of $1,600,000,000 in this country. Those are claims in this country alone. There are claims from foreign governments aggregating probably as much more, so that in all probability $3,000,000,000 is tied up at the present because we have not succeeded in passing any legislation.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I do.

Mr. CANNON. That is not $3,000,000,000 tied up in reference to these minerals?

Mr. KAHN. No; I say the legislation ties up practically $3,000,000,000.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely, but that is provided for in the House provision.

Mr. KAHN. In the conference report.

Mr. CANNON. And it is not dependent upon the proposition where the House instructed not to agree?

Mr. KAHN. No; it is not; if the gentleman will allow me, the Senate conferees are insisting that some provision be made for some of these mineral claims and are willing to limit the entire amount to $8,000,000.

Mr. CANNON. The Senate and House are both agreed or would agree on the $3,000,000,000 that the gentleman refers to?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; that is quite true.

Mr. CANNON. Now, the House is for that, but the House instructed touching the other matter not to agree?

Mr. KAHN. Therefore, the House conferees refused to agree.

Mr. CANNON. And the Senate says the $3,000,000,000 of proper claims can go to, well back, unless the amendment proposing a limit of $8,000,000 is agreed to. In other words, if the gentleman will allow me, that provision about the minerals is wicked. There is no appeal from the Secretary of the Interior. The other is guarded, guarded well. This bill was passed on the 5th of October and no authority was ever given to the Secretary of the Interior to make any contracts.

Mr. KAHN. But when it passed the House it was not guarded with regard to appeals that way, and the Senate provision which the conferees have accepted and agreed to——

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; this is a House bill——

Mr. KAHN. In the original bill as it passed the House the Secretary had practically plenary power.

Mr. CANNON. I will try to get a little time.

Mr. KAHN. Now, I simply want to state the facts to the House. It would be a great misfortune if the bill failed altogether. The conferees on the part of the House having been instructed will carry out so far as they can those instructions.

Mr. CALDWELL. Does not the gentleman think $8,000,000 is a pretty good price to pay for the privilege of paying some honest debts?

Mr. KAHN. Well, I do not think that question is before the House just now. That has been heretofore discussed. There is a difference of opinion in the House, and I simply took this time in order that I might state to the House what the parliamentary situation is.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I want to ask the gentleman if it has not long been the custom between the two Houses, where legislation originates in one House and amendments are put on in the other House, that the House where the legislation originates insists that the amendments put on by the other House should go out; if it is not the practice for the other House to recede from the amendments and not seek to defeat the legislation by stubbornness?

Mr. KAHN. That has been the unwritten law of conferences. Generally, rather than let legislation fail altogether, the amending House in the final analysis recedes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Why, if these claims for minerals be just, is the limit fixed for payment to the extent of $8,000,000? Why not pay them all?

Mr. KAHN. I do not think it is my province or that I should be called upon to answer these questions at this time, because they are not in conference. The question in conference is, Will this House accept the amendment or will it allow the bill to fail? I do not think the conferees ought to be called upon to discuss the merits at this time, because we were instructed.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I was simply taking the gentleman at his word and proceeding in good faith. The gentleman has laid before us the proposition that the Senate hitched on to our original bill a rider which called for the payment of $8,000,000, presumably of just claims, and that they were endeavoring to ingratiate that rider in our favor by saying it was limited to $8,000,000.

Mr. KAHN. I will say to the gentleman that Mr. Manning, of the Mining Bureau, appeared before the conferees in the early stages of the conference and announced to the conferees the entire amount involved was between four and one-half millions and $8,000,000

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer a motion at the proper time to instruct the conferees——

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I think that is hardly fair to do that in advance of what I announced and expected to do.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; it is more than fair, because this side prevailed in its position two to one, and I have the right to recognition.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the gentleman has, and I do not think the gentleman ought to ask it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], because he was trying to get in two or three times before.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] if he desires some time?

Mr. CANNON. I would like 10 minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, can we not have some of these respective motions disposed of? There is a desire on the part of the House——

Mr. FOSTER. If they will vote on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] and then let me offer my motion to instruct, we could get directly to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think we have the right to have the motion to instruct pending, and the substitute may be pending. Here we are proceeding with the debate——

The SPEAKER. The time has not come for the motion. The time to instruct the conferees of the House, demanded on the part of the House, is just before the Chair appoints the conferees.

Mr. FOSTER. We can vote on this amendment and then the gentleman can do it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it would be well to have some arrangement whereby we can discuss the motion.

Mr. CANNON. What is the issue now?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know. Nobody knows.

The SPEAKER. The thing they are talking about is whether the gentleman from Illinois ought to have the right of way, or the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. CANNON. To do what?

The SPEAKER. To offer a motion to instruct the conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. CANNON. That is subject to an amendment when offered. The Chair has already ruled——

The SPEAKER. The only thing before the House is the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT].

Mr. FOSTER. Why not vote on that?

Mr. DENT. Then, I move the previous question on my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves the previous question.

Mr. STAFFORD. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. That motion does not apply to any motion to instruct the conferees?

The SPEAKER. It does not. It is a flat motion to do the thing that he moved to do. The question is——

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw that motion for the present.

Mr. CANNON. It is not in order to make it now.

Mr. FOSTER. It will be when we vote on this.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] going to do with his hour?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DENT. If the previous question is ordered on my motion to further disagree to the Senate amendment, what will be the effect as to any subsequent motion?

The SPEAKER. None whatever.

Mr. DENT. It goes right back to conference?

The SPEAKER. No; it does not. If the previous question prevails, the Chair will immediately put the gentleman's motion, and if that carries, the Chair will appoint the conferees; but in the meantime he would give the gentleman from Illinois an opportunity to get in his motion to instruct.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, is that motion debatable?

The SPEAKER. Yes; it is debatable unless the previous question is ordered.

Mr. CANNON. There ought to be, then, unanimous consent, if the previous question prevails, to discuss the matter of instruction. Why do you not ask unanimous consent?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I wish to propound a parliamentary inquiry. What is the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT]?

The SPEAKER. To further disagree to the Senate amendment and ask for a conference.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Is it in order for a member of the committee to offer a motion to amend the motion of the gentleman from Alabama and further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment, with the same instructions to the conferees that prevailed before?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves the previous question.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. But he withdrew that, if you please.

Mr. DENT. I renewed it.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. He had withdrawn it. But I made the parliamentary inquiry——

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman moves the previous question and the previous question is ordered, that will end all this.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. That is what we do not want.

The SPEAKER. I know; but not wanting a thing does not change the parliamentary situation.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I want to know whether or not his motion can be amended to the effect that the House further insist on its disagreement, and the conferees shall go under the same instruction as they have before?

The SPEAKER. That is the very thing the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] is trying to do after all this other is cleared up.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] is going to ask for different instructions.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] moves the previous question.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, if the previous question is ordered now, and then there is a proposition to instruct the conferees by my colleague [Mr. FOSTER] or anybody else, the previous question operates, and there will be no time for any debate.

Mr. FIELDS. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CANNON. Therefore I think there ought to be an agreement that there should be.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the gentleman from Illinois is correct. The previous question operates on this motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] and the proposed motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], or whoever offers it, and is a separate proposition and is debatable, unless the previous question is ordered on it. That clears up the situation, right or wrong.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire if we can not arrive at some understanding to let the gentleman from Illinois offer his motion, and then let me or some other Member offer a motion as a substitute, and let the previous question be ordered after debate.

Mr. WINGO. I would object to that. The other day the gentleman moved the previous question when I was on the floor, and we did not have an opportunity for one word of debate on this question to instruct.

The SPEAKER. It is always competent to move the previous question by the man who has charge of it.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Would the ordering of the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] preclude the motion made by the gentleman from Wisconsin?

The SPEAKER. Of course, it would.

Mr. DYER. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion for the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT].

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT].

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to instruct the conferees to agree to the amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FOSTER:

"SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior be——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the House is not sufficiently in order to hear the amendment.

The SPEAKER. That point of order is well taken.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will withdraw the point of order for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws the point of order. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to adjust, liquidate, and pay such net losses as have been suffered by any person, firm, or corporation, by reason of producing or preparing to produce, either manganese, chrome, pyrites, or tungsten in compliance with the request or demand of the Department of the Interior, the War Industries Board, the War Trade Board, the Shipping Board, or the Emergency Fleet Corporation to supply the urgent needs of the Nation in the prosecution of the war; said minerals being enumerated in the act of Congress approved October 5, 1918, entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of those ores, metals, and minerals which have formerly been largely imported, or of which there is or may be an inadequate supply."

The said Secretary shall make such adjustments and payments in each case as he shall determine to be just and equitable; that the decision of said Secretary shall be conclusive and final, subject to the limitation hereinafter provided; that all payments and expenses incurred by said Secretary, including personal services, traveling and subsistence expenses, supplies, postage, printing, and all other expenses incident to the proper prosecution of this work, both in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as the Secretary of the Interior may deem essential and proper, shall be paid from the funds appropriated by the said act of October 5, 1918, and that said funds and appropriations shall continue to be available for said purpose until such time as the said Secretary shall have fully exercised the authority herein granted and performed and completed the duties hereby provided and imposed: Provided, however, That the payments and disbursements made under the provisions of this section for and in connection with the payments and settlements of the claims herein described, and the said expenses of administration shall in no event exceed the sum of $8,500,000: And provided further, That said Secretary shall consider, approve, and dispose of only such claims as shall be made hereunder and filed with the Department of the Interior within three months from and after the approval of this act: And provided further, That no claim shall be allowed or paid by said Secretary unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of the said Secretary that the expenditures so made or obligations so incurred by the claimant were made in good faith for or upon property which contained either manganese, chrome, pyrites, or tungsten in sufficient quantities to be of commercial importance: And provided further, That no claims shall be paid unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of said Secretary that moneys were invested or obligations were incurred subsequent to April 6, 1917, and prior to November 12, 1918, in a legitimate attempt to produce either manganese, chrome, pyrites, or tungsten for the needs of the Nation for the prosecution of the war, and that no profits of any kind shall be included in the allowance of any of said claims, and that no investment for merely speculative purposes shall be recognized in any manner by said Secretary: And provided further, That the settlement of any claim arising under the provisions of this section shall not bar the United States Government, through any of its duly authorized agencies, or any committee of Congress hereafter duly appointed, from the right of review of such settlement, nor the right to recover any money paid by the Government to any party under and by virtue of the provisions of this section, if the Government has been defrauded, and the right of recovery in all such cases shall extend to the executors, administrators, heirs, and assigns of any party.

That a report of all operations under this section, including receipts and disbursements, shall be made to Congress on or before the first Monday in December of each year.

That nothing in this section shall be construed to confer jurisdiction upon any court to entertain a suit against the United States: Provided further, That in determining the net losses of any claimant the Secretary of the Interior shall, among other things, take into consideration and charge to the claimant the then market value of any ores or minerals on hand belonging to the claimant, and also the salvage or usable value of any machinery or other appliances which may be claimed was purchased to equip said mine for the purpose of complying with the request or demand of the agencies of the Government above mentioned in the manner aforesaid.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will I have the privilege of offering an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois in the nature of a substitute?

The SPEAKER. You can either offer an amendment or a substitute.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to be recognized for that purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. I have the floor, Mr. Speaker. I did not yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin to make such a motion. He got up and made a parliamentary inquiry and then said he wanted to offer a substitute. He rose and made a parliamentary inquiry, and then said he wanted to offer an amendment. I do not believe under the rules he has a right to get up and get the floor in that manner and then offer a substitute.

Mr. CANNON. Will my colleague yield for a moment?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. My colleague is a perfectly fair man. As I understand he moves this as an instruction. It is a little awkward fix so far as that is concerned, but let that be as it may. The object of the gentleman is to get the expression of the House for the information and guidance of the conferees. Now, his proposition has been read. It seems that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] wants another and a different proposition. I think that ought to be read. In other words, my friend from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] ought not to undertake to shackle the House by a motion for the previous question that will cut out the privilege of the House to work its will.

Mr. FOSTER. I think my colleague is right about that. I do not desire and never have desired to do a thing of that kind. Yet the gentleman from Wisconsin availed himself of all the parliamentary law that he knew necessary to get in a motion, and the previous question was ordered, and the balance of us had to sit still without a word and vote when our names were called, and we have not received very great consideration as to what we wanted to do.

Mr. STAFFORD. We had an understanding that I would be recognized to offer a motion to recommit.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; and the gentleman offered his motion and moved the previous question.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was carrying out the understanding of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I want to add the language I send to the Clerk's desk as a part of my motion to instruct the conferees on the part of the House, and I wish to state that this is the part of the former conference report as agreed to by the conferees, up to but not including section 5.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman has not completed his motion, I do not wish to ask recognition to offer my amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. If there is no objection, I will offer my motion. If there is, of course I will not. I will state again that this is a conference report on the war contract bill, leaving out of it as reported section 5, and I offer a motion to instruct the conferees to agree to section 5 with an amendment.

Mr. GORDON. We have voted that down twice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] asks to modify his motion.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman says this is a conference report. Does the gentleman seek to include part of the conference report in his motion?

Mr. FOSTER. It includes that part of the conference report to which there seemed to be no objection when it was reported on a former occasion and excludes section 5, which included war minerals. Now, I offer as an instruction to the conferees a motion to agree to the Senate amendment with this amendment—that the managers on the part of the House agree to it.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Why is that offered as a part of the motion?

Mr. HOWARD. So that the comparison can be made.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand it, the only thing in disagreement is section 5.

Mr. FOSTER. I am offering a motion to agree to this amendment with an amendment, and my motion takes the conference report up to section 5, and then adds this other to it, which takes the place of the war minerals section.

Mr. CANNON. This is an amendment, then, and not an instruction?

Mr. FOSTER. It is a motion to instruct the conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Can it be an instruction and an amendment at one and the same time?

Mr. FOSTER. If there is objection to it, why, all right.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

Mr. WALSH. I object to that. Let us do this in an orderly way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] offers to modify his motion, and the Clerk will report it as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FOSTER moves to instruct the managers on the part of the House to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment so that the Senate amendment will read as follows:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to adjust, pay, or discharge any agreement, express or implied, upon a fair and equitable basis that has been entered into in good faith during the present emergency and prior to November 12, 1918, by any officer or agent acting under his authority, direction, or instruction, or that of the President, with any person, firm, or corporation for the acquisition of lands, or the use thereof, or for damages resulting from notice by the Government of its intention to acquire or use said lands, or for the production, manufacture, sale, acquisition, or control of equipment, materials, or supplies, or for services——

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I understand this is a motion to instruct the conferees.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Now, I take it that that is a motion to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. If the Chair understands it, it is an instruction to the managers on the part of the House to agree to section 5 of this Senate substitute with certain amendments.

Mr. WINGO. No, Mr. Speaker; if the Chair will permit me, what the gentleman from Illinois has done is to move to instruct the House conferees to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment, so that it will read identically with the language that the conferees reported before, except the disputed section 5; and on disputed section 5 the gentleman from Illinois proposes to accept the matter agreed to by the Committee on Mines and Mining. In other words, the gentleman from Illinois moves to instruct the conferees to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment, so that the Senate amendment will read as the Clerk is reading.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly what the Chair stated in answer to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are we not beyond the stage when we can move to concur? The House has taken definitive action to disagree to the Senate amendments.

Mr. GORDON. And has instructed the conferees.

Mr. STAFFORD. And now the only motion in order is to instruct the conferees.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what we are doing.

The SPEAKER. That is what we are trying to do.

Mr. STAFFORD. The motion now is to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. My motion is that the managers on the part of the House be instructed to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment, which has been partly read by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. That is the way the Chair has understood it for the last half hour. The Clerk will read.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GORDON. After the conferees have been twice instructed on this question, and have now been finally instructed to insist on their disagreement, is it in order for the House to undertake to make a new bill in a conference report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated two or three times as thoroughly as anybody can state anything that when it comes back with this disagreement it starts in new, and what happened before as to instructions does not amount to a hill of beans.

Mr. HOWARD. It is de novo.

The SPEAKER. That is it; it is de novo.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, has the House already disagreed to this Senate amendment?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. CANNON. And that is disposed of. This is a proceeding to instruct the conferees.

The SPEAKER. This is a motion to instruct the managers on the part of the House to do certain things or to stand out for certain things.

Mr. CANNON. It is a very awkward situation.

Mr. CALDWELL rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. CALDWELL. I make the point of order that it is out of order to instruct the conferees to agree to anything that we have instructed the conferees to disagree to.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled. The Clerk will read the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FOSTER moves to instruct the managers on the part of the House to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment, so that the Senate amendment will read as follows:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to adjust, pay, or discharge any agreement, express or implied, upon a fair and equitable basis that has been entered into in good faith during the present emergency and prior to November 12, 1918, by any officer or agent acting under his authority, direction, or instruction, or that of the President, with any person, firm, or corporation for the acquisition of lands, or the use thereof, or for damages resulting from notice by the Government of its intention to acquire or use said lands, or for the production, manufacture, sale, acquisition, or control of equipment, materials, or supplies, or for services, or for facilities, or other purposes connected with the prosecution of the war, when such agreement has been performed in whole or in part, or expenditures have been made or obligations incurred upon the faith of the same by any such person, firm, or corporation prior to November 12, 1918, and such agreement has not been executed in the manner prescribed by law: Provided, That in no case shall any award either by the Secretary of War or the Court of Claims include prospective or possible profits on any part of the contract beyond the goods and supplies delivered to and accepted by the United States and a reasonable remuneration for expenditures and obligations or liabilities necessarily incurred in performing or preparing to perform said contract or order: Provided further, That this act shall not authorize payment to be made of any claim not presented before June 30, 1919: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall report to Congress at the beginning of its next session following June 30, 1919, a detailed statement showing the nature, terms, and conditions of every such agreement and the payment or adjustment thereof: And provided further, That no settlement of any claim arising under any such agreement shall bar the United States Government through any of its duly authorized agencies, or any committee of Congress hereafter duly appointed, from the right of review of such settlement, nor the right of recovery of any money paid by the Government to any party under any settlement entered into or payment made under the provisions of this act, if the Government has been defrauded, and the right of recovery in all such cases shall exist against the executors, administrators, heirs, successors, and assigns, of any party or parties: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to relieve any officer or agent of the United States from criminal prosecution under the provisions of any statute of the United States for any fraud or criminal conduct: And provided further, That this act shall in no way relieve or excuse any officer or his agent from such criminal prosecution because of any irregularity or illegality in the manner of the execution of such agreement: And provided further, That in all proceedings hereunder witnesses may be compelled to attend, appear, and testify, and produce books, papers, and letters, or other documents; and the claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving the same shall not excuse such witness from testifying, but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person in trial of any criminal proceeding.

"SEC. 2. That the Court of Claims is hereby given jurisdiction on petition of any individual, firm, company, or corporation referred to in section 1 hereof, to find and award fair and just compensation in the cases specified in said section in the event that such individual, firm, company, or corporation shall not be willing to accept the adjustment, payment, or compensation offered by the Secretary of War as hereinbefore provided, or in the event that the Secretary of War shall fail or refuse to offer a satisfactory adjustment, payment, or compensation as provided for in said section.

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War, through such agency as he may designate or establish, is empowered, upon such terms as he or it may determine to be in the interest of the United States, to make equitable and fair adjustments and agreements, upon the termination or in settlement or readjustment of agreements or arrangements entered into with any foreign government or governments or nationals thereof, prior to November 12, 1918, for the furnishing to the American Expeditionary Forces or otherwise for war purposes of supplies, materials, facilities, services, or the use of property, or for the furnishing of any thereof by the United States to any foreign government or governments, whether or not such agreements or arrangements have been entered into in accordance with applicable statutory provisions; and the other provisions of this act shall not be applicable to such adjustments.

"SEC. 4. That whenever, under the provisions of this act, the Secretary of War shall make an award to any prime contractor with respect to any portion of his contract which he shall have sublet to any other person, firm, or corporation who has in good faith made expenditures, incurred obligations, rendered service, or furnished material, equipment, or supplies to such prime contractor, with the knowledge and approval of any agent of the Secretary of War duly authorized thereunto, before payment of said award the Secretary of War shall require such prime contractor to present satisfactory evidence of having paid said subcontractor or of the consent of said subcontractor to look for his compensation to said prime contractor only; and in the case of the failure of said prime contractor to present such evidence or such consent, the Secretary of War shall pay directly to said subcontractor the amount found to be due under said award; and in case of the insolvency of any prime contractor the subcontractor of said prime contractor shall have a lien upon the funds arising from said award prior and superior to the lien of any general creditor of said prime contractor."

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Is the matter which has just been read matter that was added to the House bill in the Senate?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is a matter the conferees are supposed to be instructed to agree to.

Mr. FIELDS. That is the conference report agreed upon, excluding the mineral section.

Mr. WALSH. But we have never agreed to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized under the rules of the House for one hour.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion.

The SPEAKER. The time has not yet come when the gentleman can offer his motion. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor for an hour. If he does not move the previous question within the hour anybody has a right to get the floor and move to amend or substitute. The rules of the House have been here for a century.

Mr. STAFFORD. I only want the opportunity to offer my motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will give the gentleman an opportunity. If the gentleman from Illinois moves the previous question the House has a remedy to vote it down. It seems as if more than three-quarters of the House felt that it was under obligations to vote for the previous question every time it is moved on anything.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California makes the point that no quorum is present, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-four Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names.

Baer	Denison	Kinkaid	Sanders, La.
Barkley	Dooling	Knutson	Sanford
Barnhart	Dupré	Kreider	Saunders, Va.
Birch	Emerson	Langley	Scully
Black	Essen	Lazaro	Sears
Blackmon	Estopinal	McAndrews	Sells
Booher	Ferris	Mondell	Shackleford
Britten	Flynn	Moon	Steele
Browning	Francis	Mott	Stevenson
Brumbaugh	Gallagher	Mudd	Sullivan
Carlin	Glynn	Neely	Swift
Chandler, N. Y.	Godwin, N. C.	Nicholls, S. C.	Tague
Clark, Fla.	Goodall	Nichols, Mich.	Taylor, Ark.
Coady	Goodwin, Ark.	Nolan-	Templeton
Collier	Graham, Pa.	Oliver, Ala.	Thompson
Cooper, Ohio	Gray, N. J.	Park	Tinkham
Cooper, W. Va.	Gregg	Porter	Van Dyke
Copley	Hamill	Powers	Vare
Costello	Hamilton, N. Y.	Price	Venable
Cox	Heintz	Rainey, J. W.	Walker
Crago	Helm	Riordan	Ward
Crisp	Hensley	Roberts	Wheeler
Davey	Hutchinson	Rowland	Wilson, Ill.
Delaney	Johnson, S. Dak.	Russell	Zihlman
Dempsey	Kennedy, Iowa	Sabath

The SPEAKER. On this call 326 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. COOPER of Ohio indefinitely on account of illness.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 13277, making appropriations to provide for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the District of Columbia appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. SISSON, Mr. MCANDREWS, and Mr. DAVIS.

VALIDATION OF INFORMAL WAR CONTRACTS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, the motion which I have offered is to instruct the managers upon the part of the House to agree to the Senate amendment; that is, the original Senate amendment, as passed by the Senate, before any conference was held, together with an amendment which has been read at the Clerk's desk, which takes the place of section 7 of the original amendment and of section 5 of the last conference report. This amendment in reference to war minerals, which seems to be the point upon which the House and Senate have disagreed, provides that the Secretary of the Interior may settle these war-mineral claims to the amount of eight and one-half million dollars. It has been said before upon the floor of the House that the Secretary of the Interior can use the full amount of $50,000,000 under the war-minerals bill. So in order to obviate any danger of that kind it has been limited to not more than the amount I have mentioned. It also throws around the amendment safeguards for the Government providing that only upon the personal request or demand of the Government agencies could they be paid, and it then provides for the material which may be on hand—machinery or whatever it may be—and limits the matter to bona fide claims——

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Not now—bona fide claims, not speculative claims, but those where the agents of the Government went out and demanded or requested that these men furnish these war materials. These demands or requests were made not all by the Secretary of the Interior or through his agents, but through the War Industries Board, through the Shipping Board, and if anyone would take the time to read the hearings before the Committee on Mines and Mining when the war-minerals bill was under consideration he would see that Mr. Leith, the representative of the Shipping Board, stated what they would carry out in reference to the imports of these war materials into this country. The Shipping Board did not carry out this statement, as I am informed. The Committee on Mines and Mining this morning held a meeting and took up this amendment section by section, paragraph by paragraph, and the committee agreed by a majority, and a large majority, that they would approve of this amendment. I think it is fair and right that these people should be paid something, should be paid their losses. The amendment provides that they shall be paid only their net losses and not any profit.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield just to suggest, in reference to that bill passed in October for $50,000,000, that that was for the very specific purpose that the amendment provides?

Mr. FOSTER. Exactly. This also names but four minerals which the Secretary of the Interior, through the Director of Mines, shall pay for. It does not take the whole scope of the bill and put all of the minerals that were there. The Secretary thinks this is fair and just for these four minerals to be included. No account is taken of newspaper articles or of every fellow who went out and dug a hole in the ground, but he must be able to show that he really had the minerals there—not a prospecting claim, nothing of that kind, but only the actual mineral that he went out and secured for his Government when his Government asked him to do it, when his Government went to him personally and requested or demanded that he do it. They sent for many of these men to come to Washington, and they came at their own expense, and then appealed to them to go home and do this work for their Government, which was vital to the winning of the war.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Not now.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under what authority of law?

Mr. FOSTER. Under no authority of law—of course not. If this were done under authority of law, we would not be here with this bill, and the gentleman knows that if it was according to law we would not be here with these war contracts, either. [Applause.] That argument does not amount to anything. The question is, in war time, when the Government goes out and requests—demands—that people do certain things to win the war; and, when the war is over, shall a great Government like this leave these men bankrupt, leave them penniless, to go out into the world again and do the best they can? I do not believe this House means to do it, when they fully understand the proposition. We have a plain proposition—one that is fair and right—and I hope the House will agree to it.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. FIELDS. As I understand the gentleman's motion, it includes the conference report as agreed to by the conferees, up to section 5.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes. It agrees to the conference report up to the war-mineral section, and then instructs the conferees to agree to that, to which the House has no objection, and then agrees to this new section on the question of war minerals. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN].

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I think I am somewhat responsible for the row over this bill, and I have no apologies to make for that. The original proposition as brought in by the Senate had no limitations whatever, either as to the amount or number or character or kind of claims that might be presented and considered by the Secretary of the Interior. I thought that was very bad legislation, and neither had the Committee on Mines and Mining of the House or this House considered this proposition one minute, and I thought that was a bad way to legislate. The proposition brought back by the conferees in their last report was some improvement over the original Senate proposition in some respects, but in others not quite so good, and I thought that the whole thing was a bad proposition, and I therefore opposed it. As has been stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], the Committee on Mines and Mining had a meeting this morning and considered the proposition which he has now submitted for consideration to the House. I was present at that meeting and took part in it. I have recognized all the time a fundamental difference between the so-called validating war-contract bill and these claims. In that some gentlemen do not agree with me, but I think I am right. In the first place, no claim can be considered by the Secretary of War under that bill unless it amounted to at least an imperfect contract.

Mr. GORDON. Authorized by law.

Mr. HAMLIN. Authorized by law. I think some gentlemen fail to draw that distinction. Every contract that the Secretary of War can consider is a contract, or would have been a valid contract if committed to writing and properly signed, he having authority to make it. Of course, in these so-called mining claims there is no contract; there could be no contract, because nobody was authorized by law to make a contract. I stated on the first day I attempted to discuss this proposition that I realized that there might be certain cases arising on this mining proposition that would have originated under conditions such as in all good conscience the Government ought to indemnify the parties who sustained the loss.

Mr. GORDON rose.

Mr. HAMLIN. But I was not willing to make the blue sky the limit and throw no safeguards around it and take in every character, kind, and class of claims that might be submitted.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. Just for a question.

Mr. GORDON. Does not the gentleman think that these claims he is speaking about ought to be presented separately to the Congress, and Congress ought to be permitted to act on each one on its merits?

Mr. HAMLIN. There is no argument upon that proposition to my mind at all. If it were possible, feasible, and practicable that is exactly the way I think they ought to be settled, but those of us who have been here quite awhile know that if you compel these people to present their claims to Congress as separate claims against the Government perhaps their great grandchildren might realize upon them and in the meantime the claimants be busted and absolutely ruined financially. Now, the proposition as submitted to-day does not meet my approval altogether, I frankly state, but I do believe that it is such a great improvement over the other proposition presented that we can very well consider it, and consider it fairly and without any prejudice. I think it very largely safeguards the Government in the liquidation and settlement of these claims.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. I will.

Mr. LEVER. What is the basis of the calculation by which you reach the sum of $8,500,000?

Mr. HAMLIN. I attach very little importance to that, I will say to the gentleman. As I stated to the committee this morning, and I state frankly to the House now, that while a limit is attached to the amount that can be paid by the Secretary of the Interior at $8,500,000, I realize that if a lot of just claims be established which exceeds that amount that they will come back to Congress and ask Congress to make appropriations to pay them, and I think the Congress would feel compelled to do it. I do not attach a great deal of importance to this limitation, but there are gentlemen who do not agree with me on that proposition.

Mr. LEVER. I think the gentleman is right about it entirely.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think I am right. I do not attach much importance to the limitation on the amount made available, but here is what I do attach importance to: Notice the provisions of this bill. In the first instance it takes in but four classes of minerals—manganese, chrome, pyrites, and tungsten. Well, I understand perhaps there could not possibly arise many claims in regard to tungsten. Again, the provision that only those who were especially demanded or requested to produce one of these four minerals can be and are included in this proposition.

Mr. FIELDS. The former conference report recommitted provided that.

Mr. HAMLIN. I know that; that is true. Now, one of the provisos is:

Provided further, That said Secretary shall consider, approve, and dispose of only such claims as shall be made hereunder and filed with the Department of the Interior within three months—

And so forth.

Provided further, That no claims shall be allowed or paid by said Secretary unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of the said Secretary that the expenditures so made or obligations so incurred by the claimant were made in good faith for and upon property which contained either manganese chrome, pyrites, or tungsten in sufficient quantities to be of commercial importance—

And so forth.

Now, that is one safeguard or narrowing down that none of these other provisions have had in them. The others provided that the fellow who went out purely for speculative purposes with a pick and shovel on his shoulder to prospect, with the hope he might find something, with visions of great profits in sight in case the war continued for a considerable length of time, would have come in under those provisions. But not so under the provision which we are now considering.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMLIN. In just a moment. I want to call attention to the other provisions. We limit it only to those cases where the minerals were in sight in sufficient quantity to be of service to the Nation in its extremity if the war had continued.

Mr. HOWARD. Bona fide operators?

Mr. HAMLIN. "Bona fide operators" is a good suggestion, and I accept the amendment. Another provision is:

Provided further, That no claim shall be paid unless it appears to the satisfaction of the said Secretary that money so invested and obligations incurred prior to November 12 in a legitimate attempt to produce either manganese, chrome, pyrites, or tungsten for the needs of the Nation for the prosecution of the war.

And that all speculative investments of any kind or purpose whatever are specifically excluded. Then here is another proposition:

That in determining the net losses—

And that is the only kind he is permitted to pay under this provision—

he shall take into consideration, among other things, the then market value of any ores or minerals on hand and belonging to the claimant and the salvage value of any machinery or other appliances which it was claimed was purchased with which to equip such mine in the manner aforesaid.

And so forth. For instance, here is a man who presents a claim, and it develops that he has gotten 10, 15, 20, 30, 40, or 50 tons of ore out on the dump.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAMLIN. I would like five minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. I will give the gentleman two.

Mr. HAMLIN. All right. Thank you.

Then he ought not to be permitted, of course, to keep that ore and be paid his estimated losses in addition. If he keeps that ore he ought then to be charged with the market value of it.

Here is another man who says that he has invested $50,000, $75,000, or $100,000 in machinery. He has not taken out any ore, but had to install the machinery with which to operate his mine. He has bought the machinery and installed it, and, of course, will keep it. Then, in that case, the salvage value of that machinery ought to be charged to him and he ought not to keep the machinery and collect from the Government the first cost of it.

All of these safeguards have been put in there; and if anybody can think of any other provision that will further restrict it I will be glad to support it. I think the House knows that I do not look with great favor on these claims, but we are safeguarding it, and now propose to pay only the men who were induced by the agencies of the Government to invest their money in order to help the Government in this extremity of war and to pay only actual net losses—not speculative but such net losses as he can possibly show that he has sustained. When that is done that is as far as I am willing to go. Believing this is the best proposition presented, and that it is reasonable, I shall vote for it.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman does not claim the Government authorized any of this?

Mr. HAMLIN. Oh, no.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman said "the Government."

Mr. HAMLIN. Not legally. I draw that distinction between these two classes of claims. If the Government agency—I do not say they did, but that is what the claimants will have to prove—if the Government agencies did the things set out in the first part of this amendment, then the actual net loss that man or firm sustained, with all of these deductions, ought to be paid. And for these reasons I am going to vote for this amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, when this conference report came back to the House with the item in it providing for the adjustment of the claims regarding mineral products I was opposed to it because it included many things which ought not to have been included. But there were some minerals which seemed to me to be essential to the successful conduct of the war, and they included pyrites, tungsten, chrome, and manganese.

These four minerals particularly were important and essential, and while no Government officer had legal authority to authorize investments during the war, yet the importance of the situation was such that I believed they were justified in encouraging men to invest their money to develop these minerals in order that the Government of the United States might be in a position to meet the situation which confronted the Nation at at the time.

After this conference report was sent back I suggested its modification to include only these four minerals. I know of cases where men have invested all their fortunes on the faith of the Government in the development of these minerals purely as a war measure, and it would not be fair for us to say to these men now, "Having invested your money on the faith of the Government as citizens of the United States, anxious to promote the country's welfare to win the war, the Government now will lead you into bankruptcy." And it is because of the patriotism of these men who took a chance and were willing to depend upon the honor and the good faith of their Government that I am willing now to provide for the adjustment of the losses which they have made, and made purely because they were anxious to win the war. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, there is no difference in substance between the present status of this motion and what was before the House some days ago. It is merely a question whether the Congress would take the position that we will indemnify every business man who happened to make some investment of some kind in anticipation of profit growing out of the war, with the war coming to a close and those profits not accruing.

If we adopt these instructions of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], it will commit the Government to the payment of hundreds of millions of dollars. The mere fact that it is limited to $8,500,000 does not mean that we are limited to that amount, because the amendment provides that every person within three months may have the privilege of presenting his claim. I know of many manufacturers who went ahead and erected large plants in anticipation of contracts, in anticipation that the war would go on and that they would make great profits. Yet they have lost heavily by reason of the cessation of the war. And yet no one would commit the Government to the payment of such losses. Here, however, you are going to recognize the mine operators who, since April 6, 1917, at the request of these various Government officials, went into the production of these minerals. We know that the price of manganese rose from something like $70 a ton to $600 a ton; but this proposition does not undertake to consider the profits that these various mine operators may have made during the war period out of their mining operations, but it proposes that we compensate them for the losses occasioned by the fall in price and the amount of their investment that was made to develop these mines.

We know that to-day the price of manganese has fallen greatly; and now you are asking Congress to indemnify these various mine operators who went into this development as a business risk, and to have the Government virtually guarantee the price and thereby reimburse them. It is admitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] that they proceeded without any authority of law, merely on the request of some Government activity to go ahead and produce something that they thought they could make profits out of. That is the one proposition before the committee. If we adopt this position here to-day, we will be obligated to pay every one of these claims; and if we are obligated to pay these claims here, we will be obligated to pay similar claims, because it will be a precedent from which we can not escape.

On two prior occasions the House took a positive position on this matter, and it is fundamental in conferences between the two bodies that where one body proposes legislation, if the other House insists on its disagreement, the body proposing the legislation must recede. This is merely putting it up to the House whether we will stand firm in our opposition against this raid on the Treasury that may amount to hundreds of millions of dollars, and put it up to these mining operators, who have the ear of the other end of the Capitol, that we will not recede from our disagreement. The question is whether we will do that, or whether we will surrender our position in these closing days of this Congress. There is no doubt in my mind that if we remain firm that these other propositions validating war contracts will be agreed to before the close of the Congress.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin if the adoption of this proposition would not be the establishment of a precedent in legislation in this country heretofore unknown?

Mr. STAFFORD. Never before in the history of the Congress have we attempted anything like this. If we do it here we must recognize it in all cases. And why not? Every person who made an investment at the request of Government officials would be entitled to compensation for the loss which he had sustained by reason of those investments not being utilizable to-day.

Mr. DEWALT. Did the gentleman in his experience ever know of a Cabinet officer or any other officer of the Government being constituted judge, jury, and payer of the amounts claimed against the Government by the provisions of any legislation?

Mr. STAFFORD. That confirms the viciousness of this proposal. And more than that; when we passed this original mining bill, in April, 1918, it provided for the price guaranty of these minerals. It was so radical that even the Senate refused to agree to that, and that is what we are agreeing to here. It was lodged over in the Senate for five months. At last, in September, it was agreed to in the contract form, authorizing the Government to contract for these supplies that were necessary for carrying on the war. The President, after the act was passed, on October 5, 1918, never exercised the authority. They have to admit that they have no ground whatsoever to proceed on; and now, in the closing days of the Congress, it is proposed that these claimants, who have made immense profits perhaps, shall be guaranteed the difference in the price of these minerals since they have fallen or be paid the amount of their investment. That is what they are asking.

Mr. DEWALT. I want to ask the gentleman another question on the same line. In his legislative experience did he ever find any conference report or any bill which attempted to limit the jurisdiction of a court as to its judicial functions in the way of determining damages? I call attention to this provision in the motion of the gentleman from Illinois:

> Provided, That in no case shall any award either by the Secretary of War or the Court of Claims include prospective or possible profits on any part of the contract beyond the goods and supplies delivered to and accepted by the United States and a reasonable remuneration for expenditures and obligations or liabilities necessarily incurred in performing or preparing to perform said contract or order.

That is clearly a judicial function. You can not limit the amount of damages which are awarded by a court by any legislative action.

Mr. STAFFORD. That relates to irregular contracts for war supplies which failed to be negotiated in our favor because of the signing of the armistice. Now, there is no relation whatsoever between these mining claims—which are not even equitable claims, from my viewpoint—and the cases where the Secretary of War or the War Department actually called upon an individual to enter into contracts for the production of articles which were really necessary for carrying on the war. In these latter cases the officials had authority to enter into contracts. But here these mining operators took a business risk upon a mere verbal request of some Government official to produce who had no authority to bind the Government with any such contract. They went and made their investment, bottomed on the idea that high prices would be maintained and that they would receive the benefit of those high prices. There was no guaranty of any kind or sort. No Government official had any authority to make any. There was no action by any Government official to warrant their going ahead, except that which would induce any business man to go ahead and invest his money on the chance of making a profit.

As I said in my remarks before, I know of men in the foundry business who have invested hundreds of thousands of dollars on plants just nearing completion or completed at the close of the war who are out their entire investment and who went ahead in expectation of Government orders and whose plants are virtually a complete loss. If you grant this request of these mine operators, these foundry men are more entitled to recompense, because they did not get any profit at all. Some of these mining operators got enormous profits, and yet you propose to recompense them when they have no right whatsoever to be recompensed, and this is being done under the threat that this bill will be held up, when we all know that it will not be held up; but that if we stand firm in these closing hours of the session and not allow any interest to raid the Treasury to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars that the Senate will have to recede.

Mr. HOWARD. The gentleman says these men made enormous profits. Does the bill provide for anything except the net losses of these men? It is the net loss, not a profit. The gentleman knows that.

Mr. STAFFORD. It provides for compensating them for their investment—their machinery and the amount of money invested.

Mr. HOWARD. It says their net losses. The gentleman knows it says so.

Mr. STAFFORD. They are going to be paid for the amount of their investment, regardless of the profits they may have made by sale of minerals. It is not like these other war contracts at all.

Mr. DENISON. I want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. STAFFORD. I intend to offer the following amendment, which is identical with the amendment offered when this matter was last before the House, that the managers on the part of the House be instructed not to agree to section 7 of the Senate amendment in any form. That was our position on two prior occasions, and I think it should be our position now more firmly than ever.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. On what authority does the gentleman make the statement that these men who are asking for an adjustment have made enormous profits?

Mr. STAFFORD. Everybody knows that if they developed manganese it was at a big profit when it was selling at 600. If it was selling at 60 they would not. These four minerals mentioned are those most generally used. It proposes to pay them the amount of their investment, which happens no longer to be profitable at present low prices.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND].

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Speaker, when this proposition was before the House I opposed it, but it was not then the same proposition that is pending now. I now think that this amendment should pass. I think in fairness to the men who put their money into these investments, at the invitation of some Government official, who told them that they would receive remuneration therefor, should now have their remuneration. It is said that no contract was signed. That is true, but men connected with the Interior Department, under the Secretary of the Interior, did go to men who had prospects for this material and asked them to develop it, and told them further that there was a bill to be brought into Congress with the intention of stabilizing the price and that they might realize or at least get out of their investment whole. That was plainly stated. It was after the war began; it was a time when they were calling upon people to do something to help in the way of patriotism, and these men had the prospects, and they were calling upon them, and at the cost of their own pockets, in order to develop and help in the work, they went forward. Whether they succeeded or not, they were induced to go in by statements made to them.

I will say that this question would not have come up at all at this time had it not been that the gentlemen on the other side of the House have always refused to protect these industries. If we had protected them in the past, as we expect to in the future by a protective tariff, these industries would have been developed, and when the war came on we would not have been in the position that we were in.

Mr. STERLING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARLAND. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. Is the gentleman's mind as open and clear on the fact that every producer of minerals who was asked by a Government official to produce ought to be indemnified?

Mr. GARLAND. Only those who suffered loss.

Mr. STERLING. May I state this case to the gentleman: What does he think of the coal producer in Pennsylvania who sustained losses?

Mr. GARLAND. I believe that the Fuel Board or the President fixed the price of coal.

Mr. STERLING. I understand when some Government official took up the question and asked the coal men to take dumpings from the coke plants, buy a particular kind of machinery and produce that stuff for war purposes, that within 20 days after that the machinery was condemned.

Mr. GARLAND. That is irrelevant to this proposition. These four different minerals named in this amendment were minerals that had not heretofore been developed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. OLNEY].

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Speaker, I believe it is only the part of good sense and sound wisdom for the House to reverse its position of a week ago and agree to the Foster amendment. The four minerals enumerated in this law come from certain sections—the South, the Middle West, and the far West—and they are just as much moral obligations to these mining men as the 6,600 in the war-contract bill. I sincerely hope that the House will reverse its position, because we have but six legislative days remaining, and the bill is in great danger of not being passed at this session if the House does not reverse itself.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLNEY. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. You do not claim that there was any contract for this development?

Mr. OLNEY. No; but there was a moral obligation.

Mr. GORDON. Oh, yes; you want to give it to them. That is all. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, there have been so many erroneous and misleading statements about the proposition that it would be impossible to answer all of them in the limit of 10 minutes. The proposition before the House is a simple one. The House first passed what was known as the validating-contract bill for the War Department. In other words, to validate what they called informal contracts, but which were not legal contracts, because in some instances the clerk who had ordered the goods had no authority, and the Secretary of War did not know that he had any such clerk.

Now, when that went to the Senate, the Senate attached what was known as the Henderson amendment, which authorized the Secretary of the Interior to pay certain claims, based upon the operations of certain people under the war-minerals act which passed in October. When it came back to the House, the House refused to agree to the Henderson amendment. The House adopted a motion by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] to instruct the conferees not to agree to that amendment in any form.

The conferees of the House followed the instructions and reported a disagreement. It now starts over again, and what is the proposition? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has offered here a proposal that you instruct the conferees to agree to everything they formally agreed to with reference to the war contracts, and in addition to that agree to the Senate amendment on this war minerals proposition with an amendment, which is nothing more than the proposition that the Committee on Mines and Mining of the House has agreed to this morning by an overwhelming vote, only two votes being recorded against it. What is that proposition? It is that the Secretary of the Interior in considering and settling these claims shall have certain limitations placed upon him. They are the same limitations that the gentlemen who now complain about the limitations insisted when we had up the conference report before should be placed upon him. Gentlemen before said that $50,000,000 was the limit, as they have said to-day, and that the sky is the limit; and now when the Committee on Mines and Mining comes in and puts on a limitation of eight and a half millions they still say that the sky is the limit. Mr. Speaker, that is nothing but camouflage. What other limitation is there that you shall not consider any speculative profits? Gentlemen who have read this amendment have said that any man who had a little hole in the ground and went in with the hope of a speculative profit could have his claim considered on this bill.

I say to you as one who thinks he knows something about the legal effect of language that that kind of a claim can not be considered at all by the Secretary of the Interior. It specifically limits him to claims that are different from that. No man who relied upon the advertisements, no man who relied upon the general cry that each man do his patriotic duty, no man who relied on hope that he would come in and reap a speculative profit, shall be considered under the terms of this proposal. What kind of claim can be considered? You say that there is no contract. Neither had these other war-contract people. They have not any legal contracts. If they had, you would not be sitting here with this bill, and gentlemen know it.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. No; I do not yield to my kind, yet vociferous and volcanic, friend from Ohio.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman does not know about this.

Mr. WINGO. I do know about this. I am somewhat different from the gentleman. I am not one of those who is willing to pay the moral obligations of the United States to Spanish contractors, to Italian contractors, to English contractors, and then decline to meet the moral obligations that the Government owes to little contractors throughout the United States who furnished war materials that were necessary in the manufacture of war materials. [Applause.] When this bill was under consideration before our committee the War Trade Board and the Shipping Board and the administration forces—the President was back of it, for you remember that he phoned here when the bill was hanging in the balance—came to us and what did they say? They said, "We have got to stop this shipping from Brazil, New South Wales and China and Spain that is carrying this manganese ore and the pyrites and chrome, etc.," and the munition manufactures, who were manufacturing our munitions, came down to Washington and said to us, "If you shut off our supplies of these minerals from Spain and from Brazil and from Japan and the East Indies we can not turn out these munitions."

So the War Trade Board came down here and asked us to pass that bill. They took that bill and went out to these men and appealed to them—for profit? No. One man I know they brought here. He does not live in my district. They brought him to Washington and took him down before the War Trade Board and said, "You have got a great deposit of certain ore down there and we need it, and we want you to go to work and get it out," and he said, "Oh, no; there is no money in that; I went broke in it once. I will not do that. Take my property free if the Government needs it, but I can not afford to work it." But they found out that he had two sons in the trenches and three more going, and they said, "It is true that there is no profit in it, and we can not give you a contract now, but the President is back of this bill that has passed the House. It is going to the Senate, and when it does become a law we will make you a contract that will prevent you from suffering any loss." He said, "All right; I do not want any profit; I will go back home and discharge my patriotic duty." He said to this War Trade Board that any man who has common sense knows that he can not make any profit; that they would go broke on it; that he had gone broke on it once, but had accumulated a competency in another business. He said that he did not want to risk that, but when they appealed to his patriotism he went back, and he went to other men who had sons in the trenches, and he worked every day and he mortgaged his farm to get money to buy machinery and to pay a pay roll and he hired men and put them to work. One man told me who heard him make a speech on the dump to the men and he said, "You have boys in the trenches the same as I, and every time you get out a ton it saves a ton of shipping from Brazil and sends a ton of food and supplies to our boys." Oh, you ask me by what authority he was told to do these things. Point me to a higher authority than that patriotic impulse to respond to the needs of his country. [Applause.] Some say that we will set a precedent if we pass this. Your war-contracts bill is a precedent. Has not the Congress of the United States courage enough to say that where the Government, under the driving force of patriotism, made men go and put all they had into producing something for the Government at a loss, when they are facing bankruptcy and their homes are about to be sold over their heads, has not the Congress of the United States courage enough to stand up and say, "Precedent or no precedent, we will discharge that moral obligation"?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I am sorry, but I have not the time. I have seen men who wished to squirm out of their moral obligations, and I have never had very much respect for them. I do not mean any reflection upon you gentlemen. I can very well understand the attitude of the man who says that inasmuch as there is no legal authority we will not have anything to do with it. I can not understand a man who had that view and yet who will vote for the war-contracts bill because there is no legal contract there. As I said once before on this floor, the trouble in these days now throughout all of the nations of the earth is that people have lost faith in the justice of their governments; and God pity this country whenever the time comes when an old man like the one I have told you about, who gave five sons to this country's cause, is compelled to go back to his wife and say, "Yes; we will have to sell the home over our heads, because the Congress of the United States, made up of a bunch of technical lawyers, said it would not discharge its moral obligations to me." The government that will not discharge its moral obligations loses the confidence, and deservedly so, of its citizens. I am more scrupulous about my moral obligations by which I am not bound by law than I am about my legal obligations. I respect my legal obligations, but I may resist them and tell my creditor to go into court and compel me to live up to my contract; but God pity the man who refuses to do justice when his claimant comes up and says, "I have no claims of law against you, but I gave you something of value when you came to me in the hour of your need and asked me for it; I gave you my substance, relying upon your honor and your sense of fairness and justice to fulfill that obligation. Now I appeal to your honor as a man; I can not compel you to do it in the court."

What a contempt you have for the man who turns upon people like that and says, "Oh, well, I am not legally bound." You have the utmost contempt for him. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] be allowed to offer a substitute without my losing the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin be permitted to offer a substitute without the gentleman from Illinois losing the floor. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following substitute for the motion to instruct the conferees offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STAFFORD moves to instruct the managers on the part of the House to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment as follows: That the managers on the part of the House be instructed not to agree to section 7 of the Senate amendment in any form.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the substitute.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has seven minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] offers an amendment which, of course, is not strictly in order, and yet I desire, as far as I am concerned, to be perfectly fair with the House, and I could not do otherwise if I should try. I have no desire to do otherwise. In my judgment this amendment which has been offered to instruct the conferees to agree to the amendment which has been reported at the Clerk's desk some time ago provides the language exactly, as I said before, which the conferees agreed to in reference to the war contracts. Now, I want to say in all fairness that the Committee on Mines and Mining, composed of at least a fair representation of the House—and I think the Members, outside of myself, are as good as any of them——

Mr. DYER. Why so modest?

Mr. FOSTER. They have gone over this carefully. They went over this amendment section by section, paragraph by paragraph, and they came to the conclusion that this amendment was fair and right and threw around all the restrictions which were necessary to protect the Government.

Mr. GORDON. Not all of them.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, yes.

Mr. GORDON. Two of them did not.

Mr. FOSTER. I said the committee did agree to it.

Mr. GORDON. The majority.

Mr. FOSTER. All except two, if the gentleman wants to put it that way. The chairman of that committee does not desire to deceive the House on that. Now, I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin will be voted down, and then, with the amendment offered, it will give the relief that these men ought to have. These are not contracts; of course they are not contracts, and nobody is claiming they are such. If they had been contracts legally it would not have been necessary to have this bill at all, but this is in order to correct an illegality, that these men may get their money. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the substitute to the amendment and the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves the previous question on his own motion and on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin demands a division.

The House proceeded to divide.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on the substitute.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that there is no quorum present, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and seven gentlemen are present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 118, nays 215, answered "present" 3, not voting 92, as follows:

YEAS—118.

Alexander	Frear	London	Sisson
Ashbrook	Gard	Lundeen	Snell
Beshlin	Garner	McCormick	Snook
Bland, Ind.	Garrett, Tenn.	McKenzie	Stafford
Blanton	Garrett, Tex.	McKinley	Steagall
Browne	Good	McLaughlin, Mich.	Stedman
Buchanan	Gordon	Mann	Steenerson
Burroughs	Green, Iowa	Mansfield	Stephens, Miss.
Byrnes, S. C.	Greene, Vt.	Mason	Sterling
Byrns, Tenn.	Griest	Miller, Minn.	Sumners
Campbell, Kans.	Hamilton, Mich.	Montague	Temple
Candler, Miss.	Harrison, Miss.	Moon	Thomas
Cannon	Hastings	Moore, Pa.	Venable
Carter, Okla.	Haugen	Nelson, A. P.	Vestal
Connally, Tex.	Hollingsworth	Nelson, J. M.	Vinson
Cramton	Houston	Norton	Voigt
Crisp	Huddleston	Oliver, Ala.	Volstead
Crosser	Hull, Iowa	Parker, N. J.	Walsh
Davis	Hull, Tenn.	Quin	Wason
Dent	Ireland	Ragsdale	Webb
Dewalt	James	Ramseyer	Whaley
Dies	Johnson, S. Dak.	Rayburn	Wheeler
Dillon	Juul	Rose	Wilson, Tex.
Dixon	Keating	Saunders, Va.	Wise
Dominick	Kelly, Pa.	Schall	Wood, Ind.
Doughton	Kincheloe	Scott, Iowa	Young, N. Dak.
Dowell	Kraus	Scott, Mich.	Young, Tex.
Eagan	Larsen	Shallenberger	Zihlman
Eagle	Lesher	Sherley
Fairfield	Lever	Sherwood

NAYS—215.

Almon	Fess	Lampert	Reed
Anderson	Fields	Langley	Riordan
Anthony	Fisher	Lazaro	Robinson
Aswell	Focht	Lea, Cal.	Rogers
Austin	Fordney	Lehlbach	Romjue
Ayres	Foster	Linthicum	Rouse
Bacharach	Freeman	Littlepage	Rowe
Bankhead	French	Lobeck	Rowland
Barnhart	Fuller, Ill.	Lonergan	Rubey
Beakes	Fuller, Mass.	Longworth	Sanders, Ind.
Bell	Gallivan	Lufkin	Sanders, N. Y.
Benson	Garland	McArthur	Sanford
Black	Gillett	McClintic	Shouse
Bland, Va.	Glynn	McCulloch	Siegel
Bowers	Goodall	McFadden	Sinnott
Burnett	Gould	McKeown	Slayden
Caldwell	Graham, Ill.	McLaughlin, Pa.	Slemp
Campbell, Pa.	Gray, Ala.	McLemore	Sloan
Caraway	Greene, Mass.	Madden	Smith, Idaho
Carew	Griffin	Magee	Smith, Mich.
Carter, Mass.	Hadley	Maher	Smith, T. F.
Cary	Hamlin	Mapes	Snyder
Chandler, N. Y.	Hardy	Martin	Stiness
Chandler, Okla.	Harrison, Va.	Mays	Strong
Church	Haskell	Merritt	Sweet
Clark, Pa.	Hawley	Miller, Wash.	Switzer
Classon	Hayden	Mondell	Taylor, Colo.
Connelly, Kans.	Hayes	Moores, Ind.	Thompson
Cooper, W. Va	Heaton	Morgan	Tillman
Cooper, Wis.	Heflin	Morin	Tilson
Currie, Mich.	Helvering	Mott	Timberlake
Curry, Cal.	Hersey	Nichols, Mich.	Tinkham
Dale	Hicks	Oldfield	Towner
Dallinger	Holland	Oliver, N. Y.	Treadway
Darrow	Hood	Olney	Van Dyke
Davey	Howard	Osborne	Vare
Decker	Humphreys	O'Shaunessy	Waldow
Dempsey	Husted	Overstreet	Walker
Denison	Hutchinson	Padgett	Walton
Denton	Igoe	Paige	Ward
Dickinson	Jacoway	Parker, N. Y.	Watkins
Dill	Johnson, Ky.	Peters	Watson, Pa.
Donovan	Johnson, Wash.	Phelan	Watson, Va.
Doolittle	Jones	Platt	Weaver
Doremus	Kahn	Polk	Welling
Drane	Kearns	Porter	Welty
Dyer	Kehoe	Pou	White, Me.
Elliott	Kelley, Mich.	Pratt	Williams
Elston	Kennedy, R. I.	Purnell	Wilson, La.
Esch	Kettner	Rainey, H. T.	Wingo
Evans	Kiess, Pa.	Raker	Winslow
Fairchild, B. L.	King	Ramsey	Woodyard
Farr	Kinkaid	Randall	Wright
Ferris	La Follette	Reavis

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—3.

Butler	Edmonds	Knutson

NOT VOTING—92.

Baer	Collier	Flood	Hilliard
Barkley	Cooper, Ohio	Flynn	Kennedy, Iowa
Birch	Copley	Foss	Key, Ohio
Blackmon	Costello	Francis	Kitchin
Booher	Cox	Gallagher	Kreider
Brand	Crago	Gandy	LaGuardia
Britten	Delaney	Godwin, N. C	Lee, Ga.
Brodbeck	Dooling	Goodwin, Ark.	Little
Browning	Drukker	Graham, Pa.	Lunn
Brumbaugh	Dunn	Gray, N. J.	McAndrews
Cantrill	Dupré	Gregg	Mudd
Carlin	Ellsworth	Hamill	Neely
Clark, Fla.	Emerson	Hamilton, N. Y.	Nicholls, S. C.
Claypool	Essen	Heintz	Nolan
Cleary	Estopinal	Helm	Overmyer
Coady	Fairchild, G. W.	Hensley	Park

Powers	Russell	Sims	Swift
Price	Sabath	Small	Tague
Rainey, J. W.	Sanders, La.	Smith, C. B.	Taylor, Ark.
Rankin	Scully	Steele	Templeton
Roberts	Sears	Stephens, Nebr.	White, Ohio
Rodenberg	Sells	Stevenson	Wilson, Ill.
Rucker	Shackleford	Sullivan	Woods, Iowa

So the substitute was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. WHITE of Ohio with Mr. BAER.

Mr. ESTOPINAL with Mr. EMERSON.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH with Mr. COSTELLO.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas with Mr. WILSON of Illinois.

Mr. HAMILL with Mr. LAGUARDIA.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina with Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania.

Mr. SULLIVAN with Mr. BIRCH.

Mr. DOOLING with Mr. BRITTEN.

Mr. GALLAGHER with Mr. BROWNING.

Mr. SCULLY with Mr. COOPER of Ohio.

Mr. BARKLEY with Mr. CRAGO.

Mr. BLACKMON with Mr. DRUKKER.

Mr. BOOHER with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. BRAND with Mr. ELLSWORTH.

Mr. STEELE with Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. CANTRILL with Mr. ESSEN.

Mr. CARLIN with Mr. GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD.

Mr. CLARK of Florida with Mr. FLOOD.

Mr. CLEARY with Mr. FLYNN.

Mr. COADY with Mr. FOSS.

Mr. COLLIER with Mr. HAMILTON of New York.

Mr. GANDY with Mr. HEINTZ.

Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina with Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas with Mr. KREIDER.

Mr. HELM with Mr. LITTLE.

Mr. HENSLEY with Mr. MUDD.

Mr. LEE of Georgia with Mr. NOLAN.

Mr. LUNN with Mr. POWERS.

Mr. MCANDREWS with Mr. RODENBERG.

Mr. NEELY with Mr. SELLS.

Mr. PARK with Mr. SWIFT.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY with Mr. COPLEY.

Mr. SABATH with Mr. FRANCIS.

Mr. SANDERS of Louisiana with Mr. GRAY of New Jersey.

Mr. SIMS with Mr. WOODS of Iowa.

Mr. SMALL with Miss RANKIN.

Mr. TAGUE with Mr. ROBERTS.

Mr. SEARS with Mr. TEMPLETON.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, the Doorkeeper will open the doors. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were—ayes 176, noes 48.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the following conferees: Mr. DENT, Mr. FIELDS, and Mr. KAHN.

MINING ON PUBLIC DOMAIN.

Mr. FERRIS, by the direction of the Committee on Public Lands, submitted a conference report on the bill S. 2812, an act to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain, for printing under the rules.

APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints Mr. LINTHICUM as chairman of the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

VICTORY LOAN.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 16136, known as the victory liberty loan bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 16136, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16136) to amend the liberty bond acts and the war finance corporation act, and for other purposes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman any objection to the bill being read?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; except that I would like to save the time. I am going to take up the bill section by section.

Mr. WALSH. All right; I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with?

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman if he will not agree upon some length of time for general debate? There will be about two hours on this side.

Mr. KITCHIN. We will not limit it. Anyway, we will divide the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman begins will he yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. RUBEY. Is it the intention of the gentleman to finish this bill to-night?

Mr. KITCHIN. It is the intention to finish the bill to-night.

Mr. RUBEY. I thought the House ought to be advised of it.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the Ways and Means Committee presents for the consideration of the House a bill to be known as the "victory liberty loan act." It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to issue $7,000,000,000 of short-time notes, maturing in from one to five years. I shall ask the Members to indulge me for about 30 minutes, and I will take up the bill section by section and explain it in detail.

The necessity for further issue of Government obligations is apparent. The estimates of the Treasury Department of the expenditures for this fiscal year is $19,000,000,000, and, as I stated the other day when I presented the conference report on the revenue bill, in my judgment it will reach $20,000,000,000; but we will call it $19,000,000,000. We have already in receipts, and will have after the collection of the taxes, $14,000,000,000, which consist of $7,000,000,000 of the fourth liberty loan proceeds, $1,000,000,000 of war-savings certificates, $6,000,000,000 that we expect to get from the last revenue bill, which total $14,000,000,000, leaving $5,000,000,000 to get from some other source to make out the $19,000,000,000 necessary. It is true that under the present second liberty loan act as amended the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue $5,000,000,000 more of bonds at an interest rate of 4¼ per cent.

The Treasury Department and your committee are in accord in the view that it would be unwise to offer at this time an issue of long-time bonds at 4¼ per cent, as provided in the present bond act. In fact, they could not be sold upon such terms at this time, and it was the thought of the committee and of the Treasury Department, after conferring together, that it would be wiser and better to authorize the issue of short-time notes, as we do in this bill.

We authorize $7,000,000,000 instead of $5,000,000,000 that is needed for this fiscal year, for the reason that it is apparent that the taxes for 1920 will fall far short of meeting the expenditures of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and so out of abundance of caution we authorize $7,000,000,000 instead of $5,000,000,000. The $2,000,000,000 in excess will be taken up, in my judgment, for 1920 before the 1920 taxes are collected. We leave in this case the interest rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

In the original draft of the bill submitted to us by the department and the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury we were asked to permit the Secretary to issue long-time bonds—$10,000,000,000 of bonds and $10,000,000,000 of Treasury notes—at a rate of interest to be fixed by him and with exemptions from taxation to be fixed by him. The committee was unwilling to permit the Secretary of the Treasury to do this. The committee and the Secretary of the Treasury finally agreed that we would have in this bill no long-time bond authorization, but only these short-time notes. The committee thought it was not unwise or unsafe to permit the Secretary of the Treasury to fix the interest rate on these short-time notes, especially in view of the fact that we have a redemption clause in the bill giving the Government the option to redeem within not less than four months' or one year's notice these short-time notes, so that if the Secretary of the Treasury—and we do not believe that he will—sells these notes at an excessive rate of interest, then the Government could not be out that excess interest more than one year, because it could give the proper notice and redeem these notes by selling bonds at a lower rate.

While this bill gives large discretion to the Secretary of the Treasury, yet, in view of the circumstances, it was deemed not unwise. It seems that the Treasury Department and all the liberty bond sale organizations believed that if we fixed the maximum interest rate, which would almost necessarily be the minimum rate, so far in advance of the victory liberty loan drive, which the Secretary says will begin on April 21, investment bankers and other investors and the press of the country, which voices their sentiments, will discount or discredit the value of the notes at that rate of interest, discredit it in the public mind, claiming that the rate is not high enough, that the notes could not be sold at such a rate. They would have from now until April 21 to scatter broadcast throughout the country the idea that these notes would not be sufficiently good investments. Under such circumstances it would be most difficult to dispose of them.

That argument possesses merit. And so we decided that since these were short-time notes, and since we had the redemption option in the bill, it was neither dangerous nor unwise to give the Secretary of the Treasury the discretion to fix the rate.

However, we fixed the exemption. Whatever exemption there will be in these notes we—the committee, the House, and the Congress—will fix, and not the Secretary of the Treasury. We permit the Secretary of the Treasury to issue four classes of notes. He can issue all four or he can issue just one of the classes, or two, or three, whichever the market conditions would better justify.

Of course, they will issue more than one. He will issue, I think, at least two of these series in any event, because it will take two to catch both kinds of market—one the market of the real investor, the investment bankers, and, I may say, the larger and the wealthier investors; and we should also have a bond to catch the market of the poorer class of people with moderate means. The first of these series we exempt from all taxes except estate and inheritance taxes—that is, this series will be exempt from all taxes except estate and inheritance taxes, just like the 3½ per cent bonds that we first issued, known as the tax-free bonds.

The next class will be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation, State or Federal, except (a) estate or inheritance tax and (b) surtaxes and excess-profits taxes and war-profits taxes now or hereafter imposed by the United States.

Now, that will be a note that will be subject to an estate and inheritance tax, the income surtaxes, and the excess profits and war taxes, without any specific amount of exemption. That note will be subject to the same taxes that our 4¼ per cent bonds are now subject to, except that there will be no specific amount of notes that will be exempted.

The next class of notes will be issued exempt from all taxes, State or Federal, except (a) estate or inheritance taxes, and (b) surtaxes, war-profits taxes and excess-profits taxes, now or hereafter imposed by the United States, but with an additional exemption from surtaxes and excess-profits and war-profits taxes of the interest on an amount of such notes owned by any taxpayer the principal of which does not exceed $30,000. In fact, this series of bonds will be subject to the identical taxes that our present 4¼ per cent bonds are, but will have a $30,000 exemption. That is, if a person buys such notes the interest from them will be absolutely exempt up to $30,000 from the surtax and the excess-profits and war-profits tax. Our last bonds that were sold, the fourth liberty bonds, had an exemption of $30,000 but only for two years after the expiration of the war.

Then we permit the Secretary to issue a note that is subject to all Federal taxes, estate taxes, income taxes (both normal taxes and surtaxes), and excess-profits and war-profits taxes. Personally I see no necessity for that class of notes. I do not see how notes of that class will sell; but the Treasury Department thinks it will have some market for them.

These notes have the conversion privilege. That is, if two classes of notes are issued in the same drive or the same period, or if three or four classes are issued, a holder of one class of notes can convert them into either one of the others of the same series at any time during the life of the note.

Section 2 gives the bonds already issued, the 4 per cent and the 4¼ per cent bonds, a specific exemption, in addition to all exemptions under existing law, of $30,000. That is, if a person now owns any of these 4 or 4¼ per cent bonds he can have an exemption until five years after the termination of the present war, in addition to the present exemptions of $30,000, whether he buys any of these notes or not. The committee thought, and the Treasury Department seems to agree with us, and especially the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury who has charge of these bond matters in the Treasury Department, that this exemption given to the present bonds now in the hands of millions of holders would appreciate the value of those bonds, or certainly would tend to stabilize their value. I can not see how it would fail to appreciate the value of the bonds in the hands of the holders to have this exemption, or would certainly tend to stabilize them. Section 7 of the second liberty bond act provided that each holder of liberty bonds could hold $5,000 of bonds, the interest upon which would be tax free from all income taxes and excess-profits and war-profits taxes. This is known as the Cannon exemption.

Section 1 of the supplement to second liberty bond act gave an additional exemption (expiring two years after the end of the war) from surtaxes and excess-profits taxes of the interest on $30,000 of bonds of the fourth liberty loan owned by any person, partnership, corporation, or association.

The section also provided that the interest from the converted first liberty bonds, the second liberty bonds, converted and unconverted, and the third liberty bonds should be exempt (until two years after the end of the war) from surtaxes and excess-profits or war-profits taxes to the extent of one one-half times the amount of fourth liberty loan bonds subscribed and held, upon the date of the tax return, by any taxpayer, but it provided that such exemption should not exceed $45,000 of such bonds.

Section 2 of this bill grants a tax exemption (expiring five years after the end of the war) from surtaxes and excess-profits and war-profits taxes in addition to the aforementioned tax exemptions, of the first liberty bonds, converted, the second liberty bonds, converted or unconverted, the third liberty bonds, and the fourth liberty bonds, held by any taxpayer, the principal of which does not exceed $30,000 in the aggregate. This exemption, as I said, is for the purpose of appreciating or stabilizing the value of those bonds in the hands of millions of our people.

Paragraph (b) of section 2 of this bill provides that in addition to all the aforementioned tax exemptions the interest from the first liberty bonds, converted, the second liberty bonds, converted and unconverted, the third liberty bonds, and the fourth liberty bonds shall be exempt from surtaxes and excess-profits and war-profits taxes to the extent of three times the amount of notes of the victory liberty loan originally subscribed for and held, upon the date of the tax return, by any taxpayer, but it is provided that this exemption shall not exceed $20,000 of such bonds and that it shall expire five years after the end of the war. It is believed that this provision will help to make the notes authorized more attractive and also that it will help to appreciate the market value of the outstanding bonds and thereby tend to make the market more stable. In other words, if a person buys $6,666 of these new notes he will have an additional exemption on the old bonds of $20,000. If he buys $10,000 of these notes he will still have an exemption of only $20,000, and if he buys $5,000 of the notes he will have an exemption of $15,000 on the old bonds, in addition to all other exemptions.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a question about the notes?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Are these notes taxable?

Mr. KITCHIN. The principal of the notes is not taxable at all.

Mr. CANNON. Either State or Federal?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; not the principal, either State or Federal.

Mr. CANNON. But the interest is subject to the surtaxes?

Mr. KITCHIN. The interest on these notes is subject to surtaxes; that is, the interest on the notes of the class subject to surtaxes. I do not believe the gentleman was in the Hall when I first described the four classes of notes.

Mr. CANNON. One additional question about the notes. The $20,000 is not taxable for any purpose?

Mr. KITCHIN. The interest on the liberty bonds that we have sold is exempted by this bill to a principal amount of $30,000 for five years after the termination of the war, in addition to all other exemptions, and the purchaser of the notes to be sold under the provisions of this bill will have a still further exemption of $20,000 with respect to such bonds for five years after termination of the war.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, we are going to permit the Secretary of the Treasury to issue classes of notes subject to the same taxes as the present 4 and 4¼ per cent bonds, and, as I said before the gentleman came in, we have a class of tax-free notes which are exempt just as the 3½ per cent bonds now outstanding are exempt. One class that is tax exempt will catch the market of the large investors. It will bear, of course, a lower rate of interest. The notes subject to the $30,000 exemption, but subject to surtaxes and excess and war profit taxes will, of course, bear a higher rate of interest. That will be for the small investors and the people generally, especially of that class of people whose incomes are not large enough to get into the surtax class. As gentlemen recall, we do not pay surtaxes until our incomes exceed $5,000. So that will be the note that the people will buy whose incomes do not exceed $5,000, because that will bear a higher rate of interest.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Is not that the place for your other class of notes, which are exempt from no taxes whatsoever? The people who would not come into the income tax at all might buy those if they were issued in small denominations.

Mr. KITCHIN. Perhaps the gentleman is correct about that. It will be that class of people, if single, whose incomes do not exceed $1,000, or who, if married, have incomes not exceeding $2,000. I can see how that person might buy such notes, subject to all taxes, since they will bear a higher rate of interest.

Mr. TILSON. Or the married man with a large family, like the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; a gentleman with a family of nine children, like myself, would have a pretty good-sized exemption in addition to his $2,000. If I were out of Congress I might be in that class and might be able to buy some of those notes. But one reason why I am not specially enamored with that class of notes is I fear that a small class of people who receive big incomes would buy that class of notes, since they would bear the highest rate of interest, with the idea of evading the tax altogether by not returning the income from them.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. What will be the limit of exemption under this act?

Mr. KITCHIN. Under the bond acts and this bill, by complying with the provisions of the same, a taxpayer could hold the following amounts of Government obligations exempt from all income taxes and excess-profits and war-profits taxes:

Bonds absolutely tax free, in addition to the 3½ per cent first liberty bonds	$5,000
Fourth liberty bonds, tax free until two years after the termination of the present war	30,000
First liberty bonds, converted; second liberty bonds, converted or unconverted; and third liberty bonds, until two years after the termination of the present war	45,000
First liberty bonds, converted; second liberty bonds, converted or unconverted; third liberty bonds; and fourth liberty bonds, until five years after the termination of the present war	30,000
First liberty bonds, converted; second liberty bonds, converted or unconverted; third liberty bonds; and fourth liberty bonds, so long as the owner holds $6,667 of notes originally subscribed for by him	20,000

That makes a total of $130,000. So it is possible for one person owning these notes and the series I have mentioned to have an exemption of $130,000 of such obligations. Seventy-five thousand dollars of it for only two years from the termination of the war, and the exemption on $30,000 obligations I have mentioned lasts until five years after the war.

Mr. HAUGEN. I understood the gentleman to say that the purchaser of $20,000 was entitled to an extension or exemption beyond.

Mr. KITCHIN. We give to the purchaser of the notes an exemption on the liberty bonds he owns an additional exemption for five years of three times the amount of notes he buys, such exemption not to exceed $20,000. If you purchase $6,667 of these notes you can have in addition an exemption of $20,000 of bonds so long as the owner holds the notes originally subscribed for by him.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. The first series of notes are exempt from all taxes; in what volume will they be issued?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. If a man buys $6,666 of any one series of notes, he would be entitled to an exemption of $20,000 of bonds.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Suppose he buys $6,666 of two series.

Mr. KITCHIN. He would only have the exemption of $20,000. But if he was the owner of other bonds he could have an additional $30,000, whether he buys notes or not.

Mr. SNYDER. My query was if he purchased $6,666 of No. 1 notes he would be entitled to $20,000, and if he bought $6,666 of the third issue——

Mr. KITCHIN. He could not have but one exemption of $20,000.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Why do you call these issues "notes" and use the term "bonds" for the other issue? What is the differentiation between the note issue and the bond issue?

Mr. KITCHIN. In fact, there is no actual difference, except that the commercial world, in making a loan on short time, calls it a note; on a long time, they call it a bond. A short-time bond is generally called a note. That is the difference; the same obligation is there. Interest coupons are usually attached to bonds but are not to notes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I submitted to the gentleman the other day a proposition, recommended by a prominent banker of Baltimore—Mr. Griswold, of Alexander Brown & Co., bankers—to reduce to a tangible and negotiable basis our credit with other nations and guarantee the bonds that represent them to a negotiable basis and selling those to the people, thereby relieving ourselves of the payment of interest and settling the loans we have with other nations, which amount to more than $8,000,000,000. Why would not that have been a good proposition?

Mr. KITCHIN. I would say to the gentleman that while I am sure his banker friend in Baltimore is perfectly sincere in the matter and has no financial interest in it—and I would say, too, that under normal conditions I think his idea would not be an unwise one—those who originated that idea of putting on the market $8,000,000,000 of these foreign bonds are dealers and speculators in securities. They know if we now put on the market $8,000,000,000 of the French, English, Italian, Belgian, Serbian, and Roumanian bonds they would not bring over 80 or 85 cents on the dollar.

Mr. LINTHICUM. With our guaranty back of them?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; with our guaranty back of them. But why should we guarantee those bonds for the benefit of the speculators? If we guarantee those bonds they would not sell at over 90 cents, because we have our 4¼ per cent bonds now down to 94¼. When normal conditions are restored they would finally go to par—probably much above par—and the speculators of the country would make the difference between what such an immense amount of foreign bonds would be sold at now on the market and par when conditions become normal.

In my judgment, our liberty bonds, if one is able to hold them, the 4 and 4¼ per cent bonds, will, in normal times, when business and other conditions readjust themselves, go to an amount above par. We have put, and are putting, so many bonds on the market in such a short time that the people can not get the money to carry on their business and in addition buy such an immense amount of bonds as we have been compelled to issue. That is one of the reasons why we suggest issuing these short-time notes, because we believe matters will settle down finally before the five years and we can redeem these notes by selling bonds bearing a great deal lower rate of interest.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman does not mean to infer that our guaranty is not as good as our original promise.

Mr. KITCHIN. I did not say that.

Mr. McFADDEN. Then, if our guaranty on these foreign securities would sell at 90, and our original promise at 94, how does the gentleman reconcile it?

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman himself is a business man, and I believe he will thoroughly understand the proposition, that, having about $17,000,000,000 of bonds sold, in the hands of the people, and with the exception of $2,000,000,000, the first tax-free bonds, selling around 94 and 95, if you put $8,000,000,000 or eight and a half billions more on the market at the same rate of interest those bonds would not only sell lower than they would sell by just putting a few out, but they would carry down with them the $15,000,000,000 of bonds that are now below par. It would be too much put on the market at one time. We are trying by a provision in this bill—the additional $30,000 exemption—to prop the existing bonds up. If there was a proposition to put out a billion this year and a billion next year, and so on, the people might absorb them, but when we put on the market eight billions more at one time we could not expect them to sell at par. They would sell much below par.

Mr. FESS. There has been some fear that making this new issue inviting will induce the selling of the old issues and further depress them. Is there anything in that?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not think that is so, because these are short-time notes and the others are long-time bonds. An investor would prefer 4½ per cent for a long-time bond than one of these short-time notes, even with a higher rate of interest, with the option of the Government to redeem it before maturity. I think the $30,000 additional exemption to which I have referred will stabilize, if not appreciate, the value of the outstanding liberty bonds. There are thousands of people who are able to purchase bonds who will not purchase these notes. The man who is able to invest in bonds and desires a safe long-time investment will buy the liberty bonds to a greater extent—the bonds in the hands of millions of small holders—because of the $30,000 additional exemption for five years which this bill grants to them.

Mr. FESS. The position the gentleman is taking appears rational to me, but I know there is a suspicion throughout the country that making this issue inviting, either by making it a shorter time or a higher interest, will further depress and discriminate against the present bonds.

Mr. KITCHIN. As I said, considering this $30,000 additional exemption, I do not think that one of these long-time bonds—and all are long-time bonds that are now out—will be depressed by a short-time note, even with a little higher rate of interest.

Mr. FESS. I do not want to deflect the gentleman's argument, but is there any plan within the purview of the chairman's knowledge whereby we can prevent depression of the present bonds?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think this method is about as reasonable as could be provided under the present circumstances. One reason why the committee thought and suggested to the Treasury Department not to issue bonds at a higher rate of interest, but to issue these short-time notes, was this: Suppose we authorized an issue of a long-time bond, to be sold in the next drive at four and three-quarters. Most of the liberty bonds are 4¼ bonds. They are now down around 94 and 95. Congress would force an amendment to such a bill providing that all of the bonds now outstanding should be at once lifted to the four and three-quarter rate.

Lifting the interest on $15,000,000,000 of bonds and at least $7,000,000,000 more that we must hereafter raise, making $22,000,000,000, from a rate of four and one-quarter to a rate of four and three-quarters would entail an extra annual interest charge upon the Government of $110,000,000. If the bonds were 20 years maturity the total cost of such increase of interest rate would be $2,200,000,000. We are of the opinion that within five years the length of the longest life of any of these short-time notes, business and the financial condition of the country will so adjust itself that we can sell long-time bonds for 4 or 4¼ per cent. We will save this increased annual interest charge on all our bonds by resorting to the short-time-note proposition provided for in this bill.

Mr. FESS. Has the chairman or the committee considered the plan of converting the bonds into nontaxable lower-rate interest—I mean the present bonds outstanding?

Mr. KITCHIN. This could not be done. We have $15,000,000,000 of bonds outstanding subject to surtaxes, excess and war profits tax, and only $2,000,000,000, a little less than that because some were converted into the 4 and 4¼ per cent, that are tax free. Now, the $2,000,000,000 tax free, I think, are about 99½. If we convert all of these $15,000,000,000 into only 3½ per cent tax free, the 3½ per cent tax-free bonds would go down considerably for the reason the country could not absorb that. It is because the 3½ per cent bonds in this present situation are limited in amount to not over $2,000,000,000 that gives them a valuation practically at par.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is not what the gentleman from Ohio has in mind in asking for such a change as he suggests covered by the fact of the increased exemptions provided for additional holdings? Does not that cover that?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think the increased exemptions would go a long way toward having the result which the gentleman from Ohio desires.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Furthermore, is it not a fact that the Treasury Department is very much opposed to have the outstanding issues tax free?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. McAdoo has always been in favor and announced as the policy of the Treasury that the main part of those bonds should be taxable.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think that has been the policy of the Treasury Department, and that policy as announced did not strike the committee, the whole committee, as being unwise. A large majority of the committee agreed with him. It is very doubtful wisdom, in fact, it may be a dangerous policy to have tax free for generations and generations from $15,000,000,000 to $25,000,000,000 of property in the shape of bonds. Should we do this, when the time of readjustment comes and the establishment of settled conditions is here, the people will condemn Congress for exempting from taxation the rich—and they will hold practically all of the bonds in a few years—who hold in their hands $20,000,000,000 or $25,000,000,000 of bonds.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. PLATT. Would it not be possible to allow the $50 bonds to be converted into these notes as part payment, so as to get rid of some of the $50 bonds—to allow the small holders to exchange $50 bonds in part payment for $100 notes?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not think that it would be wise. I suppose if you make the inducement so attractive that everyone would take his 4¼ per cent bonds and buy these notes with them that we would have to come back to Congress and get authority to issue more notes. We need the money from the notes we propose to sell to defray our war expenses, our war debts, and not to reduce our bonds.

Mr. PLATT. I mean to use the $50 bonds in half payment for the $100 notes.

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not think that would be a good policy.

Mr. PLATT. You get rid of the expenses of having a lot of small bonds and coupons and provide an extra inducement for small investors to make further loans to the Government.

Mr. KITCHIN. Now, section 3 increases the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to issue $10,000,000,000 certificates of indebtedness instead of $8,000,000,000. Under existing law the Secretary of the Treasury can issue and have outstanding at one time $8,000,000,000 of Treasury certificates for current expenses of the Government, but no Treasury certificates can have a maturity longer than one year.

We have been financing the Government from month to month by certificates of indebtedness. Heretofore our taxes have been coming in at one time. Our income and excess-profits taxes have come in at one time, on June 15, and we had to have some form of floating indebtedness to take care of the expenses of the Government until we received the taxes. When we received the taxes we liquidated the certificates of indebtedness. Now we increased the authorization of certificates of indebtedness from $8,000,000,000 to $10,000,000,000. This authorization is made necessary by the fact that in our revenue bill we establish the installment plan of paying taxes so that instead of the taxes for 1918 being all due by June 15, 1919, within this fiscal year, only one-half will be payable and due by June 15 and one-fourth will be due September 15 and one-fourth December 15, so that we only get about half of the $4,700,000,000 we expect from excess profits and war profits and income taxes by June 15. Therefore to carry out the installment plan of the payment we had to increase the authorization of Treasury certificates.

We are issuing certificates now for the current expenses of the Government for the last four months at the rate of $1,400,000,000 a month, and it is an easy calculation that by December 15 we will in all probability have to have outstanding at one time considerably more than the $8,000,000,000. And before we collect the taxes for 1920 I am afraid we will have to have outstanding some time during the fiscal year of 1920 at least $10,000,000,000 of Treasury certificates, but they will be paid as the proceeds from these notes and the taxes are collected.

Mr. McFADDEN. I understand, then, there will be a floating debt on April 21 of about $9,000,000,000?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. We will receive during that time one-quarter of the $4,700,000,000 taxes, about $1,175,000,000 will be paid March 15 in taxes, unless the commissioner extends the time, and as to these notes they may sell in a drive from $3,000,000,000 to $5,000,000,000, we do not know how much—but even if we sell $4,000,000,000, not more than a billion and a half or two billions will be collected probably by May 1.

Mr. McFADDEN. And these temporary funds are simply underwriting future loans?

Mr. KITCHIN. Future collection of taxes and loans. It is exactly like we have been doing since we entered the war.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will pardon me, Mr. Leffingwell made a positive statement the other day that on the 30th of January there was something over $6,000,000,000 of floating indebtedness, and it was running at the rate or an increase of $1,400,000,000 a month, and he estimated that before the 21st of April, when this loan is to be marketed, that the floating indebtedness would be between $8,500,000,000 and $9,000,000,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think it will be, as I said, in the neighborhood of $9,000,000,000. We will be able to reduce that with a billion dollars of taxes on March 15, and also the proceeds from the sale of notes, possibly $3,000,000,000, may be paid in by July 1, and also the collection of the June 15 installment payment of taxes.

Mr. McFADDEN. The funds to run until December will be acquired from the issuance of these Treasury certificates of indebtedness?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Or else a bond issue late in the fall? Is that contemplated?

Mr. KITCHIN. If they sell, say, $5,000,000,000 of these notes at the first drive, they would probably sell the other $2,000,- 000,000 in the fall. It depends on how many of these notes they sell at the first drive. I do not think we will have to sell any long-time bonds this calendar year, at least.

Mr. McFADDEN. If they do not retire $9,000,000,000 worth, and, as I understand from reading the hearings, the Secretary could not tell within four or five billion dollars at this time. Is that included in the $9,000,000,000, or is it in addition to the $9,000,000,000? In other words, what I am trying to find out is whether the floating indebtedness is $9,000,000,000 or $14,000,000,000?

Mr. KITCHIN. It will, according to estimates, be $9,000,000,000 and not $14,000,000,000. These notes are not a floating indebtedness.

Mr. HAUGEN. It is $9,000,000,000 in addition——

Mr. KITCHIN. Five billion dollars is authorized under the existing law, in addition to the $17,000,000,000 of bonds that are already sold, but we will not issue at this time such bonds. We are going to substitute the notes provided for in the bill.

Mr. HAUGEN. We will have $17,000,000,000 of bonds outstanding in addition to the $9,000,000,000 certificates of indebtedness?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. But all such certificates, whatever the amount, are issued in contemplation of collection of taxes and sale of the notes and will be retired by the proceeds of sale of the notes and collection of taxes. My understanding is that there are between $5,000,000,000 and $6,000,000,000 of Treasury certificates outstanding now. Included in that is about $800,000,000 sold for tax receipts. These will increase until we collect the taxes and the proceeds from sale of the notes and may reach $9,000,000,000.

Mr. HAUGEN. In addition?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; included.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. When are these to be put on the market?

Mr. KITCHIN. They are going to begin the drive on April 21.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Are they to be sold as the liberty bonds have been sold by the Government?

Mr. KITCHIN. Practically in the same way.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And not by such agencies as the national banks?

Mr. KITCHIN. They are going to use the liberty loan organizations and the banks, too.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman please inform the House what, including certificates of indebtedness, bonds, and everything else, the total indebtedness of the Government is?

Mr. KITCHIN. All right. Take your pencil and let us see. We have $17,000,000,000 of bonds outstanding now. We have $1,000,000,000 in round numbers in war savings certificates. We have also now outstanding about $5,000,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Five billions of Treasury certificates?

Mr. KITCHIN. Of certificates of indebtedness; yes, sir. That is $23,000,000,000. I would say that right now our indebtedness represented by bonds, savings certificates, and certificates of indebtedness, in round numbers, is $23,000,000,000. That does not include, of course, $1,000,000,000 of bonds we had out when we entered the war.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. SNYDER. Ought we not to include in that the $1,600,000,000 we have been legislating for here to-day? Ought we not to add that to that amount? Is that provided for anywhere in this money?

Mr. KITCHIN. Do you mean on these contracts we discussed to-day?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. When the Appropriations Committee took back the appropriations in the bill that passed the House some time ago, the appropriations made during the war for the fiscal year, it left in the hands of the Treasury Department enough appropriations, as they thought, to cover the war contracts. I doubt, however, if such appropriations are sufficient. The unliquidated indebtedness, on account of the war contracts, may turn out to be much greater—and I fear it will—than the departments have estimated.

Mr. SNYDER. Is it money that must be forthcoming?

Mr. KITCHIN. Appropriations. Of course, all that is included in the $19,000,000,000 expenditures estimated for this fiscal year.

Mr. SNYDER. That money is lying somewhere waiting to be paid when these contracts are finally finished up?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. In a moment. The estimate of expenditures for this fiscal year is $19,000,000,000. The taxes that we propose to get, say, $6,000,000,000, the $1,000,000,000 war-savings certificates, and the $7,000,000,000 from the fourth liberty loan will pay $14,000,000,000 of that, leaving at least $5,000,000,000 that we must get out of these notes to defray the estimated expenditures for this fiscal year. In that $19,000,000,000 of estimates of expenditures of this fiscal year was included what we are supposed to pay on account of the war contracts; but, in my judgment, as I said a moment ago, I do not think they included enough to pay such contracts.

Mr. SNYDER. What I had in mind was this: That in business or in financial transactions you always know what your bond debt and note debt is, but you rarely know what the merchandise debt it. If you add the amount just stated, the unsettled accounts against the Government, then we would have what I wanted to find out.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is included in the appropriation. I was trying to tell how they were included in the estimates of expenditures for this fiscal year and how we proposed to get the money to pay them.

Mr. SNYDER. I understood the gentleman to say that we were going to get that money from these $5,000,000,000 notes that we were going to sell, or these certificates that we are going to issue now in anticipation of that. We have not the money in the Treasury to pay these bills with?

Mr. KITCHIN. No. We are providing in this bill to get that money; that is, the balance we need for the purpose.

Mr. SNYDER. And you have out now $5,000,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness, and you are going to put out $1,400,000,000 more per month, and this $5,000,000,000 of notes is to pay off those certificates?

Mr. KITCHIN. The $5,000,000,000, if we sell that much, and the taxes——

Mr. SNYDER. But your certificates by that time—by the 1st day of May—will cover the $5,000,000,000 of notes you are going to sell and the $2,000,000,000 that you will possibly get from your taxes. Where is the money to come from to pay these accounts?

Mr. KITCHIN. We hope to get $5,000,000,000 from the first drive or sale of notes to be issued under this bill.

Mr. SNYDER. I understand that.

Mr. KITCHIN. We propose to get $4,700,000,000 from the taxes; that is, income, excess-profits, and war-profits taxes. That makes $9,700,000,000.

Mr. SNYDER. But you do not expect to get those by the 1st of July?

Mr. KITCHIN. One-fourth of these taxes on March 15 and one-fourth by June 15. The department will issue and sell certificates of indebtedness at the end of the fiscal year, to anticipate the taxes that we will get on the September 15 and on the December 15 installments.

Mr. SNYDER. But every time you issue a certificate you make a debt.

Mr. KITCHIN. It make no difference. If you have $9,000,000,000 to raise for this fiscal year, and we raise it by $5,000,000,000 from notes and $4,700,000,000 from taxes, that cancels it, although we will not get but half of those taxes by June 15, but we will get them all by December 15.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman appreciates that I am not trying to interfere, but that I am trying to help.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. I am trying to explain it to you.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for 25 minutes more. I regret that I have taken up so much time. I think if gentlemen had complied with my request at the outset and not asked questions until I got through I could have finished explanation of the bill, section by section, in 25 or 30 minutes. But I appreciate the difficulty of doing this when we reach a proposition in the bill to which gentlemen on the floor have given study and thought. They wish an explanation then and there, which is perfectly natural.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for 25 minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] are on their feet. I will answer their questions first and then I hope gentlemen will let me get through with the explanation of the bill before other gentlemen interrupt me.

Mr. SNYDER. I have just one question.

Mr. KITCHIN. I thought I had answered the gentleman.

Mr. SNYDER. Not quite. I may be very dense. It may be my fault.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me have the gentleman's question.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman says we now owe $24,000,000,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. I said $23,000,000,000, but an extra billion now does not make much difference. [Laughter.] But if we include the $1,000,000,000 of bonds outstanding before we declared war it would make $24,000,000,000.

Mr. SNYDER. The question is, Have we provided in these measures for the payment of all these obligations that we have been discussing in the last few days, including the contracts that we now call valid, or will call them so when that bill becomes a law?

Mr. KITCHIN. In the $19,000,000,000 of estimated expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30 this year are supposed to be included these Army and Navy contracts to which the gentleman refers. Whether they will amount to more or less no man can tell, because the amount is indefinite. Now, to that $19,000,000,000, which includes what the gentleman inquired about, we have $7,000,000,000 of fourth liberty bonds. We have expended that. We have a billion dollars of war savings certificates. We hope to get and propose to get $6,000,000,000 from taxes. This includes all taxes, excise taxes as well as income, excess, and war-profits taxes. Of this amount the income tax and the excess-profits tax will, according to estimates, be $4,700,000,000. Heretofore such taxes have all been paid by June 15, within the fiscal year. While they are still levied for the fiscal year, we have extended part of that payment over beyond this fiscal year; that is, two installments, one September 15 and one December 15, and, of course, the amount so extended will be and must be met by issuing and selling certificates of indebtedness, the proceeds of which will take the place of the extended two payments to defray this fiscal year's expenditures and will be retired upon the collection of the taxes in the September 15 and December 15 installments.

We have accounted for the way in which we will raise $14,000,000,000 of the $19,000,000,000. I will repeat, the $7,000,000,000 of fourth liberty bonds and $1,000,000,000 of war-savings certificates and $6,000,000,000 of taxes, which make $14,000,000,000 of the $19,000,000,000 that you must have for the expenses of this fiscal year. Now, we must have $5,000,000,000 additional to make the $19,000,000,000. We propose to get that $5,000,000,000 by the sale of these notes. If we only sell by the end of this fiscal year, on the next drive, say, $4,000,000,000, we will have to issue in anticipation of another sale, which perhaps will be in the fall, a billion dollars more of these certificates of indebtedness to make up the $5,000,000,000, which would be canceled by the proceeds of such other sale.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Answering the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin, the gentleman from North Carolina stated the outstanding indebtedness at approximately $23,000,000,000. What part of that issue is represented by our loans to the allies?

Mr. KITCHIN. Up to date, to be accurate, $8,090,000,000 is the amount which we have loaned to them; but we have established credits with them, subject to be paid, if the necessity arises, of $8,600,000,000; but the Treasury Department is hoping that it will not require the $8,600,000,000 before the termination of the war.

If we deduct, say, in round numbers $8,000,000,000 from the $23,000,000,000 that would leave $15,000,000,000 in excess of our loans to the allies.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. But these loans bear the same rate of interest as our bonds?

Mr. KITCHIN. The Treasury Department made a little better bargain than the minimum which we authorized it to make. We provided that the bonds of foreign Governments should bear a rate of interest not less than the rate borne by our bonds. Their obligations in fact bear 5 per cent.

Mr. HUSTED. The report states that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue $5,000,000,000 of bonds under existing law.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. And that he does not intend to issue those bonds.

Mr. KITCHIN. Not at the present time, because we know that it would be impossible for him to sell $5,000,000,000 of bonds at 4¼ per cent interest when bonds bearing the same rate of interest, that we sold during the war, are now down to 94 or 95.

Mr. HUSTED. I appreciate that very well, but the purpose of my inquiry was this: In view of the fact that we are providing for all our obligations under the pending legislation, and that the Secretary of the Treasury does not propose to issue this $5,000,000,000 of bonds, why is not this authority to issue those bonds revoked?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is a very pertinent question. The gentleman has observed that the Government reserved the right to redeem these notes after not less than four months and not more than one year's notice. Now, suppose conditions become settled, and we find in two or three years after these notes are out that we can sell $5,000,000,000 of bonds easily at 4¼ per cent. Then the Secretary of the Treasury will sell those bonds at 4¼ per cent and redeem these notes that will be bearing the higher rate of interest.

Mr. McFADDEN. Before the gentleman proceeds, will he please answer this question——

Mr. KITCHIN. I always break my promise about not yielding when anyone like the gentleman from Pennsylvania asks me a question.

Mr. McFADDEN. It has been stated that our obligations for this fiscal year were $18,000,000,000. Secretary of the Treasury Glass the other day raised that amount to $19,000,000,000. He also stated before the Ways and Means Committee the other day that there is an undisclosed liability of $5,000,000,000. Now, are our liabilities at this time $18,000,000,000 or $19,000,000,000 or $24,000,000,000?

Mr. KITCHIN. Our estimated expenditures for this fiscal year are $19,000,000,000, as I have several times stated. That has been the estimate. The Secretary of the Treasury did not raise it a billion, as the gentleman states. Our liabilities, not including the bonds outstanding when we declared war, which amounted to about $1,000,000,000, as represented by bonds, certificates of indebtedness, and war-savings certificates, amount to $23,000,000,000.

Mr. McFADDEN. Are there $5,000,000,000 of undisclosed liabilities, as the Secretary of the Treasury stated?

Mr. KITCHIN. He said our floating debt was $5,000,000,000. He meant certificates of indebtedness outstanding. He said nothing about undisclosed liabilities.

Mr. McFADDEN. As I remember, he was asked the question what the liabilities were. He said he had asked the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, and they were unable to tell him. His estimate was that there were still $5,000,000,000 of liabilities that were unaccounted for. I want to know if that is to be added to the $19,000,000,000, and whether this bond issue, instead of being $5,000,000,000, will be $10,000,000,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will again say to the gentleman that the Secretary did not refer to liabilities unaccounted for or undisclosed in his testimony. If there is any undisclosed liability in the Navy Department or the War Department, it is because of these contracts about which we have been talking a great deal to-day; but they are supposed to be taken care of in the $19,000,000,000 estimated expenditures for this year.

Now, gentlemen, I have about 20 minutes remaining. Let me run through these other sections hurriedly.

Section 5 gives the holders of the 4 per cent bonds who failed to convert them before November 18, 1917, into the 4¼ per cent bonds that were issued afterwards, the privilege of so converting them. The 4 per cent bonds, of course, are in the hands of several millions of our people who are unaccustomed to bonds and who did not read the notices that were given in the press for the conversion of bonds. They failed to convert their 4 per cent liberty bonds into the 4¼ bonds, which they had the right to do up to November 9, 1918. They failed to exercise that right through ignorance, no doubt, and now there are outstanding of those uncoverted fours $1,067,000,000. This bill gives them the right to come in at any time and convert them into the 4¼ per cent bonds. We could see no objection to that. In fact, we saw every reason of right and justice why men who put up their money when the 4 per cent bonds were issued, to help win the war, should have their bonds converted into 4¼ per cent bonds at any time they desired. Section 5 gives that right.

I am going to read section 6, which creates a sinking fund. The reading of it will make it as clear as I could make it:

SEC. 6. (a) That there is hereby created in the Treasury a cumulative sinking fund for the retirement of bonds and notes issued under the first liberty bond act, the second liberty bond act, the third liberty bond act, the fourth liberty bond act, or under this act, and outstanding on July 1, 1920. The sinking fund and all additions thereto are hereby appropriated for the payment of such bonds and notes at maturity, or for the redemption or purchase thereof before maturity by the Secretary of the Treasury at such prices and upon such terms and conditions as he shall prescribe, and shall be available until all such bonds and notes are retired. The average cost of the bonds and notes purchased shall not exceed par and accrued interest. Bonds and notes purchased, redeemed, or paid out of the sinking fund shall be canceled and retired and shall not be reissued. For the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1920, and for each fiscal year thereafter until all such bonds and notes are retired there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes of such sinking fund, an amount equal to the sum of (1) 2½ per cent of the aggregate amount of such bonds and notes outstanding on July 1, 1920, less an amount equal to the par amount of any obligations of foreign Governments held by the United States on July 1, 1920, and (2) the interest which would have been payable during the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made on the bonds and notes purchased, redeemed, or paid out of the sinking fund during such year or in previous years.

In other words, after July 1, 1920, we will have a sinking fund of (1) 2½ per cent on the total amount of bonds then outstanding, less the foreign bonds we hold, and (2) the interest on the amount of bonds which we purchase and retire. Of course we have a sinking fund now, under an act passed right after the Civil War, providing for 1 per cent, and I think there is a book account perhaps of $1,000,000,000 or over, but we have not a cent of money in that fund. Congress never authorized the collecting of enough money from taxes and other sources to have any money to put into this sinking fund. I hope hereafter that we will collect enough from taxes or from some source to put into this sinking fund the amount authorized. Perhaps we ought to have had a provision compelling the Secretary of the Treasury to make a report each year as to how much he has put into the sinking fund, a separate special report as to his acts with respect to it, so as to call the attention of Congress specially to the condition of the sinking fund.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, as long as the gentleman is the only one of his class here, I will yield. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONDON. The bill does not impose any obligation on the Secretary of the Treasury to take the 2½ per cent and appropriate it to the sinking fund.

Mr. KITCHIN. The latter part of the bill reads "there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman interprets that to mean——

Mr. KITCHIN. That he can do it. If there is any money in the Treasury, the Secretary of the Treasury could take that money before he pays anything else and put it into the sinking fund, and there would be no way to get it out except by act of Congress.

Mr. LONDON. Is there any obligation on the Secretary of the Treasury to do it?

Mr. KITCHIN. No more than to pay any other appropriation that we authorize for the Navy or the Army or anything else. Were I the Secretary of the Treasury I think I would appropriate the amount on the 1st of July, 1920, and put it into the sinking fund, and let us scuttle around to get money from somewhere to pay the other expenses. I think when we have a bona fide sinking fund that that of itself will appreciate the value of the outstanding bonds.

Section 7 needs a little explanation. Secretary McAdoo, before he left the Treasury Department, and Secretary Glass asked the Ways and Means Committee to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to establish credits in the United States in behalf of foreign Governments to the amount of the unexpended balance of the amount that we authorized in former acts, which is about one billion and a half dollars. In other words, they asked that we should loan our allies one year after the termination of the war one and one-half billion dollars. By that we would have to go out in these liberty or victory loan campaigns and ask the people to subscribe a billion and a half dollars more than was necessary to meet the debts of our Government, that we might lend it to foreign Governments, so that the foreign Governments could lend it to their citizens to buy from our citizens, or the foreign Governments could buy direct from our people or from our Government what they desired.

The committee thought we ought not to do that, and I think the committee was unanimous in the opinion that certainly this was not the time for the Government to loan a billion and a half dollars more to the allies, especially when we had to go out and get it from taxation of the people or by selling bonds to the people to get the money. To say the least, we felt that to provide for such a loan at this time was premature. We could better consider the proposition after peace was concluded and the exact financial conditions were better known.

We did provide in section 7 what appears to us to be the right and safe and wise thing. We provided that the Government of the United States could sell to the allies any property of the United States—and we have millions and hundreds of millions of supplies in Europe that the allies will want. We expressly included wheat, the price of which the Government has or may guarantee.

This will not take a dollar of extra money from the taxes or one dollar extra from the people in bonds. We have already appropriated a billion dollars, if the Senate passes the bill, on the wheat proposition, and we would have to pay that, or the amount of difference in the value and the guaranteed price, whether we sold the wheat to the allied governments or to others, for that is to make good the difference in the price we promised to pay and the price which will be received. As to the other property which the Government now has and the allies desire to purchase, we will not have to raise any money, as we have already paid or appropriated for that.

I understand there are about $100,000,000 worth of railroad engines that we have in France, not much good to us, because they are not made for our roads, that the allies—probably the French Government—will want. For articles of property like that, instead of demanding cash of the allies, under this section our Government can sell and take their bonds at the rate of not less than 5 per cent interest, and the maturity not to exceed 20 years.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman will make his question short.

Mr. MASON. If it is not agreeable to the gentleman——

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, I will yield to the gentleman, but I want to finish shortly.

Mr. MASON. I was not in the Chamber when the gentleman began. Has he discussed the question of fixing by the Secretary of the Treasury the interest on the short-time loans?

Mr. KITCHIN. I have.

Mr. MASON. Then I will not trouble the gentleman.

Mr. KITCHIN. I believe I mentioned the fact that we provided that the Government could sell to the allies for their bonds the wheat which it may have to purchase in order to save itself in its guaranty of the price of wheat.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a very short question?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman said that we would require in 1920, $19,000,000,000. Does that mean the fiscal year of 1920 instead of this year?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; the nineteen billions is for this fiscal year, ending June 30, 1919.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Nineteen hundred and nineteen?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman also stated that the fourteen billions and the five billions are also to be raised this fiscal year.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Section 9 is a section on which, I regret very much to say, the committee was not unanimous. While no minority report was filed, yet there are three members of the committee who opposed that section. In my judgment, if it be a fact that our export business needs help, that is one of the wise sections of the bill, one of the beneficial sections of the bill. We provide that the War Finance Corporation shall have the authority for one year after the termination of the war to make advances, first, to the exporters in this country for the purpose of assisting in the exportation of domestic products; second, to the banks or bankers or trust companies who after this act goes into effect lend money to the exporter for the purpose of assisting him in the exportation of domestic products. The amount to be loaned directly to the exporter is limited to the contract price of the products to be exported. The amount to be loaned to the banks is limited to the amount which the exporter then owes the bank for the purpose of assisting him in exporting. The interest rate on the loan made direct to the exporter shall be not less than 1 per cent per annum in excess of the discount rate of the Federal reserve district in which the exporter resides. The advances that can be outstanding at any one time are limited in amount to $1,000,000,000. While the corporation's authority to make these advances is limited to one year after the expiration of the war, the maturity of the loan can be for a period not exceeding five years. It can make loans with a maturity of three months, six months, one year, two, three, or five years; but, as stated, the time of its authority to make such loans or advances is limited to one year after the termination of the war.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The matter of the War Finance Corporation was subject to as much criticism as anything that came before the committee. Is it the gentleman's understanding that the business of the War Finance Corporation under this bill could be wound up in one year or five years?

Mr. KITCHIN. The authority of the corporation under the existing finance-corporation act, to make advances for the purposes set forth in the act, is limited to six months after the termination of the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. While its power to make advances under the act creating the War Finance Corporation was limited to six months after the termination of the war, within that six months it could make advances; but upon the expiration of six months after the termination of the war the corporation's activities, except for liquidation, would cease, and it is to begin at once to liquidate. We do not change that in this bill. The activities under the original act for the purpose therein specified cease in six months after the termination of the war, but we give to it in this bill a period of 12 months after the termination of the war in which to make advances or loans for the purposes set out in the bill—that is, for the purpose of assisting in the exportation of our domestic products.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the point that I wanted the gentleman to develop.

Mr. KITCHIN. And, therefore, after the 12 months it must begin to liquidate the business done under this bill and can not make a loan or advance for any purpose after the expiration of 12 months after the expiration of the war.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The life of the corporation is extended from six months to one year?

Mr. KITCHIN. Only for the purpose of the advances under this bill, for export of domestic products.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is business not contemplated by the original act?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is what I wanted to have developed. It contemplates an entirely new line of business, and also an extension of the life of the corporation.

Mr. KITCHIN. Exactly; for the purposes set forth in this bill. Under the original act it was authorized only to make advances for the purpose of prosecuting the war, the nature of such advances and purposes being specifically described in the act.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Originally the authority of this War Finance Corporation was to assist corporations and individuals in the United States who could not obtain funds to carry on war business?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The jurisdiction of the corporation was to be wholly within the United States?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Without the power to lend outside?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. We do not permit it to lend outside in this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is correct, but it is proposed to encourage those who want to engage in foreign trade. That is a fact, is it not?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; to assist in exporting new products. Let me explain this section more fully, and why a majority of the committee on both sides believes that it is a very wise thing. It appeared to us from what gentlemen from the Treasury Department, who had their hands on the situation, said, and from what business men throughout the country said, and from conditions evident to all of us, that our exports would of necessity have to fall off considerably, and that domestic production would have to be curtailed, unless exportation of our domestic products got some help now. There are many restrictions put upon exports, not only from this country but from every country, especially by Great Britain. The reason for such restrictions, as given by the Treasury Department, are that the rate of exchange is so high against Great Britain, and the condition of England's finances is such that she has to prevent as far as possible the exportation of gold. She deems it necessary to keep all of the gold possible there for the purpose of readjustment of her finances. If her people were permitted to buy freely from us, and gold was required by us in payment of the balances, she would, of course, lose much of her gold. So to enable her people to buy freely of us this section, by authorizing the Finance Corporation to make advances to our exporters, enables our exporters to extend credit to the foreign purchaser, who in such event will not be required to pay cash or gold. Such extension will be long enough to bridge over the time of transition and readjustment. We are led to hope and believe that this will relieve the situation and cause many, if not all, restrictions upon our exportations to be removed.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. SNYDER. As I understand it, under this act I believe the corporation can loan in all $1,000,000,000?

Mr. KITCHIN. Never more than that outstanding at one time.

Mr. SNYDER. I want to know where the corporation gets the $1,000,000,000 it is going to loan?

Mr. KITCHIN. It has $500,000,000 as capital stock. The Government has turned over $350,000,000 and will turn over $150,000,000 if needed, making the $500,000,000. That is in the shape of a revolving fund, and they may never need any more than that. If they loan for six months and the exporter pays it back, that will go in to make another loan, but if they need more money then under the War Finance Corporation act it can issue its bonds, backed by all its assets, including the capital stock of $500,000,000 and all the securities for advances it holds. The officers of the corporation are of the opinion that if issuance of its bonds becomes necessary it will be able to sell them at a reasonable rate of interest.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to ask if those bonds can be purchased by the Federal reserve banks or sold on the market to ordinary banks and ordinary investors?

Mr. KITCHIN. They are sold on the market or sold privately, and perhaps the Federal reserve banks can take them just as they can liberty bonds.

Mr. SNYDER. Then if they go far enough with this, of course, it is an additional Government bond?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; it is not at all a Government bond. All the assets of this corporation are behind the bond and it is just exactly the same kind of a bond, with the same kind of security which the gentleman and I voted for in the War Finance Corporation act, when we voted for the bond provision of that act.

Mr. SNYDER. I did think this was a little different. I thought that the money they expected to loan would have to be raised in the ordinary method of selling bonds or notes. As I understand it then, there is no change in the method of raising money for the purpose of this loan?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is right. I will call the attention of the gentleman from New York to a provision in the War Finance Corporation act which evidently he has overlooked, and which both he and I strongly favored when the bill was before the House. It provides that the Government shall not be responsible for any bond obligation or liability of the corporation. It is in the act and applies to any bond or obligation which it may issue for the purposes of this section.

Mr. SNYDER. I did not see that.

Mr. KITCHIN. I was sure the gentleman had overlooked that. Let me read that provision:

SEC. 17. That the United States shall not be liable for the payment of any bond or other obligation or interest thereon issued or incurred by the corporation, nor shall it incur any liability in respect to any act of omission of the corporation.

So the Government is not responsible.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

Mr. KITCHIN. I regret I can not yield right now. We provide that in addition to the note, the promissory note of the exporter—and, gentlemen, we all know that the little man does not export, practically all the exporters of the United States are large, solvent financial concerns——

We get their notes. The Finance Corporation must require "full and adequate security" by indorsement, guarantee, or otherwise. Suppose the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER], who is a manufacturer of bicycles—and I am not advertising him, but I know he makes the best and more of them than any other in the United States——

Mr. SNYDER. You have got that right. [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I will give an illustration that the gentleman will appreciate. He has an export trade, or had one before the war. His foreign customers in London or Paris want, say, $100,000 worth of bicycles. He can not sell them now. Why? Because on account of restrictions and financial conditions his customer can not pay in cash or gold. He needs credit to bridge over the readjustment period. If Mr. SNYDER is unable to sell on long-time credit, he will apply to the corporation for advances for such a length of time, not to exceed five years, as will conform to the time of credit extended by him to his foreign purchaser. The corporation will carry Mr. SNYDER and he in turn will carry his customer. He will thus sell his bicycles to his foreign customer. In this way Mr. SNYDER and every other person or corporation who has or had a foreign trade can revive or continue it. In this way will domestic production be helped. We, however, provide, first, that the exporter must go to the banks and give the banks the first chance before he can go to this corporation. Before the corporation makes any advances to the exporter he must show that he could not get the money on reasonable terms from the banks. The only questions, it strikes me, we are to consider are, first, Does the export trade at this abnormal time need help? If you answer "yes," the next question is, Can it get that help from the banks in this country? If you answer that "yes," you do not need this section. If you answer "no," I am impressed, as a business proposition, that this section provides the wisest, safest, and easiest method of assistance that has yet been suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We may not have this same audience again, and I know the gentleman wants to be entirely fair, since he realizes there is some difference in opinion as to this. Is it not a fact that the money which the War Finance Corporation uses comes from the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman means the $500,000,000 capital stock, yes. I said the War Finance Corporation act provided its capital stock should be $500,000,000, to be called for as the corporation needed it. The Government, being the only stockholder, furnishes that amount. Up to date it has paid into the corporation $350,000,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But the corporation has the power after it gets this $500,000,000 in hand, or in some smaller sum, to issue bonds to six times the amount?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is correct as to the original act for the purposes set out in the act.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. So that it may tax the investment market to that extent. And it has the power, set up by the Government, to interfere with its own sales?

Mr. KITCHIN. The corporation, if it issues bonds, can sell them in any way it sees fit.

The gentleman is about one-third correct and about two-thirds incorrect as to the amount of bonds the corporation can issue under this bill. The corporation act, as it now stands, authorizes an issue of bonds to the amount of six times its paid-in capital. If the Government should pay in the whole $500,000,000 of capital stock, the corporation, if needed, could issue bonds to the amount of $3,000,000,000, but only for the purposes set out in that act. It has so far issued no bonds, and as the war is over it is hard to see how it can be justified in issuing bonds hereafter, except for the new purposes set out in this bill. We expressly in this bill limit the amount of loans or advances outstanding at any one time to $1,000,000,000, so that there is no possibility of the corporation issuing bonds exceeding $1,000,000,000, and certainly little probability of issuing that much considering the amount of its capital.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Does the gentleman admit——

Mr. KITCHIN. There has been objection to this because, it is stated, the bankers of this country can do this business. The gentleman ought to favor this, for the reason that in this very section we provide that one can only get money from the corporations by showing that he can not get it from the banks. Now, if it is true that he can get it from the banks, he can not get a cent from this corporation. I think a great many bankers would like this. I think if I were a banker doing a large amount of business I would think well of this plan, because that would relieve my bank from carrying that burden, and I could use my money for my other customers and for domestic trade. But, on the other hand, if my bank wanted the exporter's business, it could get it, and the corporation could not and would be glad not to interfere. The corporation is to do that which the banks can not do. Banks can not and will not and ought not to make loans on such a long time as will be often required in case of advances for the export business.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Does the gentleman feel that the business that the War Finance Corporation has done up to this time justifies its creation and existence?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I think so. The gentleman will understand that the business of the corporation provided in this bill is different from that in the original act—the purposes of the advances are different. The fact is that the Finance Corporation, instead of loaning and issuing bonds to the amount of $2,000,000,000 or $3,000,000,000, as was predicted by its opponents, loaned less than $350,000,000, no bonds were issued, and only $350,000,000 of capital stock was paid in by the Government. Out of this it purchased over $200,000,000 of liberty bonds.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does not that tend also to competition, to keep down the interest rate?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; it tends to keep down interest rate.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. FARR. Did they make any bad investments?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; they made no bad investments. They made $2,000,000 of profit, and every debt was paid at maturity.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. HAYES. I have not the war-finance act before me, but as I recall the act, it was intended for war purposes only.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. HAYES. On what basis does the gentleman declare for that to stimulate trade when the war is over?

Mr. KITCHIN. I am sorry the gentleman was absent from the House when I discussed that, because I discussed that very fully. We provide a different purpose in this bill.

Mr. HAYES. Very well.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. KREIDER. I would like to know if the gentleman has made an extended study of the method by which England finances its foreign business, especially in South America, and whether the gentleman has compared that with the method followed by the National City Bank of New York? I am informed, in substance, that the exporters there take the merchant's paper, and in Buenos Aires, for instance, discount the paper and hold it until the merchant is in a position to pay the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. They do that.

Mr. KREIDER. I understand the National City Bank of New York is doing a similar service. The question is whether, in the gentleman's opinion—and I have a very high regard for his judgment—that method of financing would not be preferable to this, provided the banking institutions of America can be strengthened and made stronger to furnish capital in the foreign field?

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman hits the nail on the head. If the banks were strong enough to do that, we would not need this. If the banks are strong enough to accomplish the purposes of this act, then not a dollar will be loaned under it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me tell you in a moment about the South American situation. I am glad the gentleman mentioned it. Argentina, I am informed, has already established, by loaning direct to Great Britain, Belgium, and France, a $300,000,000 credit for the purpose of assisting her export trade, just as we are trying to do in this bill for our exportation, except that we are not putting the Government behind it. We are putting the exporter, who is going to make the profit, behind it.

Mr. McFADDEN. She did it direct, however, and not through a War Finance Corporation.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman was opposed to the proposition of the Treasury Department that the Government lend direct to the allies $1,500,000,000 for the purpose of assisting our export trade and putting the United States Government and the taxpayers behind every dollar of it. In the way provided in this bill the Government and taxpayers are not behind or responsible for a dollar, but the man who is going to make the profit is put behind it in the first instance, and then his indorsers or guarantors or collaterals.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. As a matter of fact, the banks of this country to-day can not do any exporting business because of the restriction on the time that loans can be made.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am glad the gentleman mentioned that. That is a material point.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. We have a better plan. Instead of going out and selling the bonds all over this country and getting the money from everybody from whom we can get it, and taking a billion and a half of proceeds from these bonds, or from taxes collected from the people, instead of getting the billion and a half in that way and lending it to the allied Governments so that they can lend it to their citizens to buy direct from American citizens, we have another plan. We happen to have on the statute books the provisions with respect to the War Finance Corporation, and we found that we could extend that act as we have done by this section and accomplish the very purpose that some other governments are accomplishing by direct loans, accomplish the very purpose that the Treasury Department desired to accomplish by direct loans to the allies, and that we can do this without costing the Government a cent or putting the Government or the taxpayers back of it, but by putting back of it the man who makes the profit out of the foreign purchasers, and making him and his indorsers and securities responsible for every dollar advanced.

I thank the committee for their patient attention. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman from North Carolina whether he expects a vote on this bill to-night?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I gave that notice when we started.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman expect to have a roll call to-night?

Mr. KITCHIN. If gentlemen will stay here and make a quorum in Committee of the Whole, I would be perfectly willing to finish the bill in committee and take a vote on it in the House to-morrow morning.

Mr. SNYDER. I hope the gentleman will do that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May we have that understanding, that there will be no roll call to-night?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; but I do ask all gentlemen who can do so to stay here and help make a quorum in Committee of the Whole, so that some gentleman who gets mad will not make the point of no quorum.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The only point is, can we say to gentlemen that there will be no roll call to-night?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; I think so.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have listened with much interest to my friend from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN]. He is a splendid lawyer, and in his argument he paints a rosy picture of his side of the question.

I am opposed to this War Finance Corporation proposition in this bill. If enacted into law it will be an outrage and nothing short of it.

In the first place, let me say I believe this authorization of $9,000,000,000 of short-time Government securities is more bonds than should be authorized at this time, but I presume I will be obliged to vote for it, being unable to get anything better. There is authorized at the present time but not disposed of more than $5,000,000,000 long-time bonds. There are about $2,500,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness authorized but not disposed of, making more than $7,500,000,000 of authorizations already made, which the Secretary of the Treasury can dispose of to raise money, in addition to the $6,000,000,000 of taxes that will be collected under this new law this year. Seven billion dollars of noncirculating Treasury notes mean practically $7,000,000,000 of certificates of indebtedness, simply given another name; that is all. The law provides that certificates of indebtedness may be issued for not more than one year. This bill, if enacted into law, permits the disposal of Treasury notes to the amount of $7,000,000,000, to be issued for a period of not less than 1 year nor more than 10 years, the rate of interest left discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury. My good friends, I am getting tired of voting for war measures after the war is over. [Applause.] During the war I voted for everything asked for by the administration as a war measure. I want now to give to the administration everything necessary to wind up this war and meet our annual obligations.

If this bill passes, authorizing an additional $9,000,000,000 of Government securities, and these securities are disposed of, together with those already authorized, we will have outstanding $37,500,000,000 of Government obligations, the annual interest account of which will be in round numbers $1,500,000,000. That is what we have got to face. The people ought to know it. It is pretty nearly time that we cut off these unnecessary lucrative jobs of this War Finance Corporation, and stop imposing upon the taxpayers and calling upon them for the money to carry them on.

What does this War Finance Corporation do now? It is a Government creature, created by the Congress of the United States, authorized to spend $500,000,000 of the people's money raised from the sale of bonds, or from taxes, or from any other way to get the money into the Treasury. Then the corporation is authorized to issue a certain amount of bonds in order to get money to loan to the railroads of the country, public utilities, and industries engaged in the manufacture of something to aid the Government in carrying on this war. I have here a list of the loans outstanding now, made by the War Finance Corporation, which list I received yesterday from that corporation. There are outstanding unpaid at this time $108,000,000 of these loans, of which $70,000,000 has been loaned to the railroads of the country.

The gentleman from North Carolina said it was for the purpose of having a lower rate of interest. Let him examine the loans, and he will find that they carry from 5¾ to 7½ per cent interest. Why, I can beat that at my little bank at home. I pay only 6½ per cent interest myself.

Mr. SNYDER. And that is usury in our State.

Mr. FORDNEY. The railroads have been loaned $70,150,000, unredeemed at the present time. The amounts of loans to the railroads is exactly the same as the original loan. None has been paid. There has been loaned to public utilities $26,738,900; warehouse receipts, $8,500,000; to the Dallas Cattle Loan Agency and the Kansas City Cattle Loan Agency, $6,716,000; or a total of $104,250,000. Other small items make a total loan of $108,719,520.

Here are the rates of interest: Loans to banks, from 5 to 6 per cent; public utility loans as high as 7½ per cent. Not one in the list paid less than 7 per cent. The gentleman says "a cheap rate of interest." Yet the War Finance Corporation goes on, and wants to go on for another period of five years, to loan to our exporters. I have been a small exporter—or, rather, an exporter in a small way. I weigh as much as any other man that weighs 210 pounds. Did you every know anybody to go broke for want of money to sell goods abroad? If so, point him out and I will show you a white blackbird. Exports are cash. Talk about these countries being broke and having no money to buy goods. Heretofore the exporter attaches a bill of lading to his draft and gets cash for it in any bank in the country. This idea of loaning the people's money for export has no other purpose on God's earth except to continue the functions of the War Finance Corporation for another five years one year after the war is closed, then begin to close up business.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That would make the obligations run along practically for six years?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. Now, it is said that there is no obligation on the Government back of these bonds. We created the Federal farm-loan banks, 12 of them, with branch banks throughout the country; there was to be no obligation on the part of the Government back of these loans. What did we do? We appropriated in round numbers $9,200,000 to start them in business, and took the money out of the Treasury. They were to sell bonds to obtain the money to loan to the farmers at a low rate of interest. They were to use the money to loan to another farmer to get more bonds to make more money to make more loans. What has happened since the creation of that Government creature? They put their hands into the Treasury and took out $200,000,000 and placed it in these banks, in my judgment contrary to law, because the banks could not dispose of their securities—the Government not being behind them—to get money to loan to the farmers.

I obtained from the Wichita, Kans., bank a list of the loans, the description of the property in detail, the assessed valuation upon that property, every loan a man got, and, my good friends, under the laws of Kansas the assessor certifies under oath that he has assessed the property at its value. And I can show you loans made by the Federal farm-loan banks on property assessed at $2,500 where the loan was three or four times the amount of the value of that property.

Mr. DOREMUS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. DOREMUS. In how many instances did the gentleman find that?

Mr. FORDNEY. I had 150 or 200 items and I venture to say that 25 of them were loans far above the assessed value of the property. The gentleman will find in the list in the RECORD, for I placed it in the RECORD, each and every loan, a description of the property, and the name of the man to whom the loan was made. I went to the Members from Kansas, Representatives in this House, to know whether or not the assessed value was supposed to be its actual value, before I made that statement.

Mr. DOREMUS. Does the Kansas law require the assessment to be made at the true cash value?

Mr. FORDNEY. The law provides that it must be made at the true value at the time the assessment is made; two separate values, one on the land and the other upon the buildings, based on the insured value of the buildings, both of which are the assessed valuation.

The point I am getting at is in regard to the sale of the Federal farm-loan bonds. The brokers of the country are advertising them to-day and saying that Uncle Sam is behind the bonds. They can not sell them otherwise. These bonds of $1,000,000,000, if sold, will be paid by the Federal Government as sure as God made little apples, whether this law says that the Government is behind the bonds or not. Do you believe that our Government, creating this War Finance Corporation, authorizing them to issue $1,000,000,000 worth of bonds, that when these bonds become due, if the security in the hands of that War Finance Corporation is not sufficient to meet their payment—100 cents on the dollar and interest—do you believe that the people of the United States would say that these bonds shall not be paid by the Federal Government? No. The people are honest and they are going to pay the bonds, whether the War Finance Corporation can pay them or not from securities in their hands.

But the gentleman from North Carolina says this money is to help the banks; that the exporters must go to the banks. Of course the exporter is going to the bank. He will go to the bank first. He does not have to go through this red tape when going to the bank for loans that he must go through when he gets the money from the Federal Government. Under existing law a member bank of the Federal reserve bank can rediscount your paper or my paper, commercial paper, not accommodation paper, and rediscount it with the Federal banks and get the money for you. But rather than do that if you pass this law the bank will say, "Go to the Federal Government and get your money; we do not want to reindorse your note and discount it and help you out, but if you can not get the money from the Federal Government, if the War Finance Corporation can not let you have this money, if you can not get it, come back and we will do the best we can for you."

But it is stated that this is for the purpose of enabling our exporters to sell their goods to foreigners. I am not so very much alarmed now about our exports as I am about our imports. Before this war broke out our imports constituted 7 per cent of our production in this country; that is all; and when this war is over they will not exceed 10 per cent of our production at any time. What we are most concerned in is protecting our institutions at home. The best market in the world for American farm and manufactured products is among our own people here at home, where more than 90 per cent of our total products are consumed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman tell us how that home production is protected while we are advancing money to safeguard our exports?

Mr. SLOAN. If he will tell us how it is not protected it would be a shorter story.

Mr. FORDNEY. If the War Finance Corporation is authorized to go out and borrow from the people $1,000,000,000, that billion dollars is taken away from the people and their loaning capacity has been reduced just that much, and the money is in the hands of this finance corporation instead of in the hands of the banks, the money lenders, for you have just changed it from one hand to another. You have not increased your volume of money a penny. I will tell you how we are increasing the volume of our money. I have here two Treasury statements which I picked up from my desk before coming over here a few moments ago, one dated February 20, 1919, and the other dated February 20, 1918. The amount of gold in the United States Treasury on the 20th of February of this year was $2,550,000,000 in round figures. One year ago the amount of gold was $2,400,000,000, or to be exact $2,398,890,000, an increase of gold in the Treasury of the United States in the past 12 months of $150,000,000. Our balance of trade during that time was $6,000,000,000. Only a few weeks ago I read a statement issued by a bank in New York which said that the gold supply in the banks of Great Britain, France, and Germany was almost equal to the greatest amount ever in those banks in the history of the world. They are not distressed for the want of gold. What we should be most interested in is in keeping gold at home. Of course that is what I want and that is what you want. There is only one way to do that, and that is to hold a balance of trade against the whole world. The balance of trade is paid in gold, generally, or in American securities. So that we have more gold to-day than ever before in our history in the United States Treasury. We have more gold in the United States Treasury, almost twice over, than was ever in any treasury in any country of the world in the history of the world. There is plenty of gold elsewhere in the world. Here is where we are getting some increase of money.

Before the war broke out, before we created the Federal reserve banks, there were outstanding about $1,900,000,000 of gold certificates. There was in the Treasury of the United States that amount of gold, gold coin, or gold bullion. For every gold certificate outstanding there was a dollar in gold in the Treasury back of it. What happened? One year ago, upon the 20th of February, we had $1,260,000,000 of gold certificates outstanding. The Federal reserve banks are collecting up the gold certificates, going to the Treasury of the United States, surrendering them, and taking gold for them, and then turning right around and getting $2.50 of paper money in Federal reserve bank notes issued for that dollar of gold. How much have we got to-day of outstanding gold certificates? Eight hundred and forty-nine million dollars—a reduction in the last 12 months of $411,000,000 of gold certificates. That means that for that $411,000,000 we have more than a billion dollars of Federal reserve bank notes outstanding at the rate of 2½ to 1 where we had but $1 of gold certificates before to $1 of gold.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman will not contend that that necessarily follows—that because the gold certificates have been reduced $411,000,000 there are two and a half times that many Federal reserve notes issued in their place. That does not follow at all.

Mr. FORDNEY. It is claimed it does follow, and that is the law; and they have gone to the extreme extent of the law; but I want to conclude, and you and I will get together on this. There is an addition to this of 40 cents of gold back of those notes, gold deposited with the Federal reserve banks, by member banks of the country; but that does not belong to the Government; it belongs to the depositors and stockholders of the member banks, and is only there as a guaranty for their membership, and any time these member banks withdraw as a member they can withdraw their gold.

Yet it is counted, and it is said there is 65 cents of gold back of every dollar of Federal reserve bank notes. The point is, I believe, the Government is to-day canceling some of these Federal reserve bank notes, and going to bring it down to a basis of 100 cents on a dollar of gold reserve, but we have had inflation within the last year of a billion and a half dollars or thereabout, just in that way. Am I not right on that?

Mr. PHELAN. We have probably had a good deal more inflation than that. The gentleman thinks that the inflation—I will not say inflation, but expansion——

Mr. FORDNEY. On that issue, I am talking of.

Mr. PHELAN. There has been an increase in the amount of Federal reserve notes, approximating what the gentleman stated, but that does not necessarily mean inflation, although the whole country has been upon an inflated basis.

Mr. FESS. What is the relationship between this expansion of circulating medium and the high cost of living?

Mr. FORDNEY. It would be very hard for me to tell the gentleman just what that is. The cost of living has been very high, while the cost of production is high and the cost of manufactured and agricultural products must necessarily be high. I know, for instance, where production costs have trebled over what they were in peace times, before the war.

Therefore, whatever the cause is, the ultimate consumer must pay it all, and he does pay it all. It is not possible to have a high scale of wages in the country and low cost of living. Any man who takes that position is a demagogue or a fool. It can not be done. You can not put a pair of shoes upon the market where the labor cost is $7 and sell them for less than $7 and add to that whatever the material has cost; therefore when wages are paid in the country to-day, in many instances $1 per hour—and that is the case in many institutions which I know of, from 50 cents to $1 per hour—common labor, the cheapest labor, section hands upon certain logging railroads receiving 50 cents an hour for eight hours for a day's work, and $1 per hour for other ordinary labor—practically no skilled labor in the lumber camps—how, under such circumstances, can the producer sell the manufactured article at a low price? He must have his cost of raw materials, his labor costs, his taxes, his insurance, and all overhead expenses added to his cost of production, and the ultimate consumer must and does pay it all.

Mr. FESS. What advantage is it to the laborer to get $7 a day if he has to pay a proportionate increase for things on which he has to live?

Mr. FORDNEY. None at all. My good friend, several years of my life I spent at hard labor. I wore blue-jean overalls and a cotton shirt. I received $1.50 a day much of that time, and I received as much pay as any other man received for the same work. I lived fairly well, my wife and two children, and I had a comfortable bed to sleep in and a fairly well furnished home and a good table to sit down to. Now, when a man receives $5 a day and pays four times for the articles of food and clothing which I paid at that time, he is not as well off as I was with my family then. That is the point. It is common sense and it must be conceded.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield on another point? At the time of the Civil War the circulating medium was about $16 per capita?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. FESS. To-day it is probably $55?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Is it possible for us to reduce the cost of living with such an expansion of credit as that until there is deflation?

Mr. FORDNEY. No. While there is such an expansion of currency and such high cost of production of every kind it is not possible, my good friend, for the laboring people of this country, who are the most interested in prices, to have more of the comforts of life than they had under other conditions existing before the war, with lower prices all around.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. PHELAN. I do not suppose either the gentleman from Michigan or the gentleman from Ohio will undertake to say that the cause of our inflation has been primarily the issue of an additional amount of Federal reserve notes?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, no.

Mr. PHELAN. The fact is that any additional issue of Federal reserve notes has been to take care of a situation which did not arise from the administration of the Federal Reserve System at all.

Mr. FORDNEY. No such thought was in my mind, my good friend; the world war is very largely responsible—and the Democratic Party, I may say also——

Mr. FESS. Do not leave that out.

Mr. FORDNEY. Are responsible for high prices. Pardon me for saying that, because Democrats are good fellows when they are asleep. [Laughter.] Now, my friends, I am overly anxious for this Government to take its hands off business. We are going to the dumdum bowwows with Federal supervision and Federal control and the poor people are paying the penalty and must while it lasts. I want to call your attention to a few things. We did the silly thing—let me put it good and strong—absolutely silly, when this Government took over the railroads during this war. All that was necessary to have done was for the Federal Government to say to the owners of the railroads, "We want you to carry our property in preference to others," and it would have been done. "We will give you financial aid," and if the Government had given financial aid to the railroads operated by individual ownership, such financial aid as the Federal Government did give to the Director General of Railroads, we would be far better off to-day than we are.

Mr. GARLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I want to finish this statement.

Mr. GARLAND. I just wanted to ask if the gentleman does not think that if the Government had authorized the railroads to put on the additional freight charges and passenger charges that they did it would not have even been necessary to give them financial aid?

Mr. FORDNEY. I wanted to say that.

We have just passed a bill through this House appropriating $750,000,000 of the people's hard-earned money to pay the loss by the Government management of the railroads for the calendar year 1918. Let me go further. In addition to that, the 50 per cent increase in passenger fares took effect on the 10th day of June, as I now remember it, and the freight rates on the 25th day of June. What did that amount to? My friend, the increased revenue to the railroads for the increased passenger and freight rates, based on the average earnings of the railroads for the year 1916 (and they were greater in 1918), would be one thousand million dollars in 12 months, or $1,000,000,000. Therefore, those rates being in effect a little more than six months last year, the increased income for the railroads was a little better than $500,000,000. Add that to the $750,000,000 we are now appropriating for the additional loss, and there is $1,250,000,000 to be paid by the taxpayers of this country for the folly of the Government in taking over the railroads and controlling them last year. [Applause.]

Mr. FARR. What period of time did the gentleman say?

Mr. FORDNEY. Twelve months. The railroads were taken over on the 28th of December, 1917, and those figures are for the calendar year of 1918.

I know of a carload of goods—and this is to show you the efficiency under Government control—a carload of freight, shipped from the city of Detroit on the very day the Government took over the railroads to the city of Washington, where usually the time for the transportation of a carload of freight for that distance was less than one week, and it took 65 days for that freight to reach the city of Washington under Government control. It reached here on the 3d day of March. And not only that carload but several carloads.

Now, there is $1,250,000,000 of loss which we must pay. Now, how much must we pay for our folly in taking over the telegraph and telephone lines? Tell me what, in the name of Heaven above, any local telephone company in any county in any State of this land has to do with carrying on the war in Germany. And yet these lines were taken over by the Government. Tell me what, in the name of Heaven, cables between this country and Europe now have to do to carry on the war, except to convey messages from our representatives at Paris to the press in this country. All this is costing us large sums of money.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SLOAN. I just wanted to add to the matter of the expense in money in taking over the railroads that the railroad public has suffered from inefficiency in both freight and passenger traffic. Has not everybody who has traveled upon the roads found inefficient service in addition to the large expense they have been to the Government and the public?

Mr. FORDNEY. Let me call your attention to one of the inefficiencies of Government control.

One week ago last Thursday I left this city to go to my home to attend the funeral of a dearly beloved niece who died at Butte, Mont., and whose body was brought back to Michigan. The funeral was to take place on Saturday. On Wednesday afternoon I telegraphed my family that I would leave the next day, Thursday, at noon, for my home. I was due to arrive at home, and did arrive there, on Friday, at 12.40 p. m. At 4.30 o'clock that afternoon the telegram that I had sent two days before was delivered to me at my home. Oh, that is splendid, efficient Government service—shows our Government control a farce.

Mr. FESS. Would the gentleman yield to an interruption?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESS. On Saturday last a young son from the Navy was here and desired to stay over until a brother from overseas would reach here, which was to have been Monday. A wire was sent to the Navy at Cambridge, asking whether 48 hours' extension could be granted this boy. The wire was sent at 3.20 p. m. on Saturday. I received it here at 2.15 p. m. Monday. The boy in the meantime, not having had any word, left Sunday night at midnight. The other boy arrived here yesterday. The message extending the time, sent from Cambridge at 3.20 Saturday, I received here at 2.15 Monday.

Mr. FORDNEY. That is very inefficient.

Let me make one further mention and I will close. I have named some of the items of extravagance that the taxpayers of the country are put to by the Federal Government by its inefficiency. We recently appropriated $100,000,000 of the people's money to aid the suffering and starving abroad. That $100,000,000 will be spent and must be paid. Our expense in holding these boys in the Army and Navy to-day is from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000 a day. Can you tell me, can you give me any good reason, why our boys should be held in service who are in this country now? I say every man in our camps, except those to keep the camps in good order to take care of our returning soldiers, should be discharged and sent home. But what is the War Department doing at the present time? There has gone out an order from the Secretary of War that in order for a boy to obtain his release from the service he must make affidavit that he has a position waiting for him at home.

What can a boy in a camp down in Florida do in making an affidavit, if he lives in the State of Washington and telling whether or not he has a position waiting for him out there? Let them go home. They will find employment. There was a scarcity of labor in the country before war was declared. We took more than 4,000,000 men out of the industrial world in the United States, put them into the Army and the Navy, and a half million, in round numbers, of those beloved boys have been killed or crippled upon the battle field, and therefore their places will have to be filled, and it is said that there are thousands of unemployed men about the country and the Government wants to find employment for them, but let them be released from the Army and the Navy without this affidavit, and they will find employment waiting for them.

Now, let us see what is back of that.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. In a minute. It means this: The administration says to the soldier, "We are going to keep you here at the expense of the taxpayers, with nothing for you to do, and will not let you go home, where you may produce something to eat or drink or wear, but you must remain where you will be a burden upon the taxpayer instead of some help at home." Oh, my friends, an unemployed man, a man without employment is the poorest asset of any nation under the sun.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. KREIDER. I want to say to the gentleman that I have got dozens of cases where the boys have not only made affidavits that their jobs are waiting for them, but where their employers have made affidavits that the jobs are waiting for the boys, and yet they are not being sent home.

Mr. FORDNEY. My good friend, I have two cases which I will relate to you. They are both cases that concern my grandsons, the sons of my eldest daughter. One is in his twenty-second year. He left a position of $1,800 a year and his board. That place is waiting for him. He has made application, and that application has been pending since December last, and we can not get him out of the Navy. He is stationed down here at Yorktown, Va., where the Government is building a mine-filling station, and doing ordinary work in charge of some 20 or 30 sailors, work that anybody can do who is capable. The other boy is a younger grandson, 18 years of age, and the day that boy was 18 years old he ran away from home and enlisted in the Army. He is stationed at Camp Shelby, at Hattiesburg, Miss. He has not done one hour of military duty since the armistice was signed. We want him to come back home to finish his high-school course. His mother and father and teacher have made affidavits that that is the reason they want him home. I wrote to the commanding officer myself, and I received in answer the next thing to a very insulting letter. The language was about this: "Your grandson knows the rules and regulations, and when we want to let him go we will let him know." That is about the substance of that letter. There is no excuse in the world why that little boy—for he is small for his age—why that little fellow should not be permitted to go home and finish his education. And yet they will not let him go. He is there at an expense and a burden upon the taxpayers. I want to see all the boys go home.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that there are hundreds and thousands of these inspectors all over the United States to-day that were formerly inspecting Government contract work who are still drawing salaries of from $3,000 to $3,600 a year, and that they have not done anything since the armistice was signed?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; and they never will do anything unless it is a soft job. They never did and never will—such men.

I went into a factory in my home town where the factory was turning out leather goods for the Army—bridles, saddles, halters, and harness. I was requested to go there to see what a waste there was of the leather under the specifications sent out by the War Department for halters and harness. The leather had to caliper thirty-two one-hundredths of an inch thick before the article would be accepted by the Government. As a rule cattle are so high-priced to-day that they are sold at the age of 2 years, and therefore the hides are not as heavy on an animal of that age as would be if the animal were 3 or 4 or 5 years old; and out of an ordinary side of leather there is but a strip 4 to 6 inches wide from the middle of that side of leather that will caliper the necessary thickness to be accepted by the Government. The Government would not let them make a halter or a bridle out of two pieces. A two-piece leather halter is the best in the world, sewed or riveted together. I know; I have used many of them in the lumber business. I asked, "Have you not an inspector here who can pass finally upon those questions?" The answer was, "We have an inspector here, but his inspection is not final, and he is drunk half the time."

I asked, "Why don't you report him to the Government?" The answer was, "Oh, we would only get into deeper water if we did that." My guide said to me, "Come with me out into the shop," and I went with him into the shop, and there sat a man in a high chair with his head on his bosom, as drunk as a lord—a Government inspector. My guide said, "There he is, in that condition every day he is here. We let him sleep and we get along better without him. We know what the requirements are. We let him sleep. A drunken man riled up will get us into trouble." I saw that with my own eyes—a drunken Government inspector in the harness shop.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Did this occur in the State of Michigan?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; but the man was an Illinois inspector. [Laughter.]

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. KREIDER. Does the gentleman know whether it is true that they ordered, purchased, bought, and paid for 1,400,000 saddles when they had less than 400,000 horses in the Army, on the presumption that they might shoot the saddles and not the horses? [Laughter.]

Mr. FORDNEY. I will answer that in this way: I took dinner one evening in this city with an Army officer, and he said, "I am in the employ of the Government and I would be court-martialed if I were to tell this. Therefore do not give my name away," and I will not.

But I want you to accept what I say as true, because it is true. He was ordered to buy certain leather goods. He asked, "How much of this stuff have you on hand?" The reply was, "It does not make any difference how much we have on hand. Buy what we tell you to buy. Here is the order to buy." He said, "I made up my mind I would not buy these leather goods until I knew how much of each kind they had on hand." These are some of the statements that he made to me. He made an examination and found how many Artillery horses the Government had. It is my recollection now that there were five sets of harness on hand for every span of Artillery horses owned by the Government. He found that there were 148,000 Cavalry horses owned by the Government, some 40,000 of which were at that time in Europe and the remainder over here, and there were on hand 1,050,000 saddles and 1,550,000 halters, and other harness in proportion. Well, that was extravagant; but perhaps they figured that this war was going on for years and years. I have no right to complain, and I am not complaining about extravagance during the war. Many mistakes were made, but we won the war and we will forget those mistakes. I ought not to mention them here, but I do say, my friends, that I think it is time to get away from Government ownership and Government control and Government dictation of business in this country as rapidly as possible. Therefore I am opposed to this paragraph in this bill that extends the life of the War Finance Corporation and extends their rights and prerogatives. I believe that we should let the existing law stand, which provides that after a certain time, I think six months after the signing of the peace treaty, the War Finance Corporation shall wind up their business, pack up their grips, and go home—stop Government expense, so far as they are concerned—and let the business of the country go on as it did heretofore, and as it will the minute the Government takes its hands off of business. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does any gentleman desire recognition?

Mr. FORDNEY. It was agreed between the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] and myself privately that the time should be divided between the gentleman and myself, although that was not agreed to in the House; and if it is agreeable to gentlemen I will yield that time as we go along and will now yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

The CHAIRMAN. That was a private agreement. Of course, the Chair has no official knowledge of that. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will assure the Chair and the House that I will not consume any time beyond that yielded to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the issuance of $7,000,000,000 in additional notes or bonds of this Nation calls for some remarks on the condition of the National Treasury which makes such an enormous loan necessary and as to how far it will satisfy its needs for the present and the future.

When Secretary McAdoo turned over to Mr. Glass the job of carrying on our national finances, he put upon the new Secretary a task greater than that which has been put upon any man since this war began. It was, in my judgment, the most hopeless and helpless job that could be given him. It was hopeless because he could hope for nothing in the way of assistance from either his party or the administration. It was helpless because they had already brought the public affairs into such a condition that it was impossible to extricate them from the difficulties which surrounded them or to find a satisfactory solution of the great problems which were involved.

Less than one week of this session remains. At this session there ought to be determined the amount of appropriations which will be made for the next fiscal year. Yet there is no one—President, Secretary, member of committee, or whomsoever you may select—who is able at this time to make even a respectable guess at what will be our expenditures in the next fiscal year.

Along about the 1st of December last Mr. McAdoo estimated that our expenses during the next fiscal year would be $7,431,000,000. Perhaps that was a pretty fair guess for that time, but everyone knows now that it is going to cost vastly more than that.

The law requires that the Secretary shall make an estimate of the appropriations and that if those appropriations are likely to exceed the anticipated revenues the President may, in informing Congress upon the state of the Union, state how those appropriations may be properly decreased, or how the additional amount shall be raised, either by taxes or additional bonds. But of late there has been no attention paid to this statute, and I do not expect that any attention will be paid to it. I do not know how any head of any department could be expected to comply with this law, because they are not only making no estimates about what their respective departments will require, but all of those heads of departments are coming in here and asking for all that they might anticipate they would need and seeking to obtain every possible amount from this Congress. The result has been that Congress has cut down the amounts asked. Estimates made by these departments have been reduced from 50 per cent to in some cases even a larger amount of what was originally asked. So far from the President asking that any of these appropriations be cut down, he has, as everyone knows, recently come in here and asked that they be enormously increased. So we have here now a great deficit looming in the future for the next fiscal year, expenses estimated at some $10,000,000,000 or $12,000,000,000. Our last revenue bill provided that the taxes should amount to only about $4,000,000,000, and an immediate scramble has resulted on the part of the heads of departments for further appropriations for increases in the number of employees, for enlargements of their functions. Then also there has come in from all sides, as might be expected, the usual pack of looters who are seeking for political advantage or private plunder to obtain some share of the money which is being so freely poured out by the Government.

There never has been such an assault that I know of since the German hordes descended on Belgium, and the result with reference to our Treasury is that it will be left in about the same condition that the Belgium treasury was after the Huns had swept over that unhappy country. Gentlemen on the other side have all the time viewed this condition of things with perfect indifference. Some have even aided and abetted assaults on the Treasury with much zeal and ability, a zeal and ability I very much admired, although I could not approve the object of it, until I finally came to the conclusion that the prodigal son was the original Democrat, and the party had not improved in economy from that day to this. [Laughter.]

Of course, I will admit that in these proceedings the Members on the Republican side were often put between the devil and the deep sea. They had to exercise a choice between starving the Government by compelling it to give its approval to some proposition that in itself was meritorious and necessary or join with the Democrats by jumping into the sea of extravagance. In such a position they often chose the latter evil. But we were not responsible for that condition. We did not frame the bills; we did not control the committees that brought them in. We did not have a majority by which we could amend them or reduce the amount which they carried. We were very often perfectly helpless while the steam roller passed over us.

So we have reached this condition when there is no one in this House that is able to give an estimate on the expenditures of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, within a billion or two billion dollars. If that is not "frenzied finance," I do not know what would be.

In this chaotic condition of our finances, as I have before observed, in the last revenue bill provision was inserted that no more than $4,000,000,000 should be raised next year by taxation.

Where the rest of the money is to come from nobody has ever explained. I do not know where; I do not think any gentleman knows where it is to come from, and, for my part, I have spent many an anxious day and a considerable portion of some nights studying these questions.

Let us see what this situation is. We have got somewhere in round numbers about $6,000,000,000 of floating debt, consisting of Treasury certificates and thrift stamps. The certificates, of course, can be taken up, and some of them will be by notes issued now and be paid. They are likely to be reissued, and there they stand. They must be paid sometime. After next year's taxes are paid—this $4,000,000,000 we are talking about—after this note issue, as we call it in this bill, is exhausted, after all the provisions we have made so far have been used up, we are going to have somewhere between six and eight billion dollars that will not be taken care of.

Mr. McFADDEN. Does that include the $5,000,000,000 of undisclosed liabilities which the Secretary of the Treasury spoke about?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I never knew what the Secretary meant by that expression. I suppose he referred to some foreign obligations contracted in France for military supplies.

Mr. McFADDEN. They would be undisclosed obligations of the United States whether they were in a foreign country or this country.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If that is what he referred to, yes; but I have never understood exactly what he was talking about. I can not explain that to the gentlemen, and I would be glad if somebody could. I am not stating the figures as I would wish, but I can not get them from the Treasury. I tried to find out what the amount of the certificates of indebtedness were. I wanted to find out up to the 1st of February the amount, but I was unable to ascertain. Otherwise I would give the figures with more exactness. I think nobody can tell what our expenses are going to be within a billion dollars for the next fiscal year.

But you have here this situation—this much I know—that there will be six or eight billion dollars deficit unless heavier taxes are levied. And this bond issue will not be the last; there will be another and perhaps another still, but we are going on borrowing money not simply to pay the interest on the indebtedness, which would be bad enough, but to pay our ordinary expenses in a year the first day of which begins eight months after the war ceased. This is not frenzied finance, that part of it. It is plain recklessness or foolishness, whichever you choose to call it.

But still the merry dance of appropriation goes on. We have appropriated, if I remember rightly, in the last 30 days very nearly $3,000,000,000, all for new projects and entirely outside of the ordinary expenses. The idea seems to be on the part of all the heads of the various departments to get the money while the getting is good. The money is going fast, and we have only to keep on as we have been to render it impossible to get the funds to pay our obligations, whether we try to raise it by taxes or bonds.

Some of these measures are proposed in order to prevent unemployment. In this way we have appropriated over my protest $200,000,000 for good roads, and it is now proposed to appropriate $100,000,000 for public buildings. I approved neither of these extravagances. The expenditure for roads has more justification than that for buildings, but the roads can wait. What has caused the trouble with our present situation? The waste of war. We have put billions into enterprises which will never show any return. If we put more money into our productive projects we will only aggravate the evil. Some one will say, "But we wish to stimulate employment and encourage production." In Heaven's name, if the expenditure of twenty billions this year and ten billions next year will not stimulate employment and encourage production, what will? Will it help matters to take several billions more from the taxpayer's pocket or to take his money for bonds? Will not that keep him from so using it that it would stimulate employment and encourage production? Would it not merely make conditions worse?

I ought to say that there has been some method in all this madness. The appropriations which have been made at this session and the appropriations that will have to be made—and a large amount will have to be made at the special session—will all have to be paid during the next fiscal year when the Republicans are in charge, and the natural result will be, as I expect, that our friends over on the Democratic side will point to the great expenditures that are being made and say, "Look at these Republicans, how they are spending the money," when, as a matter of fact, we will be simply paying the debts which our Democratic friends contracted in this period when no one had any regard for the amount which was taken out of the Treasury.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Is not that one of the cardinal political conditions, that the Republicans must pay the burden of collecting this money while our friends on the other side have the enjoyment of spending it? Is not that the real difference between the two parties, speaking practically?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, yes; that is to be expected. We gather up the money in the portions of the country—and I do not want to mention any geographical line—most frequented by Republicans because the Republican States pay the highest taxes, and we find all through this war that it was largely spent where our Democratic friends resided. Of course, this produced the very happy state of affairs in those regions, and I presume they were very well satisfied with the result. It is possible, however, there may be something further said with relation to it.

I have sometimes been criticized as asking for too much taxation and attempting to raise too large an amount of money in that way. So long, however, as I am not criticized for having unnecessarily created the condition that brings about taxation I shall not worry very much about the other matter. I think my friends will now concede—those who were contending that I had overestimated when the war commenced the amount of expenditures and necessary taxation—that we have now reached the situation where it is fully as difficult to raise the money by bonds as it is by taxation, and that difficulty is going to be accentuated as time goes on. Perhaps some creative and inventive genius has evolved in his mind a method whereby all these vast sums of money, all this immense indebtedness, are going to be paid. If so, he has failed to give us an inkling of it. It has never been developed on the Democratic side, and it becomes our painful task to try to find some way if we can. We are bombarded on every side by requests for expenditures in all directions, and we have been called upon in the name of the soldiers to make great appropriations which were really far more for the benefit of those who were promoting the enterprises than they were for the defenders of our country. I have often myself received telegrams from commercial organizations in my district asking me to support certain large appropriations that had been planned for purposes which I do not need to mention at this time. This action I find was brought about by the head of a department to whom Congress had refused to give as many millions as he wanted to squander. And all this has been because the people have not understood whither we are drifting. It has not developed in their minds how near they are to the financial precipice over which they are gradually being dragged. Some day the people will awake to these conditions. A tax bill like the one that we last passed, although some thought it was not large enough, and perhaps is not, will tend to open their eyes, and the time will come when gentlemen who have been pushing through these great appropriations will call upon the rocks and mountains to cover their heads from the vengeance of an indignant people. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BLACKMON. How many of the Republicans stood out against these extravagant measures that the gentleman is now complaining of? Did the gentleman himself?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am quite ready to admit, as I have heretofore admitted, that by the astuteness of the gentlemen on the other side, Republicans were often put, as I have said, between the devil and the deep sea and forced to either deny an appropriation entirely for some meritorious project and thus starve the Government out and stop its operations, or else join with you in this carnival of expenditures.

Mr. BLACKMON. Would the gentleman admit that he had seen all of these extravagances carried on, and that he, as a representative of the people, voted for these propositions——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no; not all of them.

Mr. BLACKMON. What did you fail to vote for?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It would be quite a long list. I am afraid the gentleman has not often done me the honor he has to-night of listening to what I have said heretofore; but I have often announced that I would not vote for appropriations, and have spoken against them.

Mr. BLACKMON. In the most friendly spirit I would ask the gentleman to name one of these measures which he is talking about that he voted against.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I voted against the $100,000,000 appropriated to buy food for foreign nations, for one thing. I thought it was mostly in the interest of the packers.

Mr. BLACKMON. That was after the armistice was signed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, that is what I am talking about. It is this race that you gentlemen are now making to get the money while there is some left.

Mr. BLACKMON. I merely asked the gentleman in a friendly spirit to know why, when the money was being spent extravagantly and without cause, the gentleman sat silently by and voted for these appropriations.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have been anything but silent. But if the gentleman is talking about the period of the war I can say something more serious. It was because on his side gentlemen—not the one who is speaking now, because I do not think he would do anything of that kind—whenever a voice was raised against any waste or extravagance going on during the war, would stand up and accuse anybody who opposed those appropriations or sought to reduce them of being unpatriotic and unwilling to support the President and to carry on the war. That was the reason why many were silent.

Mr. BLACKMON. But I never did do that myself.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; the gentleman was not guilty, but others were.

Mr. BLACKMON. One further question, and I will not interrupt the gentleman again. Just one other question, if the gentleman will allow me. If you saw the country being destroyed by the Democrats, and you are a conscientious Republican, would you vote for those measures simply because men on this side said you ought to do it? Would the gentleman do that?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I have not said I would do anything of the kind. The gentleman was asking not only in regard to myself but also in reference to some other members of my party, and even inquiring whether during the war that same situation obtained. If you gentlemen on the other side—and I might go higher up in the administration—could not get during the war the amounts that you wanted, you said you would not become responsible and would not go on.

Mr. BLACKMON. One other question, and I will not interrupt my friend again, because I have a splendid regard for him. Now, if you knew that the Democrats were going wrong, would you, a representative of the American people, simply because they did that, follow them? Is that the gentleman's position?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I have not said anything of the kind.

Mr. BLACKMON. Is that the position of the Republican Party?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; nor have I said anything of the kind. I think some Members occasionally might have been moved by some motives of that kind.

Mr. BLACKMON. I would like for my friend to name one. I am sure he would not do that. Then would your party—I am talking of the great Republican Party of this country, because I belong to the other party, the Democratic Party, and the gentleman belongs to the Republican Party. I am sure the gentleman would not do a thing of that kind, would he?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have not done anything of that kind, but I have done this: When gentlemen upon the other side would say, for example, we had to have $3,000,000,000, or a certain amount, and that if they could not have that they would not take anything, would not permit an amendment, and you felt that the amount might have been very well reduced, I have had to vote for the bill or else the war could not have been carried on.

Mr. BLACKMON. If I am disturbing the gentleman——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is not disturbing me, but I am afraid I am disturbing the House by exceeding my time.

Mr. BLACKMON. This is important. There is no man in your district who questions your loyalty, and if you voted against one of these bills would you think for a moment that your loyalty was questioned?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman has studied the proceedings of the Security League, he will observe that the loyalty of Congressmen was attacked on very much slighter grounds than that.

Mr. BLACKMON. I know that the gentleman's loyalty could not be questioned. If a man questions my loyalty, I do not care for that, because the country knows. The gentleman is loyal and I believe I am, but the gentleman would not consent to Democratic lead simply because some fellow has said he might be questioned as being disloyal, would he?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman has asked me about something I have not claimed and would not claim.

Mr. BLACKMON. I understood my friend to say that he belonged——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This is a very interesting personal conversation between the gentleman and myself, which I would be very glad to pursue for the rest of the evening, but some other gentlemen here desire to be heard.

Mr. BLACKMON. I do not mean to interrupt the gentleman at all, but just wanted to know——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have no objection and I do not want to be discourteous to the gentleman, because he has always been extremely courteous to me, but I really feel I ought not to yield further.

Mr. BLACKMON. The gentleman never has been to any Member of the House, but I just wanted to know if the gentleman and his body were following Democrats, knowing they were wrong, yet you followed them because your loyalty was questioned?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have answered that several times, and if the gentleman is not satisfied I regret it.

Mr. BLACKMON. I am very much obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Chairman, I have introduced a resolution, which has been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, with respect to Costa Rica, and I would like unanimous consent to extend my remarks in accordance with the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Seventy-seventh Division. I obtained permission some time ago to do this, but the five days have expired, and therefore I ask permission again.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] is recognized.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with interest to the speeches of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], in which they clearly set forth the unbridled extravagance, the riotous waste, of the Government funds, their failure to collect funds, their failure to protect American industries, and their undue concern for foreign interests. These charges brought no defense from a Member of the majority. Somebody should defend the party in power. Nobody seems to undertake it, and therefore I will submit this measure of defense, that outside the statements that I have referred to, and some others fairly warranted, the Democratic Party is economically all right.

I desire to discuss two features of this bill. I shall probably vote for the measure, as it will be amended, I hope, because we must have funds. The fact is that there is not an excessive amount of funds, the funds being managed by whom they are and in the manner they are being mismanaged, if you please. I trust also that the large audience upon my right intends to be entirely quiet and undisturbing and will be so. When I see the vast multitude over on my right, I know that the slightest movement on their part would make a considerable disturbance of the whole. If there were less here I would not be called upon to make that suggestion.

But this measure that comes from the Ways and Means committee——

Mr. BLACKMON. Will my friend, with whom I had the distinguished pleasure of serving on a committee when I first came here, object to my stating that there are only 9 on his side of the House and 15 on the Democratic side?

Mr. SLOAN. And that is why I called attention to the vast crowd in the Hall, because it is the first time in three months the Democrats have had a majority here.

Mr. BLACKMON. My friend will——

Mr. SLOAN. That is about all I care for. I gave you your numerical credit; the quality credit I retain for the membership upon my left.

Mr. BLACKMON. Now, my friend——

Mr. SLOAN. I can not further yield. If I yield to the temptation of discussing the matter with my friend I know if I should begin talking to him to-night he would rob me of the opportunity of talking to the vast multitude, because who would talk to a multitude when he had an opportunity to converse with the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. BLACKMON. Just one question: My friend is too modest to admit——

Mr. SLOAN. Let the gentleman at that point understand that that is the first time the charge was ever made that I am too modest.

Mr. BLACKMON. I knew you would not admit it. My friend is too modest to admit——

Mr. SLOAN. We admit nothing.

Mr. BLACKMON. You are too modest to admit that there is anyone on this side of the House that compares with gentlemen on your side.

Mr. SLOAN. I will leave that question to its own sweet answer. What I desire to discuss is section 8. It says:

SEC. 8. That the obligations of foreign governments acquired by the Secretary of the Treasury by virtue of the provisions of the first liberty bond act and the second liberty bond act, and amendments and supplements thereto, shall mature at such dates as shall be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That such obligations acquired by virtue of the provisions of the first liberty bond act, or through the conversion of short-time obligations acquired under such act, shall mature not later than June 15, 1947, and all other such obligations of foreign governments shall mature not later than October 15, 1938.

I have called attention to this particular feature in every bond issue subsequent to the first. I regret to say that we can not proceed to sell the obligations of the American Government on this, what might be called, the fifth bond loan, and say to the American people, and especially to the boys who went beyond the seas to fight our battles, that we have made good on our pledge to take foreign bonds of like tenor and effect of the bonds bought by our people. It was the understanding from the beginning, it is the understanding of the American people now, that we should have from all the foreign governments to whom we loaned money their obligations backed up by the action of their legislative bodies; those obligations to be in the same terms as to maturity and interest and all other important particulars, to correspond with the bonds that we have sold to the same extent to the people of the United States.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has been making a study of this question of our foreign loans. Will he state just what we have in the way of security in the United States for the loans made abroad?

Mr. SLOAN. We have, of course, speaking of security as security, none whatever. We have demand notes signed by the diplomatic representatives of the foreign Governments.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We have no foreign bonds?

Mr. SLOAN. No. I do not mean by that statement of security that they will not be paid or are not valid; but in the nature of a collateral we have nothing.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We have loaned $8,500,000,000. What have we in the Treasury of the United States to show for that?

Mr. SLOAN. We have those demand certificates to which I have referred, and nothing more. The legislative action or authority that is behind them has not been revealed by any public authority, if any such exists.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is interest being paid on these loans?

Mr. SLOAN. I understand that interest, at the rate of 5 per cent, is being collected from time to time, and I presume it is being collected out of the additional amounts that are from time to time being loaned.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has been suggested, at least in some newspaper dispatches, that it might be a wise and a generous thing for the United States to relieve foreign countries of their obligations incurred during the war. What does the gentleman say as to that?

Mr. SLOAN. There was such a statement as that. The fact is, that in another portion of this Capitol, before a deliberative body, by a member of that body, there was offered a resolution to the effect that we should forgive that debt. Throughout the country leading gentlemen have suggested that that be done, that we forgive that debt. From across the water, through the Associated Press, has come the statement that the premiers of two countries had spoken to our chief commissioner over there, suggesting that we pay our share of the war, beginning with 1914, which would be another way of saying they would like to have a large portion of that debt forgiven. There were in the hearings some statements that such a proposition had not been made.

I do not vouch for its truth or lack of truth, because all we know is what we read in the press.

When our chief commissioner went abroad he announced to the public that he would keep in close touch with the American people; but most of us, except through the newspapers, have remained untouched up to the present time. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The President has returned to the United States.

Mr. SLOAN. Yes; as I understand, for a week-end visit to his old habitat. [Laughter.] I understand he will stay over the Sabbath with us, and then if the George Washington is in good trim he will hie him hence to Europe again. I do not know whether the object will be to get another league of nations, a fresh one, or not. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has the gentleman any inside information as to how soon an extra session will be called to enable the new Congress, in the House, at least, to take up the burdens that have been imposed upon it by the present administration?

Mr. SLOAN. I recognize the special propriety of the gentleman asking me that question. Because to whom else would the President now, chief commissioner formerly, give his confidence if he would not give it to the one occupying the floor now? But I say in full confidence that I should not want it to go further than this Chamber, and I know that the galleries will not violate the confidence that I now repose, that the Chief Executive has not yet vouchsafed to me when an extra session is to be called. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am quite sure the gentleman's constituents in Nebraska will be glad to know what the gentleman knows about this important matter.

Mr. SLOAN. Let me assure the gentleman from Pennsylvania that just as soon as I am able to answer the question my own constituents will be regaled with that news; and I shall communicate it to him also, so that his constituents in my father's home in the City of Brotherly Love will be likewise regaled.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is not going to the "peace conference" on Thursday night, I understand.

Mr. SLOAN. The gentleman has again correctly surmised.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman for the illuminating information he has furnished.

Mr. BLACKMON. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield, in order that I may ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question for information?

Mr. SLOAN. I do not know what the result will be if there comes a verbal altercation between the gentleman from Alabama and the gentleman from Philadelphia. I fear that I would be playing not a second fiddle but a poor third.

Mr. BLACKMON. Just one question.

Mr. SLOAN. I will yield for just one question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Am I involved in this?

Mr. SLOAN. This is a triangle. Beware!

Mr. BLACKMON. I wish to ask my friend from Pennsylvania how he voted on all these questions that he is now complaining so bitterly about?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I answer in the time of the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. SLOAN. The gentleman may answer in my time and also in any language that he sees fit—Greek preferred. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I shall answer the gentleman in parliamentary language. The gentleman wants to know how I voted on all these war questions. I voted for the war, because the President said we had been insulted by a foreign power and he desired to resent that insult. I supported every request made by the President for sums of money to prosecute the war. I do not believe I voted for anything particularly authorizing the President to go abroad to establish a league of nations. I do not believe I did. I presume I have reserved the right to discuss that question when I am asked to vote to establish a league of nations that may violate the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. BLACKMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Now, good faith demands that the gentleman desist at this time. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACKMON. Just one other question.

Mr. SLOAN. I fear we should be organizing a league of nations here on the floor of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman desire any further answer from me?

Mr. BLACKMON. The gentleman has walked up to the rack and voted for everything the President of the United States told him to vote for. He has not weakened, because he was afraid to, but now he complains about the things he voted for.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I voted for an appropriation of $640,000,000 to establish aviation in the United States and abroad, in order that we might send our boys in American fighting aeroplanes to combat the foe, but as I recall it, due to the interest of the administration in the matter, we did not get a single American fighting plane on the other side. I presume I may be permitted to question that transaction?

Some of our friends on the other side will no doubt desire to ask the gentleman from Nebraska whether he voted for some of these things which have resulted in wasteful expenditure and extravagances of one kind or another. When these questions are propounded I am sure the gentleman from Nebraska will acquit himself with credit.

Mr. SLOAN. I can answer in advance. That question is presumed to be put to me, and I answer that I always voted right. [Applause.]

So we are in the position of having no bond and trust fund for the boys who fought when they were young, and which was to have been arranged to meet obligations when they shall have reached the years of their greatest productivity. That is not provided for, and we can not go to the American people and say we kept our faith with the boys who went abroad and made these loans as we agreed to. More than that, the reason given by the Secretary of the Treasury why they did not ask for this bond to fix them as they agreed is that they do not know how much in the way of indemnities they may collect. If they do that, that is not good faith with the boys who went over and fought the war, because it would be paying that money for indebtedness now due instead of meeting the indebtedness that will come against them when they will be bearing the burden of the day, 15, 20, or 30 years hereafter, and the stay-at-homes will have debts paid now out of this foreign loan fund instead of paying it out of present-day taxes collected.

But the particular point I desire to urge is that sections 9 and 10 should be stricken out. This is a provision for really establishing a new finance corporation. It proposes to use the machinery of the old finance corporation by extending its period of activity six months; that is, under the old charter it is to terminate six months after peace shall be declared. But now it is to be extended for one year after peace is declared. While the purpose of this corporation originally was what seemed to be a pressing war demand, where they thought the banks of the country and the system we had adopted would not be equal to the task of carrying on the large war financial activities. They would turn it now into a new occupation; that is, of financing the export trade in time of peace.

We are supposed to be getting out of the war. I think it was on the Wednesday after the 5th of November, 1916, that we began to prepare for war. It was on the next Monday after the first Tuesday in November, 1918, that the war ceased, or the fighting ceased. We are now running just about as long after the fighting ceased as we took to prepare for war, and yet there has been a debate going on over there for three and a half months, and all we have brought back here is the title deed for all the dominions of the earth, which might be very good if it was not subject to an encumbrance of conflicting titles of every empire, kingdom, principality, and tribe on earth. [Laughter.]

I am not going to discuss the league of nations, except that I refer to it because it is being the means of preventing an effective peace and determining the settlement of this great war and keeping our boys over there at an expense of thirty or forty million dollars a day. [Applause.]

I insist further that this House of Representatives amend this bill, cut out the excresences that have grown up during the war, as we ought to cut out every excresence that we have built on the business of the country, to set an example to the American commissioners over there that we want matters speeded up. [Applause.]

If we begin here to show to our commissioners that we are through with the war and that we are not going to longer tolerate all these war activities or extend them, it may be the hint will be taken by the commissioners and they will do what they went over there to do and settle the war and not try to exchange a sound, working, going Monroe doctrine—that is, the majority and controlling interest in it—for a minority interest in a federation or league of nations which has not enough valuable assets to pay charter fees or expenses of organization. [Laughter and applause.]

It involves more than that; involves in carrying it out a liability of every dollar of our national property and the lives of all our sons. I think we should set an example by terminating these war activities or at least not extending them.

I do not understand why our friends on the right are always so concerned about the foreigner; the foreign trade is 7 per cent of all our trade. They think little of the people at home. The reason for it is the reason you see coming up in every one of our activities, when a number of our official Othellos come down here—and I think the Moor was a military man himself—who fear that their occupations are about to be gone. They would perpetuate their jobs and continue to draw their salaries.

This bill provides for four directors, and each director is paid $12,0000 a year, a salary under the circumstances without any expense, and therefore four times the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives or Vice President, taking into account their expenses.

These four men are to be continued at $12,000 a year. They are turned into a new line of activity and that new activity is purely a banking activity. We have what our friends on the other side have urged as the ideal banking system of the world, capable of carrying on all great transactions of commerce and finance. Why not use our banking system to the limit? Let it develop with our expanding post bellum commerce, foreign and domestic.

I was of the opinion that our banking system was equal to the occasion. I consulted on the floor of the House the gentleman I regarded as the best authority on that subject, whom gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House say is their best authority, the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency. I want to say that when this bill was originally passed providing for the finance corporation it was understood that if that had stood alone the Banking and Currency Committee would have had jurisdiction of it, and now when this amendment stands alone it should have gone to that committee rather than to the Committee on Ways and Means. It could then be disposed of as that committee in its wisdom would deem best. On page 3628 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, of date February 17, 1919, I submitted the following interrogatory to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN], the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Is it the gentleman's opinion that the reserve system will be sufficiently strong to serve the purpose of our present foreign commerce and our prospective foreign commerce during the next two or three years, or will it need assistance from some other Federal agency?

Mr. PHELAN replied to that in the following language:

I think it is fully strong enough to take care of every demand made upon it, either domestic or foreign.

That is the best authority there is in the House of Representatives, and I think it would be a mighty good thing if gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House would accept evidence from their own expert.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will notify the gentleman that he has occupied the time mentioned.

Mr. SLOAN. Then I shall yield myself 10 minutes more, for I am about as liberal with myself on time as the gentlemen of the majority are liberal with the people's money.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair only notified the gentleman because he was requested to do so.

Mr. SLOAN. That is correct. The Chairman did me a courtesy, and I thank him for it. When the time comes under the five-minute rule some gentleman from our side of the committee will move to strike out sections 9 and 10 of this bill, which relate to the Finance Corporation. I think it would be wise to do this for a number of reasons. I want this bond bill to go through and provision made for money to run the Government. If this Finance Corporation provision remains in the bill, I do not believe that it will ever pass through the other body of Congress. We need the money, and we ought to have the opportunity of getting it from the people.

We ought to have the best possible bill to present to the people so that they will respond to the demands of the Government, so that we may close up this war with all possible speed. I regret that the bill which we have to present is not better than it is, but I want to say, in compliment to the chairman of the committee and to the membership, Republican and Democratic, that it is a much more House of Representatives bill than it was when we began to examine it.

I do not like the system of legislating by administration or the drafting of bills by the heads of departments. I find those gentlemen are very jealous of their composition and their particular brand of English. I never found one of them denying authority from the Congress to his department; but there is a constant reaching out for unlimited authority, and I think I violate no confidence when I say that the bill presented for our consideration at first asked for everything from horizon to horizon, from the earth to the empyrean. Everything that we had in the American Government as a part of our jurisdiction relating to bonds was asked for by the Treasurer, but he did not get it. Some time ago I saw a play which had a very significant title, but which when you saw the whole play was entirely harmless. It was entitled "Lend Me Your Wife." The Secretary of the Treasury made a request almost as audacious, broad, and suggestive of the surrender of our prerogatives as is involved in that title of romance.

Mr. Chairman, this is a good place to begin. The issue will be clear-cut. This is not a matter of continuing war activities, because the law that we have had now provides for activities on the part of this corporation until six months after the war is declared over. It is a distinctive departure from a war basis to a peace basis. The same ingenuity on the part of the men who hold these positions in shifting it from a war basis to a peace basis, although temporarily, will, undoubtedly, at the end of that year be found asking to perpetuate it. This is a good time to saw it off. [Applause.]

Mr. CURRY of California. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman yields the floor, would he submit to a question?

Mr. SLOAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CURRY of California. I would like to know what reason there is for section 8 in the bill, being the section in reference to the maturity of foreign obligations?

Mr. SLOAN. I discussed that earlier and rather fully. I explained its purpose, which is to provide for some maturities and also, apparently, complying with what we understood the law to be heretofore.

Mr. CURRY of California. Are the bonds in the Treasury?

Mr. SLOAN. Not a dollar of them.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition for 15 minutes, and would ask the Chair to inform me when I have used that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for an hour.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is only after most thoughtful and mature consideration that I have come to the conclusion that I am justified in supporting this bill and in recommending it to your favorable consideration. Not that I am enthusiastic about it, for it concedes a principle to which I am, under ordinary circumstances, strongly opposed. It surrenders to an executive branch of this Government the function properly belonging to the legislation branch. It gives to the Secretary of the Treasury power to fix interest rates on obligations of the Government unregulated by a maximum rate fixed by Congress. In this instance, however, the power is so hedged about by restrictions and limitations that it would be, in my judgment, extremely difficult, if not impossible, to greatly misuse it. Moreover, I have such high regard for our late colleague, now Secretary of the Treasury, a regard matured by many years of close association and companionship with him in this House, and my confidence in his judgment and discretion is so great that I am willing in this exigency to intrust to him a power which, limited though it is, I would resolutely begrudge to most men.

That an exigency exists in the Government's finances of a most serious character there can be no possible doubt. By the time the loan herein provided for is offered for subscription the floating indebtedness of the Government will in all probability amount to the appalling sum of $0,000,000,000. How much of this is due to waste, extravagance, and worse I shall not pause to estimate. Its determination will be one of the first and most important duties of the next Congress. For the present it is enough to say that these obligations have been contracted for and must be paid. We are asked to authorize an increase in our outstanding obligations of $7,000,000,000, with large inducements for the marketing of the loan.

It is true that of this sum more than $5,000,000,000 is issuable under existing law, and we are advised—and I think no one will contest—that 4¼ per cent bonds subject to Federal taxation are not marketable under existing conditions. The unfortunate part of it all is that we should be asked now to define the authority for the issue of obligations which will not be undertaken for nearly two months, when conditions may be utterly different from what they are now. Only the fact that the term of the present Congress is shortly to expire would for a moment justify such legislation. I think, then, acting upon the rather violent assumption that the Senate will pass this bill and that Congress will not be called into extra session before the 21st of April, we are justified in voting for this legislation. This much, however, I want to say, that if we are in session in April—a circumstance I consider extremely likely—I for one shall not vote for the authorization of any loan upon which Congress shall not have fixed the maximum rate of interest which the securities shall bear, whether they be subject to taxation or not.

When I say that I am willing to vote for this measure I mean the measure as it has been redrafted by the Ways and Means Committee and submitted to this House, not the measure which was sent to us by the Treasury Department.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] referred to the difference between this bill and the bill originally submitted. I do not think he went nearly far enough in his description of that bill. That bill consisted of several printed pages, but it might well have been compressed in one sentence authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue 10 billions of bonds under such terms and conditions as he might see fit. Unlimited authority was asked to fix interest rates, to exempt from taxation in any degree not only the bonds to be issued under its authority but also all other bonds outstanding, to provide for a premium at maturity, to give to the President the power to loan a billion and a half dollars to any European Government for such purposes and under such terms as he might see fit.

To my mind this measure was unwise, impolitic, unconstitutional, and subversive of most of the basic principles of our Government, yet it was no worse than a raft of similar bills that have originated in executive departments during the life of this Congress and been sent here accompanied by the mandate of the administration that they be passed as written. Some committees of this House have bowed abjectly to the imperial mandate. Others have rebelled and taken the legislative responsibility upon themselves, where it belongs. Let me say for the Ways and Means Committee, so ably presided over by my distinguished friend from North Carolina, that from the beginning we have construed our functions to be those of legislators and not executive subordinates. We have held our responsibility to be to the people of America and not to the Chief Executive or to any department head. The bills we have presented to you have been written in the committee room of the Capitol, not in any downtown office. We have from the beginning and, without partisan division, combated the evident desire of this administration to make of the committees of this House mere automata for the registration of the Executive will, animated always by the desire and determination to uphold the power and dignity of the House of Representatives of the United States.

I am confident that I do not exaggerate when I say that one of the distinguishing features of this administration has been its continuous effort to exalt the power of the executive branch of the Government at the expense of the legislative. There has been a persistent reaching out by it for the absorption of legislative functions. No power has seemed too great to aspire to, none too small to be worth coveting. Stimulated by the example of their chiefs, petty department heads are spending great sums of money without legislative authority and brazenly asking for more. Greed for the power that it strives to attain, contempt for that which has been denied it, has been characteristic of the attitude of this administration toward the Congress.

Had this insatiate demand on the part of the executive branch of this Government for power, more power, and then more power been limited to the period of the war it would have been bad enough, but it has gone on since the day the armistice was signed and is going on now. I for one believe that no higher duty is committed to the coming Congress than that of restoring to the House of Representatives the power and dignity and prestige which the fathers of the Republic committed to it and intended that it should have. We are of all branches of the Government closest and most directly responsible to the people. To just the extent that you take away from the power, influence, and dignity of the House of Representatives, to that extent you are striking a blow at representative popular government. [Applause.]

Let us candidly admit to-day that the Congress of the United States has lost something of the power and prestige that it ought to have and that the fathers of the Constitution contemplated that it should have. This is mainly due to the insistent demand of the executive branch for power at our expense, but it is partly our fault for not fighting harder for our prerogatives.

I have described some of the legislation we have been asked to pass, legislation which, if it had passed, would have reduced Congress to a pitiable condition indeed. Some of us have from the beginning refused to bow to the Executive mandate, and when we have fought these bills and either amended them or prevented their passage we have been accused of blocking the wheels of progress and throwing obstacles in the way of the administration. Such criticism has not worried me and does not worry me now. I believe that the man who fights to-day against executive encroachment upon legislative functions, who fights to uphold the power and dignity of the House of Representatives, is fighting the battle of representative popular government against bolshevism. [Applause.]

No real catastrophe can overwhelm the Nation at home so long as the people have confidence in the only body which directly represents them and know that through it they are having a real and compelling voice in determining the affairs of the Nation. Grave danger will menace the Nation if the people come to believe that their voice is being stifled by Executive usurpation on the one hand or by incitement to mob rule on the other.

The war is won. The armistice has been signed, a treaty of peace will shortly be concluded, there can be no excuse for delegating further powers to the Executive. Let us aim in the next Congress to preserve the just balance that the framers of the Constitution intended should prevail between the three great branches of our Government. Let us fight for the restoration of our powers and prerogatives, for in so doing we are fighting for the people who sent us here.

The fires of anarchy are kindled throughout the world. Let us see to it that no sparks fall here. If that's what internationalism means as preached by men in high places, let us confront it and stay its course with plain Americanism. [Applause.] Let us oppose autocracy on the one hand and mob rule on the other with representative popular government, and where does representative popular government find its more complete and ideal exemplification than here in the House of Representatives of the United States? [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure but the main inquiry I had in my mind was answered sufficiently by the gentleman who just so eloquently addressed the House [Mr. LONGWORTH]. In reference to the rate of interest there is one thing. We are told that this loan is to be floated in April. That is not very far away. I suppose there will be a popular campaign upon the subject for the purpose of selling these notes or bonds or whatever they may be called. Is it contended by the Treasury Department that it is not now possible to fix the rate of interest which they expect to put on these bonds in a month or two months from now? I would like to ask my distinguished friend from North Carolina if that is the contention?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is the contention of the Treasury Department, as I explained this afternoon.

Mr. MANN. Well, I heard the gentleman's speech. Well, the Treasury Department necessarily comes to its determination after consultation with people who are interested in financial matters throughout the country, people who will be supposed to have something to do with the popular drive—I believe that is what they call it—to sell the bonds.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will pardon me, perhaps I could give a little more extended answer than the gentleman has given. The Treasury Department stated positively that it had no means of knowing how high a rate of interest would be necessary in the latter part of April to float this loan and that they feared if Congress now placed a maximum that the public would regard that as the minimum, and that the bonds could not be floated at less than the maximum fixed by Congress. That was the general explanation given.

Mr. MANN. Well, that may be a correct one. I will not say that the Treasury Department may not be correct. If they do not know more in the Treasury Department about floating bonds than I do they are lamentably ignorant, and I think they are that even if they know more than I do. I question very much whether they can name, whether they dare name, any rate of interest on these bonds which will make the people grab them up as an investment. They do not dare fix the interest rate so greatly higher than it is on the bonds which are outstanding because if they do that instantly very greatly depreciates the market value of the bonds which are outstanding and the Government can not afford to have its bonds outstanding selling for 70 or 80 cents on the dollar. It is bad enough when they are down close to 90 cents on the dollar, and the sooner they let the country know what the rate of interest is to be and commence to prepare the popular mind to buy bonds at a rate of interest so fixed the quicker and easier they will sell the bonds. Then there is another provision in here which I do not know whether it was put in by the Treasury Department or the committee. I heard it discussed in the House as a popular matter. There are four, I believe, different classes of bonds which may be offered.

And I think the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] stated that probably two or three different classes, at least, of bonds will be offered. Well, I think a number of gentlemen here made speeches during the drives for the sale of the former bonds at popular meetings—I did not make any speeches, but I listened to some—and I was thinking how a speaker now urging the people to buy bonds would urge them to buy bonds of class A, or class 2, or class 3, when by the time he got through the people who wanted to buy bonds would be all mixed up in their minds and put it off until some other day, and by the time they learned what it meant the time for the sale of bonds would probably be past.

If you want to sell Government bonds as an investment, that is one thing. You can not do it now, in my judgment. If you want to sell bonds as a popular measure and appeal to the patriotism of the people and bring the compressors down upon the banks and the big financial interests, as will be done, the sooner the terms are fixed, and fixed absolutely, the easier it will be to carry through the drive.

However, Mr. Chairman, I did not arise for the purpose of discussing the bill. I have no doubt the distinguished members of the Committee on Ways and Means thoroughly understand and appreciate all the items in the bill and all the reasons for or against it. I rose mainly for the purpose of saying a word about the Committee on Ways and Means. They have levied more taxes, put more burdens upon a people, than any other similar number of men in government ever did before in the history of the world. I hope, however, they will not take that amiss. It is a compliment. The burdens in the main so far have been fairly well accepted, and I think that the Committee on Ways and Means is entitled to credit for the work that it has done both in authorizing the issuance of bonds and levying heavy taxes upon the people, though I sometimes wish they had been able to stand in the way of some of the extravagant expenditures which we have authorized and which have been made.

The distinguished and handsome gentleman who sits over at my right at the table reserved for Members in charge of bills, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], is entitled to the thanks of the House, and I am sure that all extend to him our appreciation of his leadership in the House. [Applause.] I remember the first time that I had any occasion to work in connection with the Hon. CLAUDE KITCHIN. A war claims bill had passed the House, with a great many different items in it, had gone to the Senate, where a very large number of additional items were offered and agreed to, and among them were a number of claims called "French spoliation claims."

Now, I had no particular objection to the French spoliation claims, but that bill came back from the Senate so padded with war claims which were unjustified that I was doing what I could to prevent its passage, and with reasonable success. The House was not making very much progress on the bill. I happened to talk with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], who had been a member of the Committee on Claims of the House and had given great study to the subject of the French spoliation claims and was very much opposed to their payment. I asked him if he would make a speech on the subject of those claims before the House that night. We were in session most of the night—I am not sure but all night, and until along toward the wee hours of the morning. He said he would if I would fix it so it would be in order. In the course of the night I managed to secure a quorum. The filibuster at the time had been carried on quite successfully. We secured a nominal quorum, and the gentleman from North Carolina took the floor, talking in the center aisle, and made one of the most brilliant and effective speeches which ever has been delivered in this House against the French spoliation claims; so effective that at the end of his speech I asked unanimous consent to kill the bill that was then before the House and pass a bill leaving out the French spoliation claims and leaving out the other claims inserted by the Senate. And, as I recollect, it was done by unanimous consent. I never have heard in the House at any other time a speech that had such immediate influence and effect upon the body of the House as the one that night delivered by the gentleman from North Carolina. [Applause.] I said to myself then and many times afterwards, "Here is a man of wonderful power, who, I hope, will remain here for some years; and if he does he will be one of the leaders, if not the leader, of the House of Representatives." [Applause.] And I am proud to say that he attained that distinction, with great pleasure to us all.

I would like to say a few words about the other majority members of the Ways and Means Committee. They deserve it. But I wish to pay a little compliment to the Republican, or minority, members of the Ways and Means Committee.

The House is a partisan body. The center aisle divides the Democrats and the Republicans in legislative procedure, so far as their seats are concerned. When we went into this war it was the duty, accepted at once by the Republican Members of the House, the Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means, that in our fight with a foreign power there was to be no party politics concerned, and these gentlemen on the Republican side of the House with patriotic devotion to the interests of their country laid aside any desire for partisan advantage and agreed with the majority upon the measures which came before the House by unanimous advice and for unanimous action, and they are entitled to the thanks of the country and to the credit of history that they took that position. [Applause.]

We are to lose two of them from this House—that rare genius of geniality, wit, philosophy, and statesmanship, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN], who just addressed the House [applause], and that wonderful business man whose acumen and knowledge of business affairs has been of great service to his committee and of great service to the House and his country, the Hon. GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD, of New York. [Applause.] These two will go away with the respect and affection of every Member of the House and with the best wishes and hopes of every Member of the House for their continued happiness and prosperity. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I shall speak briefly on this measure, because between the very excellent explanations that have been given by our honored chairman and the ranking member on the Republican side and other members of the committee there remains very little that one of the most recent additions to the committee can offer in the way of further explanation.

I was particularly gratified at the words of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who is always so felicitous in expression in the compliment deservedly paid to our chairman, Mr. KITCHIN, of North Carolina. It has only been my privilege to be a member of the Committee on Ways and Means for something like a year past, but during that time to have sat on that committee with him, in assisting in just a very minor way the work of that committee, has given me an insight into the character and the ability of that man very little appreciated, I am free to say, in the section of the country from which I come. It has been my privilege on several occasions to give my friends at home my personal and intimate impressions of him.

All during the long period last summer, at the time when, as the gentleman from Illinois has said, there was no partisanship whatsoever on our committee, and the vote of the minority members and the opinion of the minority members were exactly as much sought for by him as those of his own party colleagues, and during the time that legislation has more recently been before the committee the manner in which he has treated us as minority members can not help but be a most delightful reminiscence to us now that his chairmanship is so soon to expire.

The country has been fortunate in this period of great magnitude in our work in the fact that the chairman of this most important committee has been a man of such broad judgment, such fairness, such conscientious attention to details, and, above all, of such an absolute nonpartisan attitude at all times. I, for one, extend to him my most sincere thanks for his treatment of me personally. [Applause.]

Certainly no man can leave the important work that he has had without a certain realization of the task well performed; and we do extend our cordial personal congratulations, in no sense partisan; and I think that, as one of the minority, it is no more than due that all of us should express this same view that I am attempting to imperfectly express toward our distinguished chairman. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], as he always does, touched a very vital point in the consideration of this measure, and that is the request of the Treasury Department that it should be given a free hand in the matter of the establishment of the interest rate. I suppose no such request as that has ever before come before the Congress, and the treatment that it received at the hands of the Committee on Ways and Means this time certainly will not encourage future administrations to ask for a like power. I really think that at one time in the course of the consideration of the bill, as suggested by the department, it had every appearance of failing to secure any authorization such as is contained in the present bill.

All through the preparation of the great revenue act last year there never was a time, as it seemed to me, when the legislative and executive branches were as far apart in all the great questions involved as they have been at certain periods during the preparation of the bill now before us; and although the request of the department, coming as it did from a recent colleague of ours, was presented in a most able manner from their viewpoint, it, nevertheless, met with as cold a reception from the Democratic members of the committee as it did from the Republican members, and as the department was so insistent upon having that right, you can readily see how near we were to lacking any possible legislation.

Now, in view of the questions that have been brought up in reference to this lack of agreement, and in reference to the desire of the department not to have the interest rate absolutely fixed by Congress, I think the committee will be interested in two brief extracts from the hearings, which I will read verbatim. I read now from the top of page 61 of the hearings:

The CHAIRMAN. Now, Mr. Leffingwell, as to the rate of interest. Could we easily sell the bonds if we made them 3½ per cent exempt from taxes just as first liberty bonds were sold?

Mr. LEFFINGWELL. I am sorry to say you could not; you could not sell any of them.

The CHAIRMAN. Why not?

Mr. LEFFINGWELL. The three-and-one-halfs are selling below par to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. They are practically at par, aren't they?

Mr. MEYER. They are to-day about 99.

Mr. LEFFINGWELL. As a matter of fact, they are only at that price because there aren't any more of them; that has been a closed issue for a year and a half and there will not be any more of them.

Mr. MOORE. Then they are not offered very generally?

Mr. LEFFINGWELL. No, sir. The difficulty with the situation, Mr. Chairman, is that there are outstanding to-day $8,000,000,000 or $10,000,000,000 of securities which already carry exemption from all taxation, including bonds of the first liberty loan, and the people who have these heavy income taxes to pay have to pay cash, and they have not got the cash to invest in things that carry exemption from taxation. They could only buy them by selling their securities which the present position of our investment market does not make a very attractive proposition.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Before the gentleman reads the next extract will he state whether it was the fact that both the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Glass, and the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Leffingwell, who has been particularly familiar with this loan business, evinced a very great reluctance in the matter of answering questions as to the rate of interest?

Mr. TREADWAY. I think that is absolutely correct. There was considerable discussion as to the fact that it was not such a very long period of time between now and the 21st of April. The question was asked, "Why can you not tell us?" The answer was, "Well, we do not know ourselves." Both Mr. Glass and Mr. Leffingwell continually gave that impression to the committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And did they not give to the committee the impression that it would be dangerous from a financial viewpoint?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They doubted their ability to sell the bonds at all if the rate of interest was stated too far in advance of the date fixed for selling the notes.

Mr. TREADWAY. The statement of Mr. Leffingwell that I just read bears out the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania; and the whole trend of the hearing—I can not lay my hand on any direct statement of the Secretary, Mr. Glass, but I think it is very easily found—carried out exactly the statement that the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers to.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], in offering an explanation to the gentleman from Illinois, stated it also exactly as my recollection is of the statement at the hearings, namely, that if we set any rate of interest whatsoever in this bill, no matter how high, the people asked to purchase the securities would consider that the minimum rate, and therefore the credit of the country would be very much injured by establishing the rate at the present time. Personally I can not say that the explanation either of Mr. Glass or of Mr. Leffingwell appealed very strongly to my judgment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman recalls that the Treasury officials stated that they had held together the machinery which they employed in disposing of the first, second, third, and fourth liberty loans, and that they desired to keep that machinery intact. He recalls that statement, does he not?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Was it not also stated by the Treasury officials, who hesitated to have Congress fix the rate of interest, that the war having closed and the patriotic ardor and enthusiasm of the people having to a certain extent abated, it would be very difficult to sell the fifth loan on the same terms that the fourth and prior loans were sold?

Mr. TREADWAY. I was intending to refer to that very feature just after reading the next extract from Mr. Leffingwell's testimony. These inquiries are very brief, and I think are of much interest to the committee. Mr. Leffingwell was still answering. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] propounded this question:

> Mr. MOORE. You have said to Mr. KITCHIN that this issue could not be made at the rate of 3½ per cent tax free.
>
> Mr. LEFFINGWELL. That was an easy question to answer.
>
> Mr. MOORE. But I think you would say it could be sold at 6 per cent.
>
> Mr. LEFFINGWELL. Yes; and if you fix it at that I would feel obliged to offer it at once, because I would not feel that we could sell them at 6 per cent after you had done so injurious a thing to the credit of the country; I would feel obliged to make the announcement at once, because I would feel I could not get it any cheaper.
>
> Mr. MOORE. There is a great deal of hesitation in passing this bill in this form.
>
> Mr. LEFFINGWELL. And there is a great deal of hesitation in the mind of the Secretary in proposing it. He said what was in his heart when he said that he reluctantly asked for a responsibility that he would rather have shared with Congress.
>
> Mr. TREADWAY. I think we have a like reluctance that we ought not to grant it.

That was the exact situation between the department and the committee. Mr. Glass, of course, was sincere when he told us that he was reluctant in asking for the authority; and knowing him as we did here as our former colleague, we were equally reluctant not to grant it. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has referred to the use of the organization used in floating the previous liberty loans. It was early understood that it was the desire of the department to make use of that former organization.

The department has been for some time renewing the interest of those who carried on these successful campaigns in the past. In fact, the day the Secretary appeared before the committee he asked to be excused early that he might make a train for New York, where he was to address a gathering of former liberty-loan representatives. It was the desire of the department to still use all the efficient agencies which were used successfully in former times.

But, Mr. Chairman, we must remember this one fact, and it must be impressed on the people when this loan starts. While the war is over to all practical purposes, it is not over so far as paying the bills contracted to win the war. Therefore the department and the agencies which it is employing must have our support in its desire to create a patriotic enthusiasm again in behalf of the sale of these notes offered to the public. We still owe it to display the patriotism shown previously by the people of this country, and unless a large part of that same patriotism is aroused and enthusiasm enters into this campaign we are going to have great difficulty in selling this last security of the Government. Not that people are not willing to take the security, realizing its value, but conditions of loans on the ground of patriotism have changed, and unfortunately for the Government and for the country, business conditions have very materially changed. So we must urge the exercise of the same patriotic spirit as was shown in these past campaigns, perhaps urge it harder than before, from the very fact that a certain amount of enthusiasm in the past naturally falls off in the minds of the people since the emergency appears no longer to exist. It does exist practically in the same degree.

We have been urged to make these enormous expenditures to bring quick results in terminating the War. We must now show a like degree of patriotism in meeting the financial obligations thus incurred.

So we must enter into the campaign with the same interest and enthusiasm as was done previously and carry its message home that the people owe it as a duty to the country to subscribe as liberally as possible for this new loan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is there any other inducement for the public to purchase these notes or bonds than those the gentleman has offered in his excellent remarks; that is, the people have to a certain extent invested their ready money in liberty bonds already, and now we go out to sell them as a practical proceeding what will he say when we ask a man to pay a hundred dollars for a bond that he can get on the market for $94?

Mr. TREADWAY. We are in hopes that the new issue will not be sold the next day at $94. If the gentleman has examined the bill carefully, as I have no doubt he has, he will find additional exemptions are offered for the purpose of stabilizing prices. The exemptions are very much broader in this bill than for past issues. If the gentleman listened to the gentleman from North Carolina, he knows to what I refer.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The same question occurred to my mind at that time. The small investor in the rural community bought bonds with an absolute exemption up to $5,000, and that is as large as the ordinary every-day business man would want to invest.

Mr. TREADWAY. There is a great deal in what the gentleman says.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Did not that whole question enter into the calculation of the Treasury officials in asking for this discretionary power to fix the rate of interest?

Mr. TREADWAY. That was very much in evidence.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Another thing, it was said that the short-term notes we are going to issue are exchangeable for bonds.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The reason for that, if the gentleman from Massachusetts will pardon me, was that it would be very difficult to sell long-time bonds now that the patriotic fervor has subsided, and it would be simpler to sell short-time notes which would be taken up by financial institutions and the banks.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think that is the sequel to the situation; that the banks will be called upon to absorb these bonds.

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, but we hope that they will be acting as the agents to reach the people. There is just as much reason why these short-term notes should be in the hands of the small owner as that the liberty bonds should.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is an advantage to the notes.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit, answering the gentleman from Michigan, $14,000,000 is appropriated in this bill to dispose of this $7,000,000,000 loan. That will be the amount of money the Secretary of the Treasury will have at hand to utilize existing machinery for the disposal of these notes. These notes are to be tendered to the public if the Secretary so disposes. They will be taken largely by the banks, and by the banks they will be sold to the public.

Mr. TREADWAY. In other words, the banks are the agents to reach the public?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The gentleman said we should use the same machinery and means as were used to sell the other bonds, and he knows that in a great many instances with the sale of bonds, that a sale was consummated by very, very drastic means.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. All that machinery still remains and the money is appropriated by the bill to utilize the machinery to dispose of these notes in precisely the same manner as the bonds were disposed of. There is this difference, that these are short-term notes and the rate of interest may be higher, but no one can tell, as that rests in the bosom of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the gentleman will permit, it seems to me that the credit of the United States is such that it could afford in some way to keep these bonds at par.

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman will recall, there has been placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury a large fund—I have not the figures in mind at the moment—for the very purpose to which he refers; but, of course, the Government is selling its securities to the public, and it can not be its own only customer. It must disseminate these bonds as broadcast as it is possible to do so, and if the gentleman's suggestion were carried out to its logical conclusion the moment any bond went below par on the market immediately the Government would be its own customer.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And they have already purchased $300,000,000 of bonds in order to stabilize the market?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And that is reason to believe that they will continue for the purpose of stabilizing them to purchase the bonds.

Mr. TREADWAY. During the course of the hearings I spoke of that matter with Mr. Meyer, who represented the War Finance Corporation, and also called his attention to the fact that there were such enormous amounts of bonds offered during the latter part of December so that it affected the matter of loss that men might be allowed in respect to their income-tax returns. The best answer we could secure was that unless the Government had gone into the market when it did and bought up these large blocks the price would be still lower than it is now. In other words, that the object of stabilizing the market has been accomplished to a certain extent.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it not true that during the Civil War Government bonds went down to 67 on their own merits?

Mr. TREADWAY. We certainly do not anticipate any such condition at the present time.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I hope not, certainly.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does the gentleman not think the fact that these notes are short-term notes will have a tendency to keep them at par, because the man who invests in them knows that he can get his money in five years?

Mr. TREADWAY. That is one of the reasons why the committee adopted the short-term note rather than the long-term bond, so that the small investor would realize that at the expiration of the five-year period he certainly was going to get dollar for dollar for every one that he had loaned the Government.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think that is a very commendable feature of this loan.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I have occupied the floor very much longer than I intended, and if I may touch very briefly on one of the other features of the bill, I shall close. I wish to refer to section 9.

Section 9 is a new legislative feature. There was one request made by the department in reference to loaning to foreign governments which the committee did not favor. The department asked for a billion and a half of dollars that could be loaned by our Government to foreign governments for commercial needs. That suggestion the committee did not deem wise to incorporate in the bill; but we did incorporate, as you will see on reading section 9, an authority to the War Finance Corporation to loan to banks, banking institutions, or to private firms, persons, or corporations, to the extent of $1,000,000,000 to stimulate export trade. There is a certain amount of paternalism in any legislation of that kind, and it is very difficult to bring ourselves to a realization of the need of such legislation.

The Government is going into the loaning business to a certain extent, because it not only is authorizing the War Finance Corporation—and when I speak of the Government in this connection of course I refer to the War Finance Corporation, a corporation of which the Government owns every dollar of stock—as I said, we are going into the loaning business to a certain extent, but the times, as I see it, justify it. Several members of our committee at heart are opposed to this section. I did not hear all the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] this afternoon, but I have no doubt he offered his reasons for opposing this particular section. As I see it we are embarking on a new form of business, but the exigencies of business demand it. That is, we are in a period of reconstruction—reconstruction of men, reconstruction of business, reconstruction of all forms of activity in the hope that in the near future we may return to normal conditions existing before the war. Now, it strikes me that this is one of the forms of restitution of business. Previous to the war we were enjoying a very large export trade. During the war we had a large export in the needs of the other Governments for carrying on successfully the war. But that, thank God, has all changed. There is no longer that form of business being done in this country, but here we are in a transition period. Money is not plentiful in banking institutions. Naturally the banking institutions are being quite cautious in their loans to the public. They do not know, as the expression is, where they are at. I think it is right and proper that the Government should go to the rescue of the business of the country to an extent contained in this provision whereby a billion of dollars is made available for loans simply that our people may restore as far as practicable and possible our former export trade, and as I see it this is exactly what section 9 of the bill does.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. Are we to understand that the policy of the committee is not for the Government to loan to foreign nations?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESS. In time of peace?

Mr. TREADWAY. For commercial purposes. There still remains a certain fund from former authorizations, a billion and a half as I have the figures. There was a request, I will say to the gentleman—perhaps I did not make myself quite plain—there was a request in a clause in the original draft of this bill which was presented to the committee for a loan of a billion and a half dollars to foreign governments that they in turn could loan to their manufacturers, and that the committee refused to grant.

Mr. FESS. There has been a basis of criticism that this Government loaned to foreign governments at a certain rate and then the foreign governments loaned to their people at a much higher rate than we loaned to them.

Mr. TREADWAY. That criticism is a matter we went into; and, further than that, there has been also, as the gentleman will recall, some thought that these large loans that we have made might be forgiven; that that might be one of the terms of peace. Now, I am very glad to say that the representative of the Treasury Department, Mr. Rathbone, who has charge of this matter of our foreign connections, was very insistent in his testimony that no such desire had ever been expressed by our representatives or by the representatives of foreign governments, and he also presented to the committee letters corroborating that feature from foreign governments. So that there is no thought in the minds of our representatives or the department or of your committee that the loans that we have made to our allies during the progress of the war will be forgiven. They are excellent credits to-day and certainly will be paid at some time at their face value or redeemed, and their interest is being kept up at the present time.

Mr. FESS. Then this is absolutely gratuitous where we hear a good deal or read a good deal about cancellations of these loans?

Mr. TREADWAY. Absolutely. We are assured by the department it has no such intention whatsoever. And I am certainly expressing no secret of the committee in saying that we were very much gratified indeed to have that statement, and we absolutely agreed with it. It certainly would be, as we view it, to a certain extent, a slap at the Governments to whom we have loaned money to even as much as suggest that we desire to have these debts canceled and forgiven.

Mr. LINTHICUM. What is the present status of those debts? Have they been reduced to notes or simply memoranda?

Mr. TREADWAY. I have not the statistics here. Has the chairman of the committee the statement of the amount of loans now outstanding to foreign governments?

Mr. KITCHIN. It is $8,090,000,000.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I was inquiring more as to the status of them—whether they were mere memorandum or something definite.

Mr. TREADWAY. They are, every one of them, demand notes. And they are the best kind of security. We went over that matter with Mr. McAdoo, and again with Mr. Leffingwell; and Mr. McAdoo was very insistent, and we thought properly so, that at that time, and even now, the form of those notes should not be changed. They are to-day demand notes absolutely.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. Has there been any suggestion that these foreign loans be transferred from the Government to the individual citizens, with a guaranty on the part of the Government?

Mr. TREADWAY. There were some loans of that character outstanding before we went into the war.

Mr. FESS. It has been suggested that, instead of the country holding the foreign obligations to the amount of $8,000,000,000, the Government should transfer those obligations to the individual citizens, like yourself and others, and sell those obligations instead of making this issuance. Was there anything of that kind taken up?

Mr. TREADWAY. We have not taken up that subject in any way whatever, and personally I do not think it would be advisable to do so, because Congress authorized the loans from the Treasury of the United States, and what object would there be gained in changing either the nature of the loan or the holders thereof?

Mr. FESS. The object would be, instead of increasing our obligation, we would be simply transferring to the American citizen the foreign obligations.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think it would be very much better for our people to come forward liberally and subscribe to the outstanding obligations of our Government or these new obligations about to be offered, rather than that the individual citizen assume the obligations of a foreign government. Personally, I think the whole transaction is in a better financial condition at the present time and by the present method than it could be by such a transfer as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. FESS. The distinguished member of the Ways and Means Committee would readily see, if we did that, we would save the Government's obligations to that amount.

Mr. TREADWAY. But the obligation is a good one. There is no question of the obligation being of full value. It is not an actual loss, nor will not be, on the part of our Government, any more than it would be if it was transferred to the individual.

Mr. CURRY of California. As I understand it, the preceding acts authorizing the issuance of bonds and authorizing the loaning of money to foreign countries provided that those foreign countries should furnish to the United States Treasury bonds of the foreign country of about the same form and drawing the same rate of interest as the United States bonds. And I also understand there is not a single, solitary bond in the United States Treasury under that trade between the allies and the United States. Sections 7 and 8 of this bill are in reality put there for the purpose of validating the invalid act of ex-Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, who assumed and exercised a power not authorized by law.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am not here to defend any unlawful acts of the Secretary of the Treasury. I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], in his address a short time ago, expressed our views very fully, to the effect that a great many acts have been performed unauthorized, perhaps, by law, under the exigencies of the times. And now we are going to try to get a little nearer to normal conditions.

Personally I see no reason for entertaining that idea, and I myself will confess that section 8 did not offer that thought to me which the gentleman from California has.

Mr. CURRY of California. Then the gentleman does not think that an I O U signed by an official of a foreign Government is as good a security as a bond issued under the authority of law?

Mr. TREADWAY. No; I do not. I agree with the gentleman as to that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As to that, I think it is fair to say that the Treasury Department has been asked about that time and time again, and it has insisted that these foreign Governments would prefer to have long-time obligations rather than these demand notes, and the Secretary of the Treasury has insisted—both Secretaries have insisted—that their securities are ample, and that no foreign Government can afford to go back on those demand notes; that as a matter of fact the foreign Governments would rather be released from the demand notes and place in lieu thereof long-term bonds. It has been suggested that the Treasury Department in due course, when it can settle itself, following peace arrangements, when the financial affairs of foreign countries adjust themselves and their established systems are restored, will see that these demand notes are replaced by bonds.

Mr. CURRY of California. It is not a question whether the Treasury Department thinks this or that or the other thing is the best thing to do. It is the question of what the Treasury Deparment has been ordered to do by Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is only one answer to that, and that is that if an official of the Government willfully violates an act of Congress he should be brought to bar.

Mr. CURRY of California. Well, that is hardly an answer to the question. Probably I ought not to have asked the question. The proposition is that we are trying to validate now an invalid act by section 8 of this bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman will bear in mind that, so far as some of the minority members of this Committee on Ways and Means are concerned, they have been obliged, in order to maintain the honor of the country, in order to sustain the President of the United States in his war demands, to vote certain privileges and authority and other things, and among those things we voted was this right to loan money to foreign Governments.

Mr. CURRY of California. Not on I O U's.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That being done, the Treasury officials took the demand notes of the foreign governments, and that is the security we have now.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I have completed my remarks, and I thank the committee for its attention. I shall be very glad to yield the floor to the gentlemen and let them discuss their explanations. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, the important matter for this Government, which is not thoroughly recognized by this bill or this report, is that all Government obligations should be absolutely as good as gold—principal and interest—and free of taxation, whether upon principal or interest.

It is certainty that enables anyone to borrow at a low rate of interest, the certainty that his obligation is absolutely good, and the United States has no right, if it wishes to get loans at a low rate and plenty of offers, to say, "I will pay so much interest if I do not take it back by an income tax; I will pay so much principal if I do not take part of it back by an inheritance tax."

Our legislation has tried, and still tries, to make the bond worth more in the hands of the poor man than in the hands of the rich. This will always fail. I know of one patriotic man who borrowed $10,000 on his notes in order to buy Government bonds, and he found that he paid 6 per cent and was receiving 4¼ per cent, so that he had to sell his bonds, and lost $600 on that transaction.

The poor man can not safely invest in a security if he can not sell it to the rich, for it is the rich and the banks that have the money to invest. We have found it absolutely essential in this bill to take off the tax on bonds that are held abroad by aliens. Naturally, if we wish the profiteers of England and the rich men of Holland to invest in our bonds, we must not tax those bonds in their hands. But what a temptation it is to the rich man here to have his bonds transferred to the other side of the water under some sort of a trust! What a danger it is; and why should a foreigner be better treated on a bond than an American who advances his money out of patriotism?

And, again, it is not merely our present taxes, but the fact that those taxes may go up, that should be considered. People think taxes may go up, and dare not buy because of the charge that may hereafter be put against their income. When buying, they must have some assurance as to what they shall pay. On the other hand, if taxes are reduced, they will get a better security than was expected. There is neither fairness nor certainty. There is no fairness in anything that is not certain. It is not fair to the Government, and it is not fair to the individual.

Now, a partial remedy has been adopted here. It is proposed to issue notes instead of bonds, so that high interest shall not be perpetual. It might be wiser to have followed Secretary Chase's wonderful system, that carried us so well through and after the Civil War, of issuing 5-20 and 10-40 bonds, running at the option of the Government for a long course of years, but redeemable in a short term of years if it was to the advantage of the Government. By this system of borrowing within a few decades after the Civil War we reduced our interest rate from 6 per cent to 4 per cent and to 3 per cent, and then to 2 per cent. We all know this, and those bonds were free of taxation, as our notes and bonds should be, so that they can be held by national banks.

Now one other suggestion. It has been thought a great thing to relieve the first series of these notes from all taxes except estate or inheritance taxes. There are in this country several gentlemen worth a great many million dollars, one at least worth several hundreds of millions of dollars, and they are often not young, but look to the time soon when they may die and when that inheritance tax will have to be paid. I have forgotten how much it is.

Mr. KITCHIN. Twenty-five per cent is the highest.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. That is enough so that if we want these men to give their millions and hundreds of millions to our loans, let the law provide that loans shall bear interest at between 2 and 3 per cent, not less than 2 and not more than 3, but that they shall be free from taxation, interest and principal, that estate and inheritance taxes shall not affect them, and that the credit and obligations of the United States shall never be impeached by any foreign country, or by any market, and, least of all, by itself. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the second liberty bond act is hereby amended by adding thereto a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 18. (a) That in addition to the bonds and certificates of indebtedness and war savings certificates authorized by this act and amendments thereto, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is authorized to borrow from time to time on the credit of the United States for the purposes of this act, and to meet public expenditures authorized by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $7,000,000,000, and to issue therefor notes of the United States at not less than par in such form or forms and denomination or denominations, containing such terms and conditions, and at such rate or rates of interest, as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and each series of notes so issued shall be payable at such time not less than one year nor more than five years from the date of its issue as he may prescribe, and may be redeemable before maturity (at the option of the United States) in whole or in part, upon not more than one year's nor less than four months' notice, and under such rules and regulations and during such period as he may prescribe.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the bill to be read by paragraphs or sections?

The CHAIRMAN. By paragraphs.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I did not ask for any time under general debate, because I appreciate the desire of the committee to finish the bill, but I want to have a little time now to make one or two observations.

I think every Member here ought to have more or less sympathy with the committee in its effort to meet the requirements of the Treasury at this time, three months after the signing of the armistice, with a general opinion on the part of the country that the war is over. Heretofore our bonds could be sold easily, because we capitalized the sentiment of the country. The whole Nation was in a fervor of patriotism, and everybody felt that he ought to go to the last limit, because he was supporting the Government; and as our sons were in the front line, it was not difficult to stir the country to a place where people would purchase the bonds. Therefore, it was not necessary to make the bonds inviting, because they were sold as a matter of patriotic duty.

But now, the war not being over, yet at the same time the effect being as if it were over, the sentiment is not here. It is an entirely different proposition; and while it is true that the Secretary of the Treasury said we must not eliminate sentiment, but must regard sentiment as one of the chief elements of the sale, that is a matter of patriotism with him, and we all indorse it, but we all recognize that it is easier to say than it is to do; and I believe we will readily admit that this bond sale is going to be very much more difficult, because of the lack of the sentiment that we can capitalize.

In order to meet that difficulty there is an attempt to make the bonds more inviting, so as to supplement what otherwise we would have as a result of the sentiment. One of the inviting features is the rate of interest. But if you make the rate of interest high, you immediately discriminate against the present bondholder, who holds a part of the $8,000,000,000 of bonds.

There is certainly a desire on the part of the Government not to discriminate against that bondholder. Whatever you do, it will be charged that this bond issue is going to be in the interest of the big bondholder, of the man of wealth. The present bondholder will think you are paying no attention to his property rights and that you are making his property of less value by making a higher rate on the future bonds. Therefore, the committee evidently decided that it would not be wise to fix the rate, and determined to leave it rather to the Secretary of the Treasury. I realize that, and while I have an impulse to criticize it, I can recognize exactly why that element is in here.

On the other hand, if we make this bond so attractive that it will be more desired than the bond that the present bondholder owns, we will make it an inducement for him to dispose of his bond and to buy the better bond, and if that inducement is offered to him, instead of stabilizing the present securities of the Government you will further depreciate them, in my judgment. That is another danger, in our hope of stabilizing the present securities and not making valueless the property of the present popular bondholder, and in order to avoid that we must necessarily give the Secretary of the Treasury some latitude.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FESS. I ask for five minutes more. I will not take more than that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman proceeding for five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. There is a general concession that it will be necessary for the Secretary of the Treasury to make a high rate. At least you are so sure of it that you have left the way open to him to do it if it is necessary. Thus far in my life I have never used the word "camouflage" until now, but it has come to be so popular that everybody will understand it. We do not call this issue a bond. We call it a note. Yet it is a bond just as truly as the others that are already issued, and we call it a note so that we may say to the purchaser of the former bonds, "We have not discriminated against you because you hold a bond, and this is a note." If you sold bonds just as you sold them before it is a discrimination.

Mr. BENSON rose.

Mr. FESS. I think I know what my friend is about to interject, that it is a short-term bond.

Mr. BENSON. I would like to ask the gentleman if this is not exactly what every big railroad corporation has done for years, when times are hard and money tight they have adopted the policy of making short-term loans, in order that they may adjust themselves to the condition when money rates come down and they can take care of the situation. They may pay a higher rate for the time being, and it is not as good security because it does not run for a long term.

Mr. FESS. If the gentleman is asking me whether every big business does that or not, I say yes.

Mr. BENSON. Is it not economically correct?

Mr. FESS. That does not change the bond to a note. I am talking about the camouflage that is used here. The gentleman's observation is admitted by everybody. Because this is a short time we call it a note, when it is a long time we call it a bond. They say there is no discrimination, because the former bondholder holds the bond while the future note holder will hold the note. That is a distinction without a difference. My point is that in order to avoid criticism we are changing the phraseology and saying to the bondholder, "We are selling you a note while the other fellow has bought a bond." The truth about the matter is that both of them are securities of the Government and both sold in the market. One is the short term and the other is the long term, but the short term, of course, will have a different rate of interest.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is there not also this difference which might be of advantage to the Government credit, that in case the rate of interest was placed fairly high on the note, the mere fact that it was placed higher than the outstanding bonds would not necessarily show that the Government credit was any less strong?

Mr. FESS. I think that is absolutely correct. This is the question, however, that I would like to have my colleague dilate on. If you made a short-term bond more attractive, by higher rates, is there not danger of the present bondholder, who had already purchased his bond, feeling that you have discriminated against him, and therefore making his bond of less value than before the note was issued? I think there is danger of that, and I am not criticizing the committee, but it seems to me you are up against a proposition you could not help. My point was that it seemed to me that there ought to be considerable sympathy for the committee in attempting to work out a mighty knotty problem, and a very difficult one.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman see any escape?

Mr. FESS. I really do not. I might say that I think we might have made that issue an issue of 3½ nontaxable. I believe we would have gotten the money, and we would not have made it sufficiently discriminative against the present bondholders to invite criticism. I believe that would have been a better way than to leave the rate of interest open to the Secretary to fix at any rate he sees fit, and my own opinion is that this will be taken up by banks when the interest is made high enough to make it attractive.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. At this late hour I do not want to take up the time of the committee in a lengthy debate. I have been impressed with the uncertainty all along the line of what the requirements of the Treasury Department and the obligations of the United States are at this time. I wanted to take this opportunity to answer the chairman of the committee, who this afternoon asserted that I was opposed to loaning to our allies money to rehabilitate those countries. I am not opposed to that. I believe that the only way that we can acquire the trade of foreign countries under conditions that exist at the present time is to grant them loans.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have read carefully the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee, before which committee the Secretary of the Treasury and other experts from the Treasury Department appeared and gave expression to their views in regard to this bill, authorizing the issuance of $7,000,000,000 worth of short-term Government securities and $2,000,000,000 Treasury certificates now.

Expenditures in November, December, and January, exclusive of transactions in the principal of the public debt, amounted to $5,958,576,114.24, practically $2,000,000,000 a month.

The amount of Treasury certificates of indebtedness outstanding on January 31 was $4,798,064,800, of which $3,225,099,500 were issued in anticipation of the victory liberty loan.

Expenditures for the first seven months of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, exclusive of the principal of the public debt, amounted to $12,594,498,537.96. Secretary McAdoo before he retired expressed the hope that the expenditures for the whole fiscal year would be in the neighborhood of only $18,000,000,000. The new Secretary now says $19,000,000,000. How much it will be by the end of June no one can tell now.

Commitments, Army contracts, requirements for military expenditures abroad, Shipping Board, naval program, guaranties, Food Administration, and so forth, complete to date nearly $5,000,000,000, increasing at the rate of $1,400,000,000 a month.

Amount of bonds authorized and unissued under existing acts are slightly in excess of $5,000,000,000. Authorizations under the first bond act have been $2,000,000,000, and under the second, third, and fourth acts, $20,000,000,000, and approximately $17,000,000,000 of bonds have been sold under the four acts. To this you add the Treasury certificates of indebtedness outstanding January 31, 1919, of $4,798,064,800, together with the original debt of about $1,000,000,000 at the beginning of the war, and you have a total debt of $22,798,064,800, or nearly $23,000,000,000, and added to this is the undisclosed debt which the present Secretary of the Treasury estimated before the Ways and Means Committee at $5,000,000,000. If the Secretary's guess is correct, one can readily see and understand that the debt of this Government at the end of this year will be $30,000,000,000 or more, probably more.

This bill provides, among other things, for an authorization of $7,000,000,000 of short-time notes at what the Secretary terms a victory loan at popular rates of interest, and I realize that to float this large loan in a situation like the present that the great burden is going to fall upon the Federal reserve and other banks. I have great misgivings in regard to this, as I am fearful that this course will mean that the banks' liquid funds will be used up and that rediscounts and the issuance of Federal reserve notes will have to be resorted to to an alarming extent. I believe it would be much better to raise the rate of interest and issue long-time bonds and sell them to investors rather than to the banks. The American people are more interested in a successful quick flotation of this next issue than they are in the rate of interest.

I realize that grave responsibilities rest upon the Treasury Department in floating the next loan. The public will not enthuse over it as they did over previous bond campaigns. Furthermore, conditions have changed since then, for during those campaigns three jobs were seeking every man, whereas now many men are seeking jobs; and again, labor then was more highly rewarded than it will be during the next campaign.

In order to impress on you the danger of permitting our debt to remain unfunded, I refer to no less an authority than the Bankers' Magazine of London, where, in an issue during the year 1913, it editorially called attention to the pall on the money markets of London, Paris, and Berlin, which the unfunding of the $300,000,000 Balkan war debt had caused. If the failure to fund that small debt at that time should produce the effect attributed to it in the money market whose peoples had enjoyed peace and a wonderful industrial and commercial activity for more than a generation, what may we now expect on the world's money markets if we permit this vast war debt to drag along and remain unfunded for any considerable period of time? Business will never recover its equilibrium until that war debt is funded and the money markets made free for our business enterprises to enter and finance their necessary demands.

I heartily favor the principle of raising a sinking fund for the retirement of these bonds at maturity. The bill proposes to raise a sinking fund yearly of 2½ per cent, so as to retire them in 25 years. If the sinking-fund rate be 1 per cent, they would be retired at the end of 41 years. On the assumption that there will be eighteen billion of bonds, this wound mean a difference between $450,000,000 and $180,000,000, or $270,000,000, yearly we would have to raise in taxes to provide for the sinking fund. But before we get through financing this war we will have a debt nearly thirty billion, and if we plan to retire it on a 2½ per cent basis it will mean the raising of $750,000,000 taxes yearly to meet such demand, whereas if we retire it in 41 years on a 1 per cent basis we would have to raise but $300,000,000 for such purpose. This shows the difference in the operation of compound interest over a short and long period. If the interest be compounded annually, then at the end of the first year there is no difference between simple and compound interest, whereas taken for a long period the difference according to the length of the period. For instance, the calculation was made by a British actuary once to ascertain the difference between an investment of a British penny, equal to 2 cents, at 5 per cent from the birth of Christ to the year 1900, and he declared that at simple interest the investment would amount to $1.92, whereas at compound interest it would equal a globe of pure gold 58,000,000,000 times the size of the earth.

Another reason why we should not retire our bonded debt in the short period of 25 years is to prevent inflation. Suppose we were to retire that vast amount of indebtedness in one year. Does not anyone know it would result in inflation? For the public would have so much idle money that they would resort to all sorts of extravagances and overconsumption; and that would cause the same disturbance of values we have at present, and that is bound to produce unrest among the masses. That debt should be retired over a considerable period of time—not less than 16 years. If it could be retired at the rate of one billion yearly it would be most helpful to the next generation, because that amount of fresh capital being brought into the market every year from this source alone would become a powerful stimulant to business of every kind and would not produce inflation; neither would it disturb other permanent investments. I therefore propose an amendment that the sinking fund be at the rate of 1 per cent instead of 2½ per cent, as provided in the bill.

It is unnecessary for me to remind the Members who served in the last Congress of my hostility to everything paternalistic, but as the new Members do not know my views on this question I trust it will not be considered an intrusion on your valuable time for me to make mention of my position on this question.

This bill contains some paternalistic features which I would have opposed five years ago to the best of my ability and energy, for I could not then conceive that at this time we would be confronted with the condition which exists throughout the civilized world, and especially in countries which were the best customers for the products of our farms, factories, and mines. It is now nearly five years since the cataclysm broke loose in Europe which destroyed more wealth than existed in the entire world at the beginning of the nineteenth century. Only a few Frenchmen, and but one Englishman (Kitchener), realized from the start what it meant and the effort required to preserve the freedom of civilization. But when the Englishmen did finally awake to the real importance of the event they rallied to the support of their Government to a man. They freely submitted to their Government commandeering every pound of their wealth, and every able-bodied man of the realm went to the training camp, many of whom, the flower of British manhood, lie buried beneath French soil to-day. The same is true respecting our other allies, France and Italy, but to a worse degree, for their territories were invaded by the Hun, who removed the machinery of their factories to their own country and laid waste everything of value they could not carry away.

Abnormal conditions justify abnormal remedies. If it were a sound financial policy for the governments of those countries to commandeer those factories and convert them into munition plants, then it is equally sound for them to aid in their rehabilitation, because the government is the only body which can equitably apportion the damage done to all interests served in dismantling those factories and other institutions engaged in the arts of peace. It would require generations for private capital to reestablish those industries, for it is timid and lacks the initiative to take hold with boldness. If private capital should make such an attempt it would become discredited among the credit institutions of the country. So the individual who attempted such philanthropic work would destroy his own usefulness by losing his wealth or power to do good. The very basis of credit is character, experience, honesty, and energy, but the former heads of many of those enterprises are dead, killed in battle, and the new heads have unestablished character.

Doubtless many of those new heads are far better business men than the former heads, for they are young men who have grown up in the business and therefore better able to do that business than the former heads, but they lack reputation or the establishment of character as a basis of credit. Mark the prediction: Some of the young business men in those countries, and our own as well, will astound the world, for they have done more thinking and had more experience during the past five years than their fathers did and had in a generation.

In this connection I desire to quote an excerpt from an editorial which appeared in Sunday's New York Times, entitled "Good times ahead." It said:

It is true that the world never witnessed such destruction of capital. But it is also true that it never witnessed such increased capacity of production. That is more important. The destruction is temporary and has stopped, while the increase of production is as permanent as we choose to make it under the stimulus of world wants and American capacity to supply them. The world lacks food and clothes and materials to supply every want to a total of uncounted billions. Here only is plenty in goods and capacity of quick production. Every consideration of neighborly duty and self-interest constrains us to remove the obstacles in the way of bringing foreign buyers and our sellers together.

We are just as dependent on those countries as purchasers of our surplus products as they are on us, for if we fail to dispose of our surplus products then prices will go to smash and we will be in the throes of a panic. If all at once you reduce the wheat farmers' product to $1 per bushel and the cotton farmers' products to 10 cents per pound you destroy their ability to patronize the steel mills and cotton factories and to buy the bonds of the industrial and transportation concerns of the country. That will bring about unemployment of labor in the industrial centers and a panic will ensue. The only way we can prevent such a catastrophe is to make loans to those foreign governments by floating the short-time notes and bonds of our own Government, for they can not float their own government securities in this country as our people are not habituated to the purchase of such securities.

Previous to the breaking out of the European war our foreign trade balance was about $400,000,000 yearly. At that time Europe owned about $5,000,000,000 of our investments, from which they realized an annual income of some $200,000,000. Our tourists who went abroad spent about $150,000,000 every year. The difference they made up in shipping charges, insurance, and a few minor things. But since then we have ceased to be a foreign debtor and become a foreign creditor to the same extent that we were their debtor, and we will become their creditor to a much greater amount during the next five years if we exercise the same sound business judgment to which we are accredited. We must rehabilitate Britain and France, for in so doing we will not only enrich them as they enrich themselves in lending us the five billions to which we were indebted to them at the beginning of the war, but we will enrich ourselves twofold—first, by furnishing markets for our surplus products, and, second, by teaching our people the savings and investment habit and causing them to become the owners of sound securities.

I believe that our Government should make direct loans to those foreign governments and not use the War Finance Corporation to do it. The latter is owned by our Government, all of whose capital was advanced by our Government and is fully controlled by Government officials. Then why have two such loan agencies? The older agency, the Treasury Department, is the one we should employ. The public will not have the same confidence in the securities of the War Finance Corporation that they have in similar securities issued by the Government, for the simple reason the public is not familiar with it. Then there is not the same opportunity for deals to be made out of the securities issued by the Government that there will be of those issued by that corporation; and then the final deal will be in closing up the affairs of that corporation in which some pets are sure to make big sums at the expense of the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two or three words. I think, in order to dispose of these bonds in any way, we must submit to our constituents or to the people a business proposition. Heretofore we have had certain inducements for selling these bonds. One was that we were backing up the boys in the trenches, and the next was that it was to save our country from German domination. Both of those reasons have gone. You may start the meeting when you go out to sell these victory bonds by the patriotic air of the Star-Spangled Banner, or recite the "Ship of State," but I am afraid the incentive and the old enthusiasm will be lacking. The value of every other commodity is fixed by the market, and I want to ask you what kind of a business proposition is it to go to a man and say that you want to sell him a $100 bond when he can go out on the market and buy it for $94? That is the proposition that will confront us.

Every one of us will be asked to help sell these victory bonds, amounting to $7,000,000,000, in order to meet this indebtedness. We are going to be asked to sell a $100 bond for $100, when the market price is $94. It occurs to me that the business proposition is to do what was done in the Civil War, and what is done in every other kind of a business proposition, and that is to sell them on the market for what they are worth. When we sold liberty bonds at first we told the people to whom we sold them that when the war was over they would immediately rise in price. That is what we told the people when we asked them to buy the bonds. We have seen an order go out from the Treasury stating to the banks that they can invest a per cent of their banking assets in these bonds at par, and could invest the capital and surplus. Not only that, but also invest a large amount of deposits of their customers into these bonds. How are you going to get the money back?

They will be expected to pay $100 in cash for a bond that is worth $94 on the market. It is not the banks that lose the money, for the banks do not own the surplus. It is the depositors who own the deposits, and they are entitled to value received when they buy a bond or when the bank buys a bond for them or with their money. The only sound principle upon which to do it and the way to dispose of these Government bonds or any other merchandise is to sell them on the market or at the market value. The business thing to do would be to sell them for what they are worth, just as they did in the Civil War. They sold them below par. Why do you not do that? It does not show any lack of patriotism. Every one of us has supreme regard for our country and all the patriotism that is necessary to look after its indebtedness. There never were better men to fight or greater valor shown than was shown by the boys who grow up in this Republic. They have proven that it is not necessary that they be subjects of a monarchy or an autocracy or be under the command of a king or any other potentate to fight.

These liberty-loving boys, citizens of a Republic, offer their lives freely for their country, for liberty, justice, and freedom, and we should see to it that the credit of that country is kept at par. [Applause.]

Now, just one thing further. It occurs to me that it is going to be difficult to dispose of these bonds in any other way than to have the banks absorb them. Some gentleman here to-night said that the banks did not have the money now. The gentleman from Massachusetts, I think, stated that the banks are hard up. There is more money in the banks now than there ever was, or at least the bank assets are greater. They are carrying a large amount of notes now of men who have paid 100 per cent for their bonds, and they are paying 6 per cent upon the money borrowed for the purpose of paying for liberty bonds. The banks did right in that; and why? Because it was absolutely necessary then to carry on and win the war that we should have the money. We had to back up our boys.

That incentive is now wanting, and we are going to ask these people now for—I do not know whether you will call it a donation or not, but every time you buy a $100 bond you are contributing $6. I personally am willing to do it, but it will require a good deal of explaining to some men before they will purchase them. It would be an easy matter to dispose of them if the bonds sold on the market at par, as I think they should. The thing that appeals most to me and, I think, will appeal to most purchasers of these bonds is that they have behind them the best Government and are the best security on earth. That just as surely as we get back to normal times just so surely will these bonds sell at par and go to a premium, as they did after the Civil War. Besides, they are a good investment, are negotiable, and can be used as security for loans at the banks. They can not be recommended too highly. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, this is probably the last liberty bond that we will issue. I believe that the Government bonds ought to sell at par always. I know that I differ with a good many gentlemen upon this subject, but when the Government issues a $100 bond, I believe that the person who holds that bond should receive $100 for it. I do not believe these Government bonds should be speculated in, as they now speculate in stocks and farm products. This is a solemn obligation of the Government. When the Government puts its name to a bond and people of wealth buy them, and poor people buy them, and all down the line to the poor, struggling charwomen, who wish to stand by the Government and to help it out in time of war, I believe that the Government ought to pay the full amount of that bond.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will briefly; I have but five minutes.

Mr. BLACK. Does the gentleman think that the Government discharges its full obligation when it meets its interest and pays the principal at maturity?

Mr. HEFLIN. I think it does its duty in that regard, but I think it ought to go a step further and see that nobody shall buy these war bonds at less than par. Now, I have learned of a charwoman in this city who paid $50 for a bond, and after the war had ended sold it for $37. Gentlemen, that is wrong. This Government, rich and powerful as it is, ought not to permit that. It ought to establish an institution somewhere on the side between the buyer and the Treasury to take charge and handle them under authority of the Government, so as to prevent the person who buys it from suffering loss.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman please tell us how the Government can raise money and buy these bonds and protect these people?

Mr. HEFLIN. The Government can raise it by taxation or by issuing other bonds to be sold in time of peace. I am for protecting the private citizen, and the whole aim of constitutional government is the welfare of the citizen. I am opposed to permitting men to come along as scalpers and buy up these bonds and to beat down their price on the exchange or elsewhere and buy them at a low price and then hold them and come up to the Government at the final hour when the Government must pay one hundred cents on the dollar with interest from the time it was issued. I am pleading for the masses of the people who responded to the call of the Government in the hour of its peril.

Mr. LAZARO. I fully agree with the gentleman, but the gentleman admits that the Government is the people. Now, how are you going to raise more money to buy all these bonds that are being offered by people who have to sell? Will the gentleman please tell me?

Mr. HEFLIN. I have suggested to the gentleman as plainly as I could that we can do it either by taxation or issuing bonds in time of peace to tide these people over. Why should the struggling mortal who has come up and expended his funds to buy bonds to aid the Government be left on the wayside to be fleeced by speculators?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield? How do we sell bonds?

Mr. HEFLIN. How would I sell bonds?

Mr. LAZARO. How do we sell bonds?

Mr. HEFLIN. Why, the name of this Government is sufficient as the $10 bill issued to me; I have one in my pocket, I am glad to say. [Applause.] I count it as $10. When the Government put out $100 we count it as $100, and I do not want this great Government to permit anybody to buy it up under any condition for $75. Gentlemen, you have got to get away from that. This is a fundamental principle in the selling of these bonds; and I want to say to gentlemen here to-night in reference to the South, the cotton-producing States of this Union, unless you take the embargo off of cotton, unless you stop exchanges from bartering fictitious stuff to beat down the price of actual cotton, we can not buy bonds. Gentlemen, I want you to get that thought now. We can not buy bonds unless this relief comes. The bankers of my section of the country, the merchants and farmers, who represent thirty-odd millions of American people, have got their money invested in cotton. The bankers and merchants of my section have got their money invested in cotton, and they are holding 4,000,000 bales of cotton, and we are going to continue holding it, whether the Government helps us or not; but we ought not to be forced to bear this burden. We bought bonds in all the issues of the past; we bought war-savings stamps.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Not now. We contributed in every way we could to the winning of the war. Our boys have died in every battle on the fields of France, and in the Argonne Forest Iowa, Alabama, and New York tell the story of that victory. [Applause.]

And I ask you gentlemen to join us in taking the embargo and all restrictions off of this money crop, the cotton crop of the South, and if you will you will help your brethren in my section, and we will be able to buy bonds of the next issue. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

(1) Exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except estate or inheritance taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States, any State, or any of the possessions of the United States, or by any local taxing authority.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey: Page 2, line 18, after the words "all taxation," strike out "(except estate or inheritance taxes)," and insert after the word "authority," in line 21, the words, "and to bear interest at not more than 3½ per cent per annum."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, just one word. The 3½ per cent bonds of the United States now sell, I believe, at 99½. These notes will be better than those bonds. Those bonds are free from United States taxation, but these notes will also be free from State taxation, local taxation, and all taxation if we strike out the words "except estate or inheritance taxes," which last are not imposed on the 3½ per cent bonds. When 3½ State bonds sell at near par, though they are subject to State taxation in some respects, the United States should try whether a bond or note which is absolutely free from all taxation can not be put upon the market at par. This might if preferred be inserted as an extra series of notes. The United States should try to find out whether its obligations will not sell at par when not taxed, at the low rate of 3½ per cent. The rates should be inserted so that the country shall understand that if we take the taxes off the interest will be low.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That section 3 of the fourth liberty bond act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That, notwithstanding the provisions of the second liberty bond act or of the War Finance Corporation act or of any other act, bonds, notes, and certificates of indebtedness of the United States and bonds of the War Finance Corporation shall, while beneficially owned by a nonresident alien individual, or a foreign corporation, partnership, or association, not engaged in business in the United States, be exempt both as to principal and interest from any and all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, any State, or any of the possessions of the United States or by any local taxing authority."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Does this provision in regard to bonds owned by nonresident alien individual, or a foreign corporation, partnership, or association, extend the bond issues that have gone before the present one which we authorize in this bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; to extend the market for those bonds.

Mr. BLACK. What would be the object of making this exemption retroactive?

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, we would furnish a wider market for these bonds now below par—the 4¼ bonds. It was thought we might be able to dispose to nonresident aliens two or three million dollars worth of them. That would make a demand for the bonds now below par. And I will say it is the exact language of the fourth liberty bond act of 1918, although we exempted the bonds payable in foreign money from all taxation. We make the bonds now payable in American money as well as foreign money. It will give a wider market. No nonresident alien individual or foreign corporation, partnership, or association who does any business here at all will be exempt from any of those taxes.

Mr. BLACK. I understand that perfectly well. As to the bond issues that we have had heretofore, have they been subscribed for by foreign individuals and corporations and partnerships?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say, to no appreciable extent. I do not suppose to any extent. If so, very slightly. Why? They would have to pay local taxes and the national taxes both on the bond itself and on the interest and an income tax on the interest in foreign countries, because they would be foreign bonds. Now, if they had to buy these bonds held by the foreigner, if the bond itself was subject to the property tax, the interest on the bond was subject to an income tax of that country, and they also had to pay in this country an income tax, they would not buy them.

Mr. BLACK. And it was thought by the committee that would help the sale of the present bond issue?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. And, no doubt, it will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Section 3 involves one or two questions that I would like to speak upon before it is finally enacted into law.

It might be inferred from the inclusion in this section of the War Finance Corporation bonds or of certificates that the Government of the United States is sponsor for them to the extent that it has guaranteed the payment of these bonds. I wish to have it understood that this question was raised in committee, and that it was the understanding of the committee that the inclusion of War Finance Corporation bonds in this section for the purpose of encouraging their sale, along with the sale of other bonds, to alien holders was not intended to mean that the Government of the United States was responsible for the payment of the War Finance Corporation bonds.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman is correct. It was the understanding of the committee that the Government would be in no way liable for any bonds issued by the War Finance Corporation, and I will read to the gentleman the law on that subject in the provision of the war finance appropriation act, section 17. It reads:

That the United States shall not be liable for the payment of any bond or other obligation or the interest thereon issued or incurred by the corporation, nor shall it incur any liability with respect of any act or omission of the corporation.

So that the Government would be in no way liable at all in any respect.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let us see if we clearly understand the purpose of this section. It is intended to encourage the purchase by aliens of American securities, and to that extent it would relieve the pressure upon the American security field.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is true.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Whereas it is contended that the bonds are selling below par in the United States, and if we can find a foreign market for those bonds we induce the foreigner to buy the bonds, with the understanding that so far as his holdings are concerned they are tax free. That being the fact, we include along with other bonds that the foreigner may buy on these terms the War Finance Corporation bonds, but, as the chairman of the committee has indicated now, notwithstanding the fact that these War Finance Corporation bonds are included in this section, it is clearly not the purpose of the law nor of this section to have any foreign purchaser understand that if there should ever be a loss on the War Finance Corporation bonds in his hands the Government of the United States is responsible and can be made to pay.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. (a) That there is hereby created in the Treasury a cumulative sinking fund for the retirement of bonds and notes issued under the first liberty bond act, the second liberty bond act, the third liberty bond act, the fourth liberty bond act, or under this act, and outstanding on July 1, 1920. The sinking fund and all additions thereto are hereby appropriated for the payment of such bonds and notes at maturity, or for the redemption or purchase thereof before maturity by the Secretary of the Treasury at such prices and upon such terms and conditions as he shall prescribe, and shall be available until all such bonds and notes are retired. The average cost of the bonds and notes purchased shall not exceed par and accrued interest. Bonds and notes purchased, redeemed, or paid out of the sinking fund shall be canceled and retired and shall not be reissued. For the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1920, and for each fiscal year thereafter until all such bonds and notes are retired there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes of such sinking fund, an amount equal to the sum of (1) 2½ per cent of the aggregate amount of such bonds and notes outstanding on July 1, 1920, less an amount equal to the par amount of any obligations of foreign governments held by the United States on July 1, 1920, and (2) the interest which would have been payable during the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made on the bonds and notes purchased, redeemed, or paid out of the sinking fund during such year or in previous years.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, on line 6, page 8.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHERLEY: Line 6, page 8, insert:
"The Secretary of the Treasury shall submit to Congress at the beginning of each regular session a separate annual report of the action taken under the authority contained in this section."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire simply to say this to the committee: The act very properly provides for a sinking fund, and it makes it mandatory upon the Secretary of the Treasury to annually reserve out of the revenues of the Government a certain percentage for the retirement and payment of the public debt; but, like a great many other mandatory provisions, they are not always obeyed. For a number of years past we have gotten into the habit of ignoring the requirements of the existing law in regard to the sinking fund.

I think, with such a huge debt as the country now has, it is highly important that there should be brought to the attention of the Congress annually what steps have been taken by the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out the mandatory provisions of the law in regard to the sinking fund.

Now, if his report touching it is made in his general annual report, it is lost sight of, along with a lot of other matters; and I simply hope, by requiring a separate annual report to be made to Congress, to annually call the attention of Congress and the attention of the country to the condition in connection with our public debt and whether or not the law is being complied with.

If we can see to it that each year provision is really made to carry out the requirements of the sinking-fund provision, we can take care of this debt over a period of time that will not really cause a very great or insupportable burden to the country. But if we get into the habit of appropriating all the revenues and paying no attention to the retirement of the debt, we shall continue to have this debt for our children and our children's children to pay. That is the purpose of the amendment I have offered.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I said in my remarks this afternoon that the Secretary of the Treasury ought to make an annual report separately with respect to this sinking fund and the sinking-fund provision, telling the Congress exactly what his actions are under it. This amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky makes it compulsory upon the part of the Secretary of the Treasury to do exactly what I suggested this afternoon, and the committee accept that amendment.

Mr. MANN. Does either the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] or the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] think there will be any money used in the sinking fund for a good while to come?

Mr. KITCHIN. There ought to be, but whether there will be or not will depend very largely on what Congress appropriates for other purposes and the amount of taxes raised.

Mr. MANN. What is there to distinguish between the proposition in this bill for a sinking fund and the proposition in the existing law, except that this requires a little larger sinking fund and hence the money is less likely to be used for that purpose?

Mr. KITCHIN. That can be true if Congress appropriates the money for other purposes and there is no money in the Treasury to be appropriated for the sinking fund, as has been the case since the old sinking-fund act was passed over 40 years ago.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina believe that a majority of the Members of Congress will have the courage to tax the people for a sinking fund under existing conditions?

Mr. KITCHIN. Not now under existing conditions. This sinking-fund requirement begins to operate in the next fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. I know that, but we will be worse off then than we are now. We can not borrow money then to run the Government and will have to raise taxes, while now we are running the Government on borrowed money.

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, it may be a vain hope and almost presumptious, but I do hope the next Congress will reduce expenditures and economize [laughter], and I promise that I am going to help them.

Mr. MANN. Even if we reduce expenditures in the way of appropriations we can not catch up with an extravagant administration and with the appropriations already made which do not lapse.

Mr. KITCHIN. And for which the gentleman and myself voted in nineteen cases out of twenty.

Mr. MANN. I probably would have voted for them, but the gentleman can not say I did, for I was not here; not even the gentleman from Alabama, who explodes on any sort of an occasion.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said is in a measure true; it is unfortunately true that a legislative body rarely has the courage to do what is wise as to finance. But it certainly can not hurt to call attention annually to the condition of our public debt. I am one of the people who believe that a public debt is not a good thing for a nation, and I hope that the Congress will have the wisdom to see to it that our revenues are made sufficient, with an economically administered Government, to provide for a retirement of part of this debt from year to year. If that is not done and the country ever again finds itself faced with the situation which confronted it when the war broke, we shall find that the credit of the Nation will not stand the strain placed upon it.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman tell the House what the practice is in other nations, whether they have provided sinking funds, particularly Great Britain?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not able to advise the gentleman as to the requirements of law.

Mr. DENISON. I know, but do they do it? I am asking for information.

Mr. SHERLEY. I believe the debt of Great Britain has been increasing for many, many years, and has not been reduced; but the condition of this country and the condition of Great Britain are very different. The wealth of this country is amply sufficient, if we honestly and economically administer our trust, to pay part of this debt from year to year without unduly burdening the people.

Mr. DENISON. I agree with the gentleman entirely, but I was asking the question for information.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not familiar with the exact provision of the law of Great Britain with reference to a sinking fund.

Mr. CANNON. I would be glad to ask the chairman of the committee or the gentleman from Kentucky how much is it estimated that the public debt will be when we settle up what we owe.

Mr. KITCHIN. When we settle up what we owe it will be nothing. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Settlement is one thing and payment is another.

Mr. KITCHIN. I know what the gentleman means—when we have ascertained the total amount of our indebtedness.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Take it after the next fiscal year—June 19, 1920—when this sinking fund begins, I would say, in round numbers, $25,000,000,000, and then we might deduct eight and a half billion dollars, the bonds of the allies, which would make, in round numbers, $17,000,000,000, 2½ per cent of that would be added to the sinking fund.

Mr. CANNON. How much would the interest be. I think the gentleman has understated it rather than overstated what we will owe that is unascertained. For a rough guess, I should say we would owe $25,000,000,000.

Mr. KITCHIN. Net, after deducting the foreign loan?

Mr. CANNON. God knows when we are going to get what the allies owe us..

Mr. KITCHIN. If we include the debt of the allies as a part of the net debt, we both agree that it would be at least $25,000,000,000.

Mr. CANNON. And you would figure if the allies pony up it would be about $17,000,000,000?

Mr. KITCHIN. In round numbers, $18,000,000,000.

Mr. CANNON. Eighteen billion dollars, with an average interest of 4 per cent?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; about 4 per cent.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if the gentleman will multiply 18,000,000,000 by 4 per cent—he is good in mathematics—how much will we have to pay in interest?

Mr. KITCHIN. Seven hundred and twenty million dollars.

Mr. CANNON. That is interest, and then when we take all the advances that we make, and we are in the advancing business now—$200,000,000 for roads, $750,000,000 for railroads this year, and if we do not turn them back another $750,000,000 next year. Does the gentleman believe that it is practicable with this great Government that we have, with these unascertained amounts that we will owe, that on top of carrying all their burdens we can add $450,000,000 to the sinking fund?

Mr. KITCHIN. The sinking fund would be $450,000,000.

Mr. CANNON. There is that much added to all other burdens we have. Well, I have no objection to the amendment that the gentleman from Kentucky offers, but it will not pan out.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. What is the opposite of it? Is it the gentleman's idea that we shall forever go on with a debt and never pay it?

Mr. CANNON. My idea is that a hundred years from now this debt may be reduced to some extent, and we may reduce the interest, if we could be economical, by refunding, down to 2½ per cent, and if you remove all taxation from what Uncle Sam owes, both State and National, it may be that you could borrow for 2 per cent.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. What is going to help the credit of the Nation more than a disposition to pay upon the principal of its debt?

Mr. KITCHIN. And what will more appreciate the bonds now being offered?

Mr. CANNON. Cotton after peace has come will sell for 5 and 6 cents a pound.

Mr. KITCHIN. If that should reach our friend HEFLIN it would drive him crazy. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Corn will go to 35 or 40 cents, and when you take the guaranty off wheat—all wheat produced in the countries in the world—if we can get stable government without having to go over there and police them and follow it with millions of dollars of additional indebtedness, wheat will go down to a dollar, and the gentleman will find that the burden will grow and grow, and the only way we can carry this great debt is to reduce the interest as rapidly as possible.

Then, when we are wearing muslin or asbestos halos, everybody in this body—and I trust that the asbestos halos will protect us—the coming Congresses will not perhaps add to the great burden of $400,000,000 or $500,000,000, which means, in addition to all of our burdens, to buy that many bonds or to pay them off. In the Civil War debt we had a sinking fund, and, in the aggregate, that has been kept more than good, because in the gentleman's time in service in this Congress and in mine we have seen, with a great surplus in the Treasury, that a cry was raised to reduce the surplus, and as we reduced the surplus we reduced the debt, so that the sinking fund was more than kept good under those conditions.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I wish I could be as optimistic as my friend, the chairman of the committee, under whom it has been my pleasure to serve for several years, but I can not take the view that the amount of our debt will be as small as he stated. The expenses for the next fiscal year will be somewhere around ten or twelve billion dollars, probably. The gentleman would say only ten. Others who have studied the question carefully think it will be much larger, but the issue of notes we are about to make would only just about take up the amount of our floating indebtedness. I think the gentleman will agree with me on that. We have a floating indebtedness of somewhere around $6,000,000,000.

None of us is probably able to give the exact amount, because the Treasury has not brought its figures down to date, at least so far as I have been able to ascertain. For the next fiscal year, so far as now provided, and so far as the present law exists, there will be only about $4,000,000,000 of taxes to pay ten or twelve billion dollars of expenditures, and there will be some six or eight billion dollars more to add to the figures which my friend from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] just gave, which I think are altogether too small. I do not know where this money is coming from, unless the taxes are raised very much over what our friends on the other side gave us to understand they would be.

In reference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and the sinking fund, so far as I have been able to find out, no Government has ever made a success of a sinking fund. It is true that England did reduce her debts slightly along up until the time of the Boer War, when the debt rose again. So far as the sinking fund is concerned that we established, it has never amounted to anything. We were told that it was a bookkeeping proposition and that we might as well wipe it off, so we did, but I think the amendment offered by the gentleman is an excellent one and ought to prevail. It will force the matter to our attention, and that and the enormous amount of interest that we will pay, which I think will be considerably larger than the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] suggested, would also force on our attention the necessity of reducing this enormous debt. Unless we do have something to call the attention of Congress and of the people of the country to the necessity of reducing the debt, we will certainly get nothing done and nothing would result from this provision. Therefore, I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky is a wise one, as his amendments usually are.

Mr. PLATT. Is it not possible to set aside certain revenues to be converted into a sinking fund, as is often done by municipalities?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think probably that would be even a better plan than the one we have so far, but we will have a little time to reflect upon that. I hope something definite will be done, so that there will be a certainty that this project will be carried out.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. As I understand his statement, his estimate of the total indebtedness after we have settled up the war bills of the Nation will be $25,000,000,000. Is that right?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Including the foreign loans?

Mr. KITCHIN. I fear that the amount will be more than that, but my judgment now is that it will be at least $25,000,000,000.

Mr. DENISON. There is considerable agitation in certain parts of the country among certain elements in favor of the Government taking over and owning the railroads.

Now, as a matter of information to the House and the country, can the gentleman state the amount that would be required to be used by the Government in case that policy should be adopted?

Mr. KITCHIN. Why, I do not know the value of the railroads. I suppose $20,000,000,000 or $25,000,000,000 more.

Mr. DENISON. It has been stated lately $20,000,000,000, and with the Government debt, that would make the Government debt——

Mr. KITCHIN. I confess to the gentleman my opinion about whether the Government will own the railroads or not, I do not think the gentleman need have any fear that Congress——

Mr. DENISON. I do not expect——

Mr. KITCHIN. Is going to pass any act of Government ownership of railroads.

Mr. DENISON. Even now the gentleman knows there is an agitation for it, and there are a great many people who believe in it, and we as Members of the House are getting petitions in favor of it.

Mr. KITCHIN. I hope the next Congress will have the courage to do the right thing and resist these numerous petitions and agitations.

Mr. DENISON. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. KITCHIN. And I will stand with the gentleman on it.

Mr. DENISON. I am glad to hear the gentleman say so. I am sure if the gentleman will use his influence on that side he will add greatly to what some of the rest of us hope to do along that line. If that could be done the total indebtedness of this Government——

Mr. KITCHIN. Would be in and around about $50,000,000,000.

Mr. DENISON. Making the burden absolutely unbearable on the American people.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think so.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest there?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. I am not so optimistic as the gentleman is. Not only that, but there are the telephone and telegraph companies, and so on.

A MEMBER. They do not amount to much.

Mr. CANNON. Do not amount to much, not as things go——

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman ought to have as much confidence in the next Congress as I have got. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Now we have got what? A Republican House and a worse than Democratic Senate. [Laughter.] There is the situation.

Mr. KITCHIN. Why, I do not know. I have understood the Republicans got the Senate, too.

Mr. CANNON. Nay, nay. [Laughter.] You call the roll.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman must impeach some of those gentlemen over there who have been elected as Republicans, then.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I leave it to the country and to the fullness of time. Why, does the gentleman know that the Senate of the United States is going to go the limit to organize the House of Representatives [laughter and applause]—let me finish my remarks—aided by the chairman of the Republican national committee? [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER. That is worse than Cannonism.

Mr. STAFFORD. That out-Herods Herod.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois, if it was a Democratic House in the next Congress, and if the chairman of the Democratic executive committee in the United States or a Democratic Senate were to attempt to organize this House I believe nine-tenths of the Democrats would rise up and denounce it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Now, I want to say this: The greatest autocrat in the United States to-day is a man of very great ability. I am not denying that he is honest, but Samuel Gompers is the greatest autocrat in the Republic, and he demands Government ownership. I get the round robins of all kinds indorsed by the Federation of Labor scattered throughout the country, "We demand that you shall support Government ownership of railroads."

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me tell the gentleman what we shall do in the next Congress. Let you and myself join hands and try to keep the Republican Congress in the next Congress from letting Sam Gompers dictate to us. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Well——

Mr. KITCHIN. Will you join me?

Mr. CANNON. Well, that is in the future. [Laughter.] I would rather see an ounce of accomplishment while you have been in full possession of both House and Senate.

Mr. KITCHIN. You have the evidence that Sam Gompers has not made the Democratic Senate or the Democratic House pass an act for Government ownership. We have stood out against it. If the Republicans of the next House are equally courageous, it will be all right; if not, I suppose some of us Democrats can put courage in them.

Mr. CANNON. We will soon be in a special session, and we will wait and see.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

(b) Sections 3688, 3694, 3695, and 3696 of the Revised Statutes, and so much of section 3689 of the Revised Statutes as provides a permanent annual appropriation of 1 per cent of the entire debt of the United States to be set apart as a sinking fund, are hereby repealed.

SEC. 7. (a) That until the expiration of 18 months after the termination of the war between the United States and the German Government, as fixed by proclamation of the President, the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized on behalf of the United States to establish credits with the United States for any foreign government now engaged in war with the enemies of the United States, for the purpose only of providing for purchases of any property owned directly or indirectly by the United States, not needed by the United States, or of any wheat the price of which has been or may be guaranteed by the United States. To the extent of the credits so established from time to time the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to make advances to or for the account of any such foreign government and to receive at par from such foreign government for the amount of any such advances its obligations hereafter issued bearing such rate or rates of interest, not less than 5 per cent per annum, maturing at such date or dates, not later than October 15, 1938, and containing such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time prescribe. The Secretary, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized to enter into such arrangements from time to time with any such foreign government as may be necessary or desirable for establishing such credits and for the payment of such obligations before maturity.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, just for the purpose of having a record made of it, I move to strike out all on line 7 after the word "scribe" down to and including line 11.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania:

Page 9, after the word "scribe" in line 7, strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to discuss this further than to say that the paragraph proposed to be stricken out reads as follows:

The Secretary, with the approval of the President, is hereby authorized to enter into such arrangements from time to time with any such foreign government as may be necessary or desirable for establishing such credits and for the payment of such obligations before maturity.

While it gives to the Secretary a very wide power in regard to foreign credits which, it seems to me, should not be accorded in this bill, I do not care to discuss it.

Mr. KITCHIN. If I may suggest to the gentleman, I will direct his attention to the words "such credits," in line 10. That refers to credits that he can establish only for the purpose of furnishing the supplies that the Government itself owns.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the very point I have in mind. It has not been clear to me that we were not giving the Secretary, with the approval of the President, power to enter into arrangements apart from those.

Mr. KITCHIN. He could not do it. That word "such" qualifies it. It says "such credits." Now, what credits? Credits to be established only for the purpose of selling the products that belong to the Government. We passed it up all right. I will jog the gentleman's memory. It was in the original draft, but in the committee we put in the word "such" to carry out the object which the gentleman now has in his mind.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am willing to take the gentleman's interpretation of it, but my recollection is that when that was before the committee it was in such form as to give to the Secretary power to make credits in addition to those that were specified.

Mr. KITCHIN. That was in the original bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman so interprets this paragraph, as it now reads, that the Secretary has no extra jurisdiction?

Mr. KITCHIN. Not a bit, except what we give him in the section further on.

Mr. KING. How does the Secretary interpret it?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is a question, whether the law limits the power of the Secretary or not. I am inclined to think, the chairman having called my attention to the word "such," which was not in the original draft but was put in by the committee, it is all right.

Mr. KITCHIN. I assure the gentleman there can not be any possible doubt about that construction.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, in view of the explanation of the chairman of the committee, to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

(c) For the purposes of this section there is appropriated the unexpended balance of the appropriations made by section 2 of the first liberty bond act and by section 2 of the second liberty bond act as amended by the third liberty bond act and the fourth liberty bond act, but nothing in this section shall be deemed to prohibit the use of such unexpended balance or any part thereof for the purposes of section 2 of the second liberty bond act, as so amended, subject to the limitations therein contained.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand this is the section which provides an appropriation for disposing of the note issue herein contemplated. May I ask the chairman of the committee how much in the aggregate is allotted to the Secretary for the purpose of utilizing the machinery that he now has for disposing of this issue of notes?

Mr. KITCHIN. There is appropriated, as the gentleman will recall, in the original act amending that act, $10,000,000,000 to establish credits with the United States in behalf of foreign governments, our allies, and thus far there has been extended a total credit of $8,000,000,000, and they will extend, with the credits now established, about $8,500,000,000, all told, by the time peace is concluded, and that will leave an unexpended balance of $1,500,000,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman discussing the section that was just read—paragraph (c) of section 7?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Subdivision (c) of section 7 on page 7? Is the gentleman right as to that?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. That is the clause appropriating the unexpended balance of that $10,000,000,000 of credits that we authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to establish.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then I have made my inquiry at the wrong place. It is getting late, and perhaps I overlooked that.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 8, section 7, and offer an amendment on line 17.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield the floor?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania yields the floor. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to return to page 8, section 7, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KITCHIN: Page 8, line 17, after the word "establish," insert "in addition to the credits authorized by section 2 of the second liberty bond act as amended."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina. My former inquiry referred to the appropriation made in this bill for utilizing the machinery for the disposal of the loan. I was under the impression that this subdivision (c) covered that point.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is in section 1 of the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How much is available, or will be available when this bill passes, for the disposal of the note issue by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. KITCHIN. One-fifth of 1 per cent, which will make $14,000,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Fourteen million dollars is available to the Secretary of the Treasury now for the purpose of selling the loan?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; for selling $7,000,000,000. If it is $5,000,000,000, it will be only one-fifth of 1 per cent of that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He would be authorized to spend $14,000,000?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. We did not change the language at all or the amount.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman tell how much has already been spent for the purpose of selling the liberty loans?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think for all the loans the amount was about $27,000,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The Treasury report would show. I wanted to get it in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. KITCHIN. I have the report of the Secretary of the Treasury here as to the sale of all the bonds. The total amount expended on all the bonds——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the first, second, third, and fourth?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; the total amount expended was $27,020,201.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, in addition to that $27,000,000, he will have this $14,000,000 for the purpose of disposing of the new issue?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. That is in the same proportion as he has sold heretofore.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That makes $41,000,000?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; for all.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I understood that on the first liberty loan we granted only one-tenth, not one-fifth, of 1 per cent.

Mr. KITCHIN. What I meant to say was the second, third, and fourth liberty loans. It took a greatly less expense in proportion to the amount to put out the first issue than to put out campaigns of four and six and seven billions, because the country had enough money to take up that first issue without any drive at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think it will take as much money now, relatively, as it took to dispose of the others?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think so. I think we will have a harder time than we had during the war to sell $7,000,000,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. At any rate, the gentleman thinks the $14,000,000 will be sufficient for the purposes described, to dispose of this $7,000,000,000 loan?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think so. That is the amount to which he is limited. He could not expend more than that.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will.

Mr. FESS. Is it the purpose of the Treasury Department to undertake a popular loan this time?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The testimony before the committee tended to show that the Treasury Department desired to hold all the machinery that it had been using for the purpose of disposing of loans, and that it would utilize all that machinery to get rid of these notes. Just how far it will go in the matter of public meetings and sending out lecturers and hiring brass bands and providing entertainers and all that sort of thing to dispose of the loan was not developed, but it appeared that the Treasury this time would like to avoid the ostentatious method of disposing of the loan, and would probably utilize the banks a little more fully than it had before.

Mr. KITCHIN. If so, the expense would not be quite as great.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the reason why I thought they might not use so much money relatively as they required before.

Mr. FESS. We are justified, are we not, in the belief that the popular method will not be used to so great an extent as before?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The patriotic fervor has quieted down. Those who were assisting prior to and during the war, those who were socially and patriotically prominent during all these loan demonstrations, those who were cheering our boys in the trenches and attending the public meetings and utilizing the newspapers and public prints, and figuring prominently before the public in this matter, have now rather returned to the social field. There is not so much patriotic enthusiasm as there was before.

Mr. FESS. And the latitude is given to the Secretary of the Treasury to have a higher rate of interest.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the obligations of foreign governments acquired by the Secretary of the Treasury by virtue of the provisions of the first liberty bond act and the second liberty bond act, and amendments and supplements thereto, shall mature at such dates as shall be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That such obligations acquired by virtue of the provisions of the first liberty bond act, or through the conversion of short-time obligations acquired under such act, shall mature not later than June 15, 1947, and all other such obligations of foreign governments shall mature not later than October 15, 1938.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY] was very much interested in this paragraph, but he was obliged to go owing to the lateness of the hour and his physical condition. He was of the opinion that section 8 was intended to validate those informal notes which the Secretary of the Treasury received from the ambassadors on the making of the loans to our allies. He rather contended that we should have taken bonds in accordance with the law, and seemed to think that the law had been violated or winked at by the Secretary of the Treasury in taking these demand notes. He was of the opinion that this section 8 was intended to validate those demand notes. I should like to have the gentleman from North Carolina explain that situation, because I do not understand it as the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY] did.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am sorry that the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY] is not here, because he was wide of the mark in the opinion stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. This section has no such purpose, no such object, and is susceptible of no such construction. The situation is this: In making these loans to the allies during the war the Government took their demand notes, not for any specified time, because they desired after the war was over to see then what would be the best securities to issue in the way of bonds and the interest rate. They were required by the law not to let the maturity be beyond the maturity of our bonds or the interest rate lower than that upon our bonds. But instead of taking long-time bonds, they were authorized also to take notes or short-time obligations, because the act said "obligations"; but they could be converted into long-time bonds. Now, this simply carries out what the act intended and provided for, namely, that the Secretary of the Treasury can convert these short-time obligations which we hold against the foreign governments into bonds that shall mature not later than June 15, 1947. That was the maturity of our bonds issued in 1917. The section provides that all other such obligations of foreign governments shall mature not later than October 15, 1938. That is the maturity of our 4's and the 4½ per cents.

There has been some criticism by gentlemen who did not take time to investigate it with respect to the Government taking these short-time obligations and not converting them. I must confess that I shared in the fear that if they took these short-term obligations there might come a propaganda to give them back to the foreign Governments before they converted them. But I investigated and found there was nothing to that; the Government has not been injured, but has been in the position of being able to demand the money at once. We have their demand notes. If we needed the money, we could demand it now and make them put up, or we could fund the short demand notes into long-time bonds.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The question raised by the gentleman from California was this: The original law directed the Secretary of the Treasury to take obligations of a like character to those issued by the United States, and his contention was that the Secretary really violated the mandate of Congress when he accepted demand notes. And a point further raised by the gentleman from California was that section 8 was intended to validate the illegal act of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. KITCHIN. No; I do not think it bears any such construction.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman thinks it does not bear that construction?

Mr. KITCHIN. No.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have raised the question in justice to the gentleman from California.

Mr. SLOAN. As far as that is concerned, it is not a question concerning money. It is not a question of being able to get the money but these obligations. The fact is that under the theory of the loan we should not take the money, but we were to make the loans with a view of taking the obligations which were to mature at the time the obligations that the American people took from this Government would mature so that in years to come the boys who fought the war will not be called upon to pay the debt then maturing, but will have these foreign bonds maturing at that time to meet the obligations then due.

Mr. KITCHIN. It provides what the gentleman and myself desired and what we discussed several times.

Mr. SLOAN. Yes; and I have been insisting all along that the original purpose should be carried out; not whether we could get something better or whether the Treasury could make some more advantageous arrangement than Congress was making, but that the Treasury should do what Congress said should be done, and not question the wisdom of congressional action.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We are now approaching section 9, and there ought to be some debate on that. It is now 11 o'clock. Can not we come to some understanding that this may go over and be in order to-morrow morning?

Mr. KITCHIN. What I said to the gentleman awhile ago privately I will now state to the committee. Let us read the bill through, and I will demand the previous question on the bill and all amendments, with the understanding that the gentleman from Pennsylvania shall have 10 minutes on this section and the gentleman from Nebraska 5 minutes, and I will take 5 minutes to-morrow.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The motion will be made to strike out sections 9 and 10, and it ought to be explained. We are not asking anything unusual. Will the gentleman concede 20 minutes for discussion?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS. Let me say to the gentleman from North Carolina that I want five minutes on this.

Mr. KITCHIN. Suppose, then, that the gentlemen on that side have 20 minutes?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Four gentlemen on this side have asked for time.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will make it 20 minutes on your side and 15 minutes on this side, with the understanding that the previous question will be ordered on the bill and all amendments, and then the gentleman from Pennsylvania will have 20 minutes on that side on the motion to strike out sections 9 and 10 and I will control 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. If we are to have any understanding, I think we would better have one that is enforcible. The gentleman talks about an understanding about debates on motions to amend. Is this after we get into the House? We can not move the previous question in the committee.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer to the text. I presume I could offer that to-night?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We will make our fight on the motion to strike out.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think we would be able to have this understanding and that nobody would be inclined to break it at all.

Mr. MANN. We could have a unanimous-consent agreement in the committee, but the gentleman spoke of ordering the previous question. You can not do that in committee.

Mr. KITCHIN. No. I intended to ask that, and then have the understanding in the House that we would have 20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and 15 minutes to be controlled on this side.

Mr. MANN. Is that 20 minutes to be in the House or in the committee?

Mr. KITCHIN. We could just as well have it in the House.

Mr. MANN. But if the previous question is ordered you can not move to amend by striking out.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman is going to move to recommit.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. On that motion the gentleman will control 20 minutes and I will control 15 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman makes the motion to recommit, does not that cut off any opportunity to offer amendments to the text?

Mr. MANN. Certainly it would.

Mr. KITCHIN. We might attempt an agreement that we would do it, but I doubt if it would be agreed to. What does the gentleman desire?

Mr. SUMNERS. I only want information.

Mr. KITCHIN. Perhaps I can give it to the gentleman now.

Mr. SUMNERS. First, I would like to know whether or not the Government has lost any money under the operation of this act?

Mr. KITCHIN. Not a cent. Every dollar that it has ever loaned it has received payment for, and I think it has made about $2,000,000 above all expenses.

Mr. SUMNERS. The proposition that strikes my attention most is that we are going to advance money to business concerns engaged in the export business that can not sell their paper in the market unless they pay 1 per cent above what is paid for ordinary commercial paper.

Mr. KITCHIN. Has the gentleman often borrowed money from the bank?

Mr. SUMNERS. Not often. I have tried to a good many times. [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. And he might have offered to give my note or the note of some other man who may be worth $200,000, and the bank would receive it, but you could not sell that note in the market.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How would this arrangement strike the gentleman: That the reading of the bill be completed to-night and all amendments offered that are to be offered, apart from the financial corporation amendment, which will be an amendment to strike out, and that we simply have that one matter before us in the morning, and then read that section for information in the morning, and then go on with the debate?

Mr. KITCHIN. In Committee of the Whole?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Oh, let us finish the reading of the bill to-night in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Perhaps the gentleman might get some instructions from the Senate by the morning.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I rather expect that the instruction would come from the White House than from the Senate.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Which would be the more effective?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I should think that the White House instruction would be.

Mr. KITCHIN. Does the gentleman prefer to have the time we suggested a while ago consumed in the Committee of the Whole in the morning, 20 minutes on his side and 15 minutes on this side?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was suggesting that we finish the reading of the bill to-night and dispose of all amendments, so that when we meet in the morning we could make the motion to recommit and then by agreement have the debate.

Mr. KITCHIN. Would that be satisfactory to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MANN. Anything that is satisfactory to the gentleman from Pennsylvania is satisfactory to me, so long as it is an enforcible agreement.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. When will we have this—in the House or in the committee?

Mr. KITCHIN. We will have 20 minutes on your side of the House and 15 minutes on our side. That will be the same thing.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. But the gentleman from Texas spoke of offering an amendment.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is just to the text, and he can do that to-night.

The Clerk read as follows:

(c) Notwithstanding the limitation of section 1 the advances provided for by this section may be made until the expiration of one year after the termination of the war between the United States and the German Government as fixed by proclamation of the President. Any such advance made by the corporation shall be made upon the promissory note or notes of the borrower, with full and adequate security in each instance by indorsement, guaranty, or otherwise. The corporation shall retain power to require additional security at any time. The corporation, in its discretion, may, upon like security, extend the time of payment of any such advance through renewals, the substitution of new obligations, or otherwise, but the time for the payment of any such advance shall not be extended beyond five years from the date on which it was originally made.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Page 13, line 15, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"(d) Article 7 of the espionage act, approved June 15, 1917, is hereby repealed."

Mr. KITCHIN. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina makes the point of order.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will reserve the point of order for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina make the point of order?

Mr. KITCHIN. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is understood that we will have the right to move to strike out the sections.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the various amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

We will have the understanding referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] when we get into the House.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with certain amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the committee rose; and Mr. FOSTER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16136) to amend the liberty bond acts and the War Finance Corporation act, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same to the House with certain amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. Let us dispose of the amendments first and then agree about the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Now, let us have an arrangement. I ask unanimous consent, first, that, if the bill be ordered to third reading, after the third reading the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] have the right to offer a motion to recommit by striking out sections 9 and 10, and that there be 35 minutes' debate upon that motion, 20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and 15 minutes by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], and that at the end of that time the previous question be considered as ordered to final vote on the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. And the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that, if the bill be engrossed and read a third time, the gentleman from Pennsylvania shall have the right to offer a motion to recommit to strike out sections 9 and 10, and upon that question there shall be 35 minutes of debate, 20 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and 15 minutes by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN].

Mr. MANN. And at the end of that time the previous question to be considered as ordered on the motion to recommit and on the bill to final passage.

Mr. FESS. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if somebody opposed to the bill would like to make a motion to recommit would this supersede it?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. If that is the rule of the House, can you set it aside?

Mr. MANN. By unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following telegram:

SAVANNAH, MO., February 25, 1919.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The health of my family makes it impossible for me to be with you on March 1.

C. F. BOOHER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOWELL, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence indefinitely on account of illness.

REPORT OF DIRECTORS PANAMA RAILROAD CO. (S. DOC. NO. 415).

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Congress, the Sixty-ninth Annual Report of the Board of Directors of the Panama Railroad Co. for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 25 February, 1919.

ACTS, ETC., NINTH LEGISLATURE OF PORTO RICO (S. DOC. NO. 416).

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and ordered printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 23 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith copies of the acts and resolutions enacted by the ninth Legislature of Porto Rico during its second special session, November 26 to December 7, 1918.

These acts and resolutions have not previously been transmitted to Congress and none of them have been printed.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 25 February, 1919.

FRANCHISES BY PUBLIC-SERVICE COMMISSION, PORTO RICO (S. DOC. NO. 417).

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and ordered printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 38 of the act approved March 2, 1917 (39 Stat., 951), entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," I have the honor to transmit herewith certified copies of each of five franchises granted by the Public Service Commission of Porto Rico. The copies of the franchises inclosed are described in the accompanying letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting them to me.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 25 February, 1919.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE—ALASKA ENGINEERING COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and ordered printed and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Territories.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the report of the Alaskan Engineering Commission for the year ended December 31, 1918.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 25 February, 1919.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 10225. An act striking from the pension roll the name of Jennie M. Heath;

H. R. 12995. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a combined bridge and dam across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio;

H. R. 13369. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Connecticut River between Springfield and West Springfield, in Hampden County, Mass.;

H. R. 13427. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Allegheny, Pa., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Monongahela River at or near the borough of Wilson, in the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania;

H. R. 13393. An act to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act to authorize the city of South Sioux City, in the State of Nebraska, to construct a bridge across the Missouri River between the States of Nebraska and Iowa," approved April 22, 1912;

H. R. 13647. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Allegheny, Pa., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near McKees Rocks Borough, in the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania;

H. R. 14555. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Board of Supervisors of Itawamba County, Miss., to construct a bridge across the Tombigbee River at or near Barrs Ferry, in said county;

H. R. 4246. An act to increase the salary of the United States district attorney for the district of Connecticut;

H. R. 13649. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Allegheny, Pa., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny river at or near Sixteenth Street, in the city of Pittsburgh, county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; and

H. R. 13648. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Allegheny, Pa., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River at or near Millvale Borough, in the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 26, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Postmaster General submitting additional deficiency estimates of appropriation required by the Postal Service, payable from postal revenues, for the fiscal year 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1536, pt. 2), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MONTAGUE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 382) directing the United States Coast Guard to resume its operations under the Treasury Department, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1135), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. RAYBURN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15837) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1136), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. COLLIER, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16137) to provide for the entry under bond of exhibits of arts, sciences, and industries, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1137), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SLAYDEN, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 125) authorizing the Joint Committee on the Library to provide for the restoration and completion of the historical frieze in the rotunda of the Capitol, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1139), which said resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4562) to reimburse Horace A. Choumard, chaplain in Twenty-third Infantry, for loss of certain personal property, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1140), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WELLING, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5007) to reimburse Isaac A. Gibbs for damages arising from the destruction of a ford across the Hocking River in Athens County, Ohio, due to backwater created by the construction of Lock and Dam No. 20 on the Ohio River, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1141), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LITTLE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 5511) for the relief of Leonidas H. Sawyer, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1142), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12958) granting a pension to Clem S. Kirkham, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. OLNEY: A bill (H. R. 16160) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the cities of Brockton and Quincy, Mass., each one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16161) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the towns of Dedham, Randolph, and Stoughton, Mass., each one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16162) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to that part of Boston known as Hyde Park, Mass., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16163) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the towns of Easton, Norwood, and Canton, Mass., each one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16164) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the towns of Abington, Foxboro, and Sharon, Mass., each one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WEBB: A bill (H. R. 16165) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Newton, in the State of North Carolina, two German cannons or fieldpieces, with carriage and suitable complement of projectiles; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KING: A bill (H. R. 16166) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the town of Abingdon, Ill., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HICKS: A bill (H. R. 16167) directing the Secretary of War to grant an honorable discharge to Jerome Fribourg; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16168) directing the Secretary of War to grant an honorable discharge to Lieut. G. S. Silliman; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16169) directing the Secretary of War to grant an honorable discharge to John J. Blumberg; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BACHARACH: A bill (H. R. 16170) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Tuckahoe, N. J., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16171) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Riverside, N. J., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TILSON: A bill (H. R. 16172) to provide for raising, educating, and training officers sufficient for 25 reserve divisions annually, to organize and train 25 reserve divisions annually, and to provide for higher military training for selected officers required for the Regular Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DALE: A bill (H. R. 16179) donating a captured German cannon or field gun and carriage to the town of Canaan, Vt., for decorative purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GOULD: Resolution (H. Res. 608) directing the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives to investigate and report to the House of Representatives certain information with reference to the Government of Costa Rica; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. PARK: Resolution (H. Res. 609) to pay Hon. JAMES WICKERSHAM a stationery allowance; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. LUNN: Resolution (H. Res. 610) favoring the establishment in Palestine of a national home for Jewish people; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. CRAMTON: Resolution (H. Res. 611) providing for an investigation of charges of Dr. Spillman, concerning the Secretary of Agriculture; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. EMERSON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 435) authorizing the use of a return-to-service flag; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRUMBAUGH: Memorial from the Legislature of the State of Ohio, relative to good roads in Ohio; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma: Memorial from the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, relating to the distribution of relics of the late war for the commemoration of soldier boys; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DILLON: Memorial from the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, in regard to the St. Lawrence River; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, memorial from the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, petitioning Congress to change the name of the Panama Canal to the "Roosevelt Canal"; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. McARTHUR: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, urging legislation for the improvement of Oregon harbors and Yaquina River, Oregon; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BACHARACH: A bill (H. R. 16173) granting a pension to Rosa Fitzpatrick; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CALDWELL: A bill (H. R. 16174) for the relief of Thomas F. Nicholas; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DENISON: A bill (H. R. 16175) granting a pension to Ella B. Dryden; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 16176) granting a pension to Thirza M. Dolph; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 16177) granting a pension to Melville C. Sullivan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McCULLOCH: A bill (H. R. 16178) granting an increase of pension to James H. Lockwood; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Petition of J. C. Doty and 311 other citizens of Mount Vernon, Ohio, in favor of Government ownership of railroads; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. AYRES: Petition of Knights of Columbus, Newton Council, No. 976, Newton, Kans., urging President Wilson to use his great powers to grant self-determination for the people of Ireland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. BRUMBAUGH: Petition of National Live Stock Shippers' League, the American National Live Stock Association, the Association of Grain Shippers, Independent Oil Refiners, Iowa Corn Belt Meat Producers, Louisville and Nashville Live Stock Exchanges, and Southern Cattlemen, asking that further continuance of Federal control of railroads be subject to jurisdiction of Interstate Commerce Commission; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ELSTON: Petition of City Federation of Women's Clubs, San Francisco, indorsing proposed league of nations; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. EMERSON: Petition of adjutant general of Ohio, concerning the organization of the National Guard; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Farmers' Institute at Claredon, Ohio, urging deportation of aliens who asked for exemption during the war; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. ESCH: Petition of American Committee for Independence of Armenia, urging peace conference to make requisite arrangements for helping Armenia to establish an independent republic; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of Helen Gilmer Brown, president National Board Woman's Land Army of America, New York; Switchmen's Union, Local 173, La Salle, Ill.; and Tessier McLain, publisher Daily Post, La Salle, Ill., urging continuance of Employment Bureau and appropriation for same; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. GALLIVAN: Petition of Telephone Operators' Department, Julia S. O'Connor, department president, Boston, Mass.; Local Council of Women, Rhode Island, Gertrude J. Jennings, president; Committee on Women in Industry of Maryland Council of Defense, Margaret G. Blackly, executive secretary, urging an appropriation which will insure continuance of woman in industry service; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, petition of Sioux Guggsby, W. S. Sloane, Harry White, and W. C. Buchanan, of Sioux Falls, S. Dak.; Watertown Chamber of Commerce, Watertown, S. Dak.; and Frank R. Barnard, secretary World War Victory Association, New York, urging continuance of United States Employment Service; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. HERSEY: Petition of C. J. Vafiades and 64 other residents of Bangor, Me., and resolutions passed by the Pan-Epirotic Union of America, declaring that northern Epirus is a Greek Province and that it should be reunited with Greece; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Petition of various citizens of Vancouver, Wash., favoring the repeal of the zone system of postage charges on periodicals; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LONERGAN: Petition of citizens of Ansonia, Derby, and Shelton, Conn., relating to self-determination for Ireland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. ROGERS: Petition of Trades and Labor Council of Lowell, Mass., requesting that a Federal department of education be created, as the Towner educational bill (H. R. 15400), and protesting against attitude of Postmaster General in refusing to recognize union of telephone workers or petition for increase in wages; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: Petition of W. McLaughlin and 40 other citizens of Battle Creek, Mich., in favor of Federal employment bureau; to the Committee on Labor.

Also, petition of citizens of Kalamazoo, Mich., favoring enactment of bill providing for Government ownership of railroads; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 26, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we desire to stand before Thee in the council of universal and eternal justice. We have dared to erect our Government upon the basis which Thou hast laid down in Thy Holy Word. We have dared to follow the guidance of Thy spirit in the construction of our policy. We have dared to voice Thy Word as our message to the world. We pray that Thou wilt keep us true to the divine commission Thou hast put into our hands. Give us the zest to work out the plan of life to bring the largest measure of happiness and prosperity and peace to all the people. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SHEPPARD and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Nelson	Smoot
Baird	Hale	New	Spencer
Bankhead	Harding	Norris	Sterling
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Nugent	Sutherland
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	Overman	Swanson
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Page	Thomas
Colt	Kellogg	Penrose	Thompson
Culberson	Kendrick	Poindexter	Townsend
Cummins	Kenyon	Pollock	Trammell
Curtis	La Follette	Pomerene	Underwood
Dillingham	Lewis	Ransdell	Vardaman
Fernald	Lodge	Reed	Walsh
Fletcher	McCumber	Robinson	Warren
France	McKellar	Shafroth	Weeks
Frelinghuysen	McLean	Sheppard	Williams
Gay	McNary	Sherman
Gerry	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Gore	Moses	Smith, S. C.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. GOFF] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] are detained on official business.

Mr. POMERENE. The senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is absent on account of illness, and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] are detained on official business.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is necessarily detained on public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

COST OF THE WAR (S. DOC. NO. 419).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 15, 1918, certain information relative to the cost to the Navy Department of the war with Germany and her allies, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

WORK IN SHIPYARDS AT SEATTLE, WASH. (S. DOC. NO. 420).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Director General of the United States Shipping Board, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 11th instant, certain information regarding labor in shipyards at Seattle, Wash., which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. POINDEXTER subsequently said:

I ask unanimous consent that the communication from the Director General of the United States Shipping Board in response to Senate resolution 448, which was handed down by the Chair to-day, be printed in the RECORD. I understand it was ordered printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The communication is as follows:

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
EMERGENCY FLEET CORPORATION,
Philadelphia, Pa., February 24, 1919.

To the SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN: Senate resolution No. 448 requested the United States Shipping Board "to inform the Senate whether or not workmen who are willing to work in shipyards at Seattle, Wash., having Government contracts are allowed to do so, or given the opportunity to do so, whether such workmen belong to a labor union or not; and if those who belong to a labor union or those who do not belong to a labor union and who are willing to work at the wages established by the so-called Macy award are not allowed to work in said yards upon said Government contracts, the Shipping Board is requested to inform the Senate why and upon what grounds they are not allowed to so work and by whom they are prevented from so doing."

The following statement of facts, I believe, covers the information called for:

1. It is a fact that in the Seattle shipyards none but union men or those having permits from the unions were employed, and it is also true that men who did not belong to the unions or who did not have permits from the unions could not find employment in such yards.

2. The reason for this situation is that at the time of our entrance into the war the shipyards in Seattle, Wash., were union shipyards, or what is sometimes called "closed" yards.

3. It has been reported on good authority that the United States Employment Agency at Seattle was completely under the domination of the union element and that it did not lend itself to the employment of any but union men.

The War Labor Conference Board, composed of representatives of employers, of employees, and the public, which was called into being on the invitation of the Secretary of Labor, adopted as one of its principles to guide the labor policy of the country the following statements:

1. "In establishments where the union shop exists the same shall continue and the union standards as to wages, hours of labor, and other conditions of employment shall be maintained.

2. "In establishments where union and nonunion men and women now work together and the employer meets only with employees or representatives engaged in said establishments, the continuance of such conditions shall not be deemed a grievance."

The report of this board was proclaimed by the President of the United States on April 8, 1918, as a statement which should guide industrial relationships during the war.

The policy laid down by the War Labor Conference Board and proclaimed by the President was adopted and the language incorporated verbatim by the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation in general order 91 under date of July 5, 1918.

The Shipbuilding Labor Adjustment Board in its decision of October 24, 1918, made the following declaration concerning union or nonunion men:

"The board will not tolerate any discrimination either on the part of employers or employees between union and nonunion men, provided that this declaration is to be interpreted so as to conform with the principles laid down by the President of the United States in the proclamation of April 8, 1918, creating the National War Labor Board."

I am inclosing a copy of General Order 91 of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation.

I hope that this information is adequate.

Very truly, yours,

CHARLES PIEZ,
Director General.

General Order No. 91.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
EMERGENCY FLEET CORPORATION,
Philadelphia, July 5, 1918.

Subject: Labor policy.

(a) The executive officers of the Emergency Fleet Corporation are hereby notified of the promulgation of a general labor policy. This policy, as it is stated in section (d) of this general order, shall become the basis of the labor program of the Emergency Fleet Corporation. The administrations of this policy centers in the Director of Industrial Relations.

(b) This announcement of general policy is made in order that the numerous perplexing questions regarding labor problems, which are continually demanding attention, may be dealt with in a consistent and uniform manner by the officers of the corporation. The maintenance of right relations between employers and workers is essential to the maximum effectiveness of our great enterprise. The morale of all the forces upon which the success of our shipbuilding program so vitally depends may be greatly improved by a reasonable and consistent handling of our labor problems, and it may be seriously impaired by a confused and inconsistent labor policy.

(c) It is clear that the Emergency Fleet Corporation can have no separate labor policy. The Emergency Fleet Corporation is an arm of the National Government for the performance of certain special functions during the present emergency. For the general lines of its policy upon labor problems, as upon many other matters, it must look to the larger national program. The labor policy of the Emergency Fleet Corporation must be in harmony with such expressions of policy on this subject as may have been laid down by the agencies responsible for the development of the national labor program.

The most authoritative expression of a national labor program that has been formulated to the present time is the report of the War Labor Conference Board, dated March 29, 1918. This report has received the approval of the Secretary of Labor and has been proclaimed by the President of the United States. The principles and policies therein set forth are accordingly to be accepted as the basis of the national labor program.

(d) The Emergency Fleet Corporation accepts the statement of principles and policies laid down by the War Labor Conference Board as a component part of its own program. Their execution for shipyard workers will be in terms of the rulings of the Shipbuilding Labor Adjustment Board. These principles and policies are as follows (quoting directly from the report of the War Labor Conference Board as proclaimed by the President of the United States).

PRINCIPLES AND POLICIES TO GOVERN RELATIONS BETWEEN WORKERS AND EMPLOYERS IN WAR INDUSTRIES FOR THE DURATION OF THE WAR.

THERE SHOULD BE NO STRIKES OR LOCKOUTS DURING THE WAR.

Right to organize: 1. The right of workers to organize in trade-unions and to bargain collectively through chosen representatives is recognized and affirmed. This right shall not be denied, abridged, or interfered with by the employers in any manner whatsoever.

2. The right of employers to organize in associations of groups and to bargain collectively through chosen representatives is recognized and affirmed. This right shall not be denied, abridged, or interfered with by the workers in any manner whatsoever.

3. Employers should not discharge workers for membership in trade-unions nor for legitimate trade-union activities.

4. The workers, in the exercise of their right to organize, shall not use coercive measures of any kind to induce persons to join their organizations nor to induce employers to bargain or deal therewith.

Existing conditions: 1. In establishments where the union shop exists the same shall continue, and the union standards as to wages, hours of labor, and other conditions of employment shall be maintained.

2. In establishments where union and nonunion men and women now work together, and the employer meets only with employees or representatives engaged in said establishments, the continuance of such conditions shall not be deemed a grievance. This declaration, however, is not intended in any manner to deny the right or discourage the practice of the formation of labor unions or the joining of the same by the workers in said establishments, as guaranteed in the last paragraph, nor to prevent the War Labor Board from urging or any umpire from granting, under the machinery herein provided, improvement of their situation in the matter of wages, hours of labor, or other conditions as shall be found desirable from time to time.

3. Established safeguards and regulations for the protection of the health and safety of workers shall not be relaxed.

Women in industry: If it shall become necessary to employ women on work ordinarily performed by men, they must be allowed equal pay for equal work and must not be allotted tasks disproportionate to their strength.

Hours of labor: The basic eight-hour day is recognized as applying in all cases in which existing law requires it. In all other cases the question of hours of labor shall be settled with due regard to governmental necessities and the welfare, health, and proper comfort of the workers.

Maximum production: The maximum production of all war industries should be maintained and methods of work and operation on the part of employers or workers which operate to delay or limit production, or which have a tendency to artificially increase the cost thereof, should be discouraged.

Mobilization of labor: For the purpose of mobilizing the labor supply with a view to its rapid and effective distribution, a permanent list of the number of skilled and other workers available in different parts of the Nation shall be kept on file by the Department of Labor, the information to be constantly furnished—

1. By the trade-unions.

2. By State employment bureaus and Federal agencies of like character.

3. By the managers and operators of industrial establishments throughout the country.

These agencies shall be given opportunity to aid in the distribution of labor as necessity demands.

Custom of localities: In fixing wages, hours, and conditions of labor, regard should always be had to the labor standards, wage scales, and other conditions prevailing in the localities affected.

The living wage: 1. The right of all workers, including common laborers, to a living wage is hereby declared.

2. In fixing wages, minimum rates of pay shall be established which will insure the subsistence of the worker and his family in health and reasonable comfort.

CHARLES PIEZ, Vice President.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 5627. An act to fix the time of holding court in the Amarillo division of the northern district of Texas;

H. R. 13037. An act to amend the fiftieth article of war;

H. R. 13306. An act to authorize the payment of allotments out of the pay of enlisted men in certain cases in which these payments have been discontinued; and

H. R. 13366. An act permitting any person who has served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the present war to retain his uniform and personal equipment, and to wear the same under certain conditions.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I send to the desk certain action of cotton merchants and exporters, of certain bankers and members of the clearing house and of the cotton exchange of the city of Savannah, Ga., calling for relief of the telegraph, telephone, and cable systems from governmental control. I should like to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SAVANNAH, GA., February 24, 1919.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned cotton merchants and exporters of the city of Savannah, Ga., having in mind the necessity of quick and accurate telegraph service in the conduct of our business, protest against further control of telegraph, telephone, and cable system by the Government. We are opposed to Government ownership and operation. We want competition in telegraph service, and favor return of wire properties to their owners immediately that we may again have competition.

S. John McLaughlin; Anderson Clayton & Co., by Fred Cockrell; Geo. H. McFadden & Bro.; J. K. Livingston & Co.; E. W. Rosenthal & Co.; J. W. Gleason; Chas. G. Bell; Perce & Battey; Taylor Cotton Co.; Cabell & Peck; J. M. Lang & Co.; N. P. Sloan & Co.; J. R. Young Co.; Southern Cotton Oil Co., by G. F. Tennile, vice president; Gordon-Smart Co.; Stewart-Morehead Co.; Henry W. Frost & Co.; Mutual Fertilizer Co.; Phosphate Mining Co.; M. M. Stewart, mayor of Savannah.

—

SAVANNAH, GA., February 24, 1919.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

The Morning News feels sure the interests of the public will be better served by operation of wire services by private hands than by Government ownership. So far as we have been able to determine, sentiment in Savannah is very much opposed to the latter and favors as speedy a return as is possible of telephone, telegraph, and cable lines to their private owners.

SAVANNAH MORNING NEWS.

—

SAVANNAH, GA., February 25, 1919.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned bankers and members of the Clearing House Association of the city of Savannah, Ga., being convinced that the business interests of our city would be better served if telegraph, telephone, and cable systems were removed from Government operation and returned to owners, respectfully urge your best efforts to this end.

Liberty Bank & Trust Co., by Henry Blun, president; the Exchange Bank, A. J. Garfunkel, vice president; Savannah Bank & Trust Co., by W. F. McCauley, president; Mercantile Bank & Trust Co., by A. Rauzin, president; Commercial Bank of Savannah, Ga., by J. H. H. Entleman, president; Chatham Bank & Trust Co., by F. W. Clarke, vice president; People's Bank of Savannah, by A. E. Pierce, vice president.

—

SAVANNAH, GA., February 25, 1919.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

It is our opinion that the business interests everywhere will be better served by telegraph, telephone, and cable systems if these properties are returned to owners. We are opposed to prolonging Government control of wire companies now that the emergency for taking them over exists no longer.

Lamborn & Co.; Savannah Sugar Refining Corporation, W. S. Pardonner, treasurer; Taggart Coal Co., G. I. Taggart, president; Columbia Naval Stores Co., J. C. Nash, vice president; Southern States Naval Stores Co., O. M. McIntosh, treasurer; Bright Brooks Lumber Co., W. P. Brooks; Antwerp Naval Stores Co., C. Pfau, vice president; Walker Lumber & Timber Co., H. G. Strachan; Savannah River Lumber Co., Edwin Shaw, treasurer.

—

SAVANNAH, GA., February 25, 1919.

Senator HOKE SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

The board of directors of the Savannah Cotton Exchange, after free and full discussion, is of the opinion that the cotton and business interests of the South would be better served if the telegraph, telephone, and cable services were removed from Government operation and returned to private ownership, and we believe that this should be brought about as quickly as possible.

SAVANNAH COTTON EXCHANGE,
A. J. RICH, President.

Mr. GRONNA. Without expressing my approval, I present resolutions from the Fargo Association of Credit Men, of North Dakota, with reference to the league of nations. I ask that they may be read.

There being no objection, the resolutions were read, as follows:

FARGO ASSOCIATION OF CREDIT MEN,
Fargo, N. Dak., February 21, 1919.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Your attention is called to the following resolution which was adopted by the Fargo Association of Credit Men on the 18th instant, and we strongly urge your favorable consideration of the same:

"Whereas it has come to the attention of the Fargo Association of Credit Men that there will be opposition in the Congress of the United States to the plan for a league of nations now being considered by the peace conference; and

"Whereas, after careful and due deliberation, we believe the league of nations plan is entitled to the support of every loyal American as the only means of fulfilling our aims and promises in entering the war, and that the treaty should be approved and ratified by Congress: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we respectfully urge our representatives in Congress to use their best efforts to the end that the plan may receive the approval and ratification of Congress.

"Resolved also, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each of our Senators and Representatives."

Respectfully, yours, H. L. LOOMIS, Secretary.

Mr. GRONNA. I send to the desk certain clippings from associations relative to the zone system and the rates of postage. I ask that the one I have marked be printed in the RECORD, and that the others be noted.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Capital Daily Press, Bismarck, N. Dak., Sunday morning, Jan. 26, 1919.]

The People's Press Association meeting was brought to a successful close last evening after an interesting business session held at the parlors of the McKenzie Hotel.

The day's program was a very profitable one, the morning session being called at 9 o'clock.

The following resolutions were read and unanimously adopted at the session last night:

"Whereas the People's Press Association has held its annual meeting, which has proved an inspiration to every member present because it has resulted in an interchange of free expression of opinion unhampered by the restraints which formerly proved a stultifying influence on the press of the State; and

"Whereas the country press, generally speaking, is paying the Government the cost of transporting their papers through the mails; and

"Whereas it is but fair that the magazines, periodicals, and larger city papers should do likewise; and

"Whereas until the passage of the present zone second-class postage law the Government was sustaining a loss of near $80,000,000 annually in carrying and distribution of second-class mail; and

"Whereas under the present law the Government is still sustaining a loss of millions of dollars annually in the handling of second-class mail, although the amount of losses will be somewhat reduced when the present law becomes fully in effect: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the People's Press Association of North Dakota is emphatically opposed to the repeal of the present law or the change proposed by the Senate amendment now pending in conference committee of Congress, which proposes a return of the flat pound rate.

"Resolved, That this association strongly appeals to the North Dakota Members of the Congress and United States Senate to oppose the present attempt to change the law and urges them to use their influence to defeat the same, for the reason that the proposed law is wholly in the interest of the magazines, periodicals, and big city newspapers and will not only work to the injury of the country press by taking from it subscriptions and advertising, but will enable mail-order houses to destroy the trade of country merchants, upon whom country newspapers are largely dependent for advertising."

Mr. GRONNA presented memorials from the Vitascope, of Rector, Ark.; the Eddyville Enterprise, of Eddyville, Nebr.; and the Quincy Journal, of Quincy, Ill., remonstrating against the repeal of the zone system of postage rates, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Spring Valley, Ill., praying for the loan by the War Department of certain machine tools, etc., to trade and technical schools and universities of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. NELSON presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from sundry citizens of Minneapolis, Duluth, Virginia, Waseca, and St. Paul, all in the State of Minnesota, praying for the continuance of the United States Employment Service, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from the Strong-Scott Manufacturing Co., of Minneapolis, Minn., praying that an investigation be made before appropriating any funds for the continuance of the United States Employment Service, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of Pennington County Law Enforcement League, of Minnesota, praying for the enactment of legislation to enforce war-time prohibition when it becomes effective, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the City Council of Pittsfield, Mass., and a petition of sundry citizens of Quincy House, Mass., praying for the granting of six months' additional pay to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Council No. 74, Knights of Columbus, of Cambridge, Mass., praying for the freedom of Ireland, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of the Franklin County Ministers' Association; of the New England Hardware Dealers' Association; of the congregation of the First Congregational Church, of Greenfield; of the congregation of the Melrose Highlands Congregational Church, of Melrose; of the John Hallas Club of the Pilgrim Congregational Church, of Fall River; of the congregation of the Allston Congregational Church, of Boston; of the congregation of the Congregational Church of Concord Junction; of the Church of the Disciples Branch of the Woman's Alliance, of Boston; of the New England Women's Club, of Boston; of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, of Boston; of Local Grange No. 118, Patrons of Husbandry, of Southborough; of sundry students of Boston University; and of sundry citizens of North Adams, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the establishment of a league of nations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. KELLOGG presented a telegram from the mayor of St. Paul and resolutions and memorials from sundry citizens of Minneapolis, Virginia, Duluth, and St. Paul, all in the State of Minnesota, relative to the continuance of the United States Employment Service, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of the Industrial Club of Cheyenne, Wyo., praying that the return to private ownership of telephone, telegraph, and cable systems be deferred until Congress shall have studied the question and determined upon a proper and safe procedure to be thereafter followed, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Local Union No. 356, United Mine Workers of America, of Conroy, Wyo., favoring Government ownership of railroads, express companies, and telephone and telegraph lines, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BRANDEGEE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 1456) making appropriation for expenses incurred under the treaty of Washington, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 775) thereon.

Mr. KENYON, from the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15495) to amend an act to provide for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 774) thereon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported an amendment providing that all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors shall be included in the promotion of training and instruction by the public schools authorized by subdivision 9 of section 1 of the act of May 9, 1918, etc., intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed, which was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 24th instant proposing to appropriate $1,200 to pay Dennis M. Kerr for extra services rendered the Committee on Pensions, etc., reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed, which was agreed to.

RED LAKE RIVER BRIDGE, MINNESOTA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 15834) to extend the time for the construction by Kratka Township of a bridge across the Red Lake River, in Pennington County, Minn., and I submit a report (No. 772) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress approved February 19, 1917, to be built by Kratka Township at or near the section line between sections 20 and 21, township 153 north, range 41 west of the fifth principal meridian, in the county of Pennington, in the State of Minnesota, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WAR RISK BUREAU.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I report back favorably with an amendment from the Committee on Finance the bill (S. 5517) to amend the war-risk insurance act, and I submit a report (No. 773) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. It is unanimously reported now from the Finance Committee. It simply modifies the control of the War Risk Bureau by putting the director in charge of all the divisions. I have submitted it to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], who thought he had constituents opposed to it. He has examined it, and all opposition to it has been withdrawn.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is unanimous consent asked for the consideration of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest that the bill be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. The amendment of the committee is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the second paragraph of section 1 of the war-risk insurance act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That until such time as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct otherwise, and subject to the provisions of section 9 hereof, there shall be in such bureau a Division of Marine and Seamen's Insurance and a Division of Military and Naval Insurance."

SEC. 2. That hereafter all payments of military and naval family allowances provided for in the said war-risk insurance act shall be made upon and in accordance with awards by the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and all laws inconsistent with this section are hereby so modified as to conform to the provisions hereof.

SEC. 3. That hereafter all investigations and reinvestigations and awards and modified awards required by the provisions of section 210 of the said war-risk insurance act shall be made by the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and the said section 210 is hereby so modified as to conform to the provisions hereof.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I should like to have the Senator from Georgia explain what change the bill makes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is the purpose of the bill to abolish the office of the Commissioner of Marine and Seamen's Insurance and the office of the Commissioner of Military and Naval Insurance and to transfer the powers and duties pertaining to both of said offices to the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. This will centralize in the director the full responsibility for the work of the bureau. Under the law as it now stands the work of the Division of Marine and Seamen's Insurance will be suspended after the war and only that of the Division of Military and Naval Insurance left. In abolishing these offices it is necessary to make certain readjustments in other sections of the war-risk insurance act, particularly in reference to payments of family allowances, which are now made under awards by the Commissioner of Military and Naval Insurance, and with respect to investigations now made by the Commissioner of Military and Naval Insurance. These powers must be retained and should be vested in the director, as is done by this amendment.

This amendment has the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, of the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and of the Commissioner of Military and Naval Insurance, who has held that office since its creation, and who has asked to be relieved of his duties. The office of the Commissioner of Marine and Seamen's Insurance has never been filled.

In abolishing these offices it is necessary to make certain readjustments, and the real object of the bill is practically what I have just stated.

Mr. CURTIS. I could not hear the reading of the bill. I caught something about allowances. Does that have reference to allowances to widows?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is put directly under the charge of the director.

Mr. CURTIS. That is, those who have insurance in the Navy and in the Army will be under the Director of War Risk Insurance?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The director of the bureau.

Mr. CURTIS. It is proposed to put the three divisions into one. Is that correct?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; and I want to say that I think the new director is a very able man. I can already discover substantial improvement in the management of the bureau.

Mr. CURTIS. Of course, the Senator will realize that there ought to be improvement, because there has been such great delay in paying allowances.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In saying that there is improvement, I thought I was bringing gratifying news to the Senate, because all of us have felt that there was room for it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MORGAN MUNITION PLANT EXPLOSION.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. On behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs, I submit a report (No. 776) in pursuance of Senate resolution No. 317.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask what the report covers?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It covers an investigation by the subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs in regard to the fire at the Morgan munition plant and the storage of explosives in the harbors of New York and New Jersey.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the report be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think that it is in order now to consider the report if there is objection, and I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a document. Shall it be read? [Putting the question.] The noes have it, and it will not be read.

OWNER OF STEAMSHIP "MATOA."

Mr. WEEKS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4517) for the relief of the owner of the steamship Matoa.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owner of the steamship Matoa, arising out of a collision between said steamship and the United States tug Lucille Ross off Lambert Point, Va., on the 17th day of January, 1918, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owner of said steamship Matoa by reason of damages to and detention of said steamship may be submitted to the United States Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due, either for or against the United States upon the same principle and measure of liability with costs as in like cases in admiralty between private parties with the same rights of appeal.

SEC. 2. That should damages be found to be due from the United States to the owner of said steamship Matoa, the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That such suit shall be brought and commenced within four months after the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That the mode of service of process shall conform to the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the United States."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SCHOONER "HORATIO G. FOSS."

Mr. WEEKS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 5443) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Horatio G. Foss.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the bill may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owners of the schooner Horatio G. Foss, arising out of a collision between said schooner and the U. S. collier Jupiter, off Winter Quarter Light Vessel on the 18th day of May, 1918, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owners of said schooner Horatio G. Foss by reason of damages to and detention of said schooner, may be submitted to the United States court for the district of Massachusetts under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any, shall be found to be due either for or against the United States, upon the same principle and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same rights of appeal.

SEC. 2. That should damages be found to be due from the United States to the owners of said schooner Horatio G. Foss, the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That such suit shall be brought and commenced within four months after the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That the mode of service of process shall conform to the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the United States."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEAM LIGHTER "CORNELIA."

Mr. WEEKS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 5442) for the relief of the owner of the steam lighter Cornelia.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the bill may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owner of the steam lighter Cornelia rising out of a collision between said steam lighter and the U. S. destroyer Bell in Broad Sound, Boston Harbor, Mass., on the 9th day of August, 1918, for and on account of the losses suffered in said collision by the owner of said steam lighter Cornelia by reason of damages and detention of or the loss of said steam lighter, her boats, engines, boilers, tackle, apparel, furniture, and supplies, may be submitted to the United States court for the district of Massachusetts, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due either for or against the United States upon the same principle and measure of liability with costs as in like cases in admiralty between private parties with the same rights of appeal.

SEC. 2. That should damages be found to be due from the United States of America to the owner of said steam lighter Cornelia the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That such unit shall be brought and commenced within four months after the passage of this act.

SEC. 3. That the mode of service of process shall conform to the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the United States."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDRESS OF HON. JOHN LORD O'BRIAN.

Mr. CALDER. I ask unanimous consent that the address of Hon. John Lord O'Brian, special assistant to the Attorney General for war work, before the New York State Bar Association, be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read a telegram from the Pacific Coast Congress for a league of nations.

There being no objection, the telegram was read, as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., February 20, 1919.

Hon. KEY PITTMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Pacific Coast Congress for a League of Nations has just concluded two days' session here with over 5,000 registered delegates from all parts of Nevada, Arizona, and California, with over 40,000 total attendance, taxing capacity of Municipal Auditorium, with greatest interest and enthusiasm manifested. Session to-day unanimously adopted following, which, under instructions of congress, we, the Nevada members of resolutions committee take pleasure in transmitting to you:

"The Pacific Coast Congress of the League to Enforce Peace, assembled at San Francisco on February 19 and 20, adopted the following statement of principles: The peace delegates at Paris have drawn up a covenant for a league of nations, and ere long the people of these nations will be asked to ratify their work, and by so doing usher in a new era of liberty and justice not only in their own countries but throughout the world. Now that the mad scheme of pan-Germanism has been frustrated, adequate provisions must be made to prevent the development of any similar efforts in the future. Long custodians of democracy, we, the people of the United States, must join all other like-thinking peoples to guarantee to mankind as far as possible security from the curse of war. The need of a league of nations can no longer be doubted. No peace can be permanent unless the victors in this war unite to make plain that their aim was not conquest but to uphold the reign of justice among nations in the place of war as the means of settling international disputes. We may differ politically, but we must not hesitate to declare our hearty approval of the work of the Paris conference and to urge the entire American people to stand behind the conclusions of the conference."

Additional resolution adopted by women delegates pledged all help within their power to forward league of nations program.

EMMET D. BOYLE,
Honorary Chairman.
HUGH H. BROWN,
FRANK NORCROSS,
C. H. CHANDLER.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, on Lincoln's birthday there was held in the city of Washington a large meeting of women, at what was known as a victory dinner. I consider their attitude in this matter of great importance, and I ask to have the short resolution adopted on that occasion read.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, to what subject does the resolution relate?

Mr. PITTMAN. To the league of nations.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that it looks as though the country is about to be plunged into a discussion of this question which will cover the entire Nation and last for some time; and I desire to observe here that, if all the resolutions and proceedings of conventions and meetings which will be held upon both sides of this question are to be incorporated in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, it will not only bankrupt the Government, but it will be utterly inappropriate to the proceedings of Congress. I am not going to object to the request of the Senator from Nevada this morning——

Mr. PITTMAN. I will state to the Senator——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator will pardon me until I finish my sentence—I desired to say this even if the Senator had not made his request. We must adopt some consistent course upon this question. The RECORD is not going to be flooded or inundated by the proceedings of all sorts of bodies upon this question solely upon one side of the question. If it is desirable that every Senator may dump into the RECORD everything that he wants to upon either side of this question, very well; but my judgment is that this method of procedure had better be stopped. The country will be sufficiently informed by the press and by the resolutions adopted in the different localities without looking to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD upon this question; but, if this is to be done, let us be fair about it, and let us have unanimous consent that any Senator may put in the RECORD anything he wants, in which case nobody will read any of it, and no good and no harm will be done, except to bankrupt the Treasury.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, personally I have no intention of offering miscellaneous telegrams, either for or against the league of nations proposal. However, in the case of certain bodies of sufficient size and importance, I feel justified in presenting resolutions adopted by them to the Senate when they come in. That is as far as I propose to go in the matter; and I will present them on one side of this question the same as on the other side of this question. This effort on my part is not for the purpose of creating sentiment one way or the other; but it is made out of respect to what I consider a very large portion of the citizens of this country assembled for a particular purpose.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand that, Mr. President, but the mere desire to tickle the sensations of people back home is not a sufficient reason, in my opinion, for making the Government pay the expense of that delectable process. We all are perfectly familiar with the abuse that has resulted from this—shall I say "custom"; I think so—and, although the rule of the Senate prohibits it, the kindly feeling of Senators toward each other is such that a single Senator dislikes to object, and even when he does object in accordance with the rule of the Senate, the Senate by a vote immediately allows anything to go into the RECORD. I think we have nearly come to a parting of the ways.

While I have the floor I wish to make this one observation and then I am done: The right of petition is guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, but the right of petition does not imply any right whatever to have the views of the petitioners printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the public expense. I think the right of petition has been preserved, and should be preserved, but I think the claim that anybody to any extent under that privilege has a right to write anything he has a mind to, abusive or not, and attach all the signatures to it that he has a mind to, and then demand as a corollary of the right of petition that it shall be printed at the expense of the Government and inflicted upon an unsuspecting public, who are looking for something else in the RECORD, as the proceedings of Congress, has been carried beyond all legitimate bounds, and I protest against it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada ask for the reading of the resolution?

Mr. PITTMAN. I have asked unanimous consent that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nevada from what body the resolution comes?

Mr. PITTMAN. It was adopted at a large assemblage of women at what is known as a "victory dinner" held in Washinngton on Lincoln's Birthday. There were about 700 present.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I think very likely the assemblage or society which passed this resolution may have been laboring under a mistake as to certain facts in the case, due to statements which have been made by very prominent men which, I think, entirely misstate the conditions.

I notice the statement by Secretary Daniels, for whom I have very high regard, and I know that he made the statement under a misapprehension, but it might have had a great effect in bringing about the adoption of this resolution—that the country was confronting the alternative of adopting this league of nations or of continuing expensive and extensive armaments. Of course, that is not the fact. The country can very well agree with other countries of the world upon disarmament by treaty without entering into a league of nations. That is a matter that is perfectly obvious to anybody. I only mention the fact as being one of the very probable causes of the adoption of the resolution which the Senator is introducing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reading of the resolution?

Mr. PITTMAN. There were about 700 women there, the most prominent women in the United States, and I think it is safe to assume that they knew what they were talking about.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the reading of it? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolutions adopted at the American women's victory dinner and conference, Washington, D. C., February 12 and 13, 1919.

As citizens of the American democracy we are assembled in conference in the city of Washington to pledge our allegiance to the great hope of the future, a democratic league of free nations. We indorse the principle that such a league is fundamental to the peace negotiations, and we affirm our earnest belief in the liberal and forward-looking program supported by the American delegates to the peace conference.

As the services of women, together with those of men, were essential to the winning of the war, so equally is it essential that the services of both men and women be utilized in achieving the more difficult tasks of world organization and reconstruction. We therefore believe that on international commissions to be created in connection with the league of nations the principle shall be recognized that women should have places with men in the determination of world problems of common concern; and we urge that as quickly as possible, to deal with the pressing problems of the present moment, women be given at least the status of advisers on matters affecting women and children. The new world order can be created only by drawing upon all the resources of mankind in experience, ability, and wisdom.

Under the pressure of a great necessity we have been learning how properly to subordinate national ambitions and political and private interests. Such unified effort the war revealed as necessary in order to meet the elemental human needs of mankind, such as food, health, education, proper standards of life and labor. We believe that this effort should be continued with renewed and increased cooperation and mutual helpfulness by the free peoples of the world organized in the league of nations.

Be it further resolved, That these resolutions, adopted by 700 women coming from all parts of the United States, be sent to the American delegates at the peace conference and to the Senate of the United States.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a brief extract from the book entitled "Suggestions for League Speakers," published by the League to Enforce Peace. It suggests that speakers prevail upon public meetings to adopt resolutions indorsing the league of nations, and it suggests a form of resolution which it will be suitable to adopt. It makes the very wise suggestion that the resolutions should be diversified, so as to appear more spontaneous and avoid the appearance of hand-me-down convictions or ready-made resolutions. This variety will inject a little spice into a controversy which does not threaten to be insipid. I think the suggestion is a good one, and I ask to have it printed in the RECORD as a sort of starting post.

Mr. ASHURST. I call for the regular order. There is some morning business we would like to finish.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona does not want to shut off the request of the Senator from Oklahoma, does he?

Mr. ASHURST. I want to shut off all the talk I can until after the morning hour is over.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator ought to have begun a few moments ago.

Mr. ASHURST. Then I beg pardon.

Mr. BORAH. This is a very vital matter, lest some of these resolutions be wrongly phrased.

Mr. ASHURST. I thought I was within my rights. I beg pardon if I am not within my rights under the rules. I call for the regular order, in the hope that I may shut off all the talk possible, relevant or otherwise.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The introduction of bills and joint resolutions is in order. The request of the Senator from Oklahoma is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

A SUGGESTED GENERAL FORM FOR RESOLUTION.

It is very evident that a variety of resolutions indorsing the league of nations, when received from different sources, would have greater effect and receive better attention than one form of resolution submitted by a number of different organizations. Therefore, while the form herein suggested may be followed, the language should be your own and express the particular interest of the group (whether business, labor, agriculture, religious, or educational) adopting the resolution.

Resolutions.

(Name of adopting body.)

(Address.)

Whereas the war, now brought to a victorious close by the associated power of the free nations of the world, was, above all else, a war to end war and protect human rights: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we advocate the establishment of a league of nations. We believe that such a league should aim at promoting the liberty, progress, and orderly development of the world: Be it

Further resolved, That we favor the entrance of the United States into such a league as may be adequate to safeguard the peace that has been won by the joint forces of the allied nations: Be it Further resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Senators representing the State of ——— at Washington, and to the Hon. William H. Taft, president of the League to Enforce Peace, 130 West Forty-second Street, New York.

———

(Name of body adopting.)

By ——— ———,

(Official position.)

Date ———.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HARDING:

A bill (S. 5663) to authorize the appointment of an American battle field commission; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KNOX:

A bill (S. 5664) for the purchase of a site for and the erection of a post-office building at Pittsburgh, Pa.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. KIRBY submitted an amendment providing that the allotment to the States of any fund under the control of the Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board not otherwise allotted may respectively be expended by the States and the board for the acquisition, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, of lands for sites; for the construction, enlargement, and improvement, etc., of buildings, hospitals, quarantine stations, industrial farms and schools, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $486,000 for a site for a national archives building, Washington, D. C., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MORGAN MUNITION PLANT EXPLOSION.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, the report which has been made from the Military Affairs Committee by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], which the Senate refused to have read, is a report of the Military Affairs Committee on the investigation of the explosion of a Govemnment munition plant in New Jersey. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask if this report has heretofore been ordered printed in the RECORD?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it will be printed in the RECORD if there is no objection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wanted to object to the request to have it printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator desires to object to it?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes, sir. I have no objection to its being read.

Mr. MYERS. Does the Senator object?

Mr. ASHURST. I again call for the regular order. When objection is made, that ends it. I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

DISPOSAL OF GERMAN FLEET.

Mr. GORE. I submit a resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 470) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate (a) that the surrendered portion of the German fleet should not be sunk or destroyed unless and until an agreement has been entered into for the limitation or reductions of existing naval establishments; (b) unless such agreement is entered into the destruction of the German fleet would serve principally the interests of manufacturers of steel, ordnance, etc.; (c) the German naval crafts should be apportioned to Great Britain, France, Italy, and the United States on the basis of existing ratios among their existing naval armaments or should be sold to smaller countries such as the South American republics and the proceeds used in the work of reconstruction and rehabilitation.

Mr. ROBINSON. I object to the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over under the rule and be printed.

THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. OVERMAN. I offer a resolution and ask to have it referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator ask to have it read?

Mr. OVERMAN. No; just let it be referred to the committee.

The resolution (S. Res. 469) was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary conducting, by subcommittee, under resolutions of the Senate Nos. 307 and 436, investigations of German propaganda and Bolshevik propaganda, be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to continue said investigations until the expiration of one calendar week from the commencement of the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress; to sit, in Washington or elsewhere, during the period between the end of the Sixty-fifth

Congress and the beginning of the Sixty-sixth Congress and thereafter during the sessions or recesses of the Senate, and to report in the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress; and the authority for the incurring and payment of the expenses of said investigations, whether incurred in Washington or elsewhere, is hereby extended for the same length of time.

RESTITUTION BY GERMANY TO FRANCE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer a resolution, and ask to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 471) was read, as follows:

Whereas nearly four months have elapsed since the armistice for a suspension of military operation was signed through which Germany escaped the hardships of war on her own soil; and

Whereas before that time Germany had devastated the portion of France she had occupied, destroying machinery, factories, fields, vineyards, private dwellings, and private property of all kinds, and had by an act of international larceny stolen and carried away private property of immense value, which is still in German hands and in process of absorption and concealment, until it will be difficult either to make restitution or identify it, so that Germany, while defeated, still retains all the substantial results of victory, leaving France exhausted, her territory despoiled, the homes of her people in ruins, while across the boundary line in Germany the fields and industrial life are uninjured and the homes of her people untouched; and

Whereas France stood in the pathway of the central powers in their attempts at the beginning of the war to gain world dominion and stayed Germany's progress until the governments that later fought with her prepared themselves for war: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate will ratify no treaty nor constitution of a league of nations until Germany shall have returned to the French Government or its people all the civilian property stolen and taken from French territory, complete restitution be made for all such property or a payment made if it can not be returned, that the devastated territory in both France and Belgium and all property destroyed, including the homes, fields, factories, vineyards, orchards, and all other private property injured or destroyed be compensated for by Germany, and that full reparation be made by Germany for the destruction wrought in both France and Belgium as an indispensable condition, among others, of peace, and that the frontiers of France shall be adequately safeguarded against future invasion by Germany or any of her allies.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the resolution may go over under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That order will be made.

ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 472), which was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas acting under and by authority of an act of Congress approved October 6, 1917, and certain supplements thereto, and under commission from the President of the United States, A. Mitchell Palmer has been performing the functions of the office of Alien Property Custodian; and

Whereas in the exercise of such authority said Alien Property Custodian has employed large powers in taking over valuable property, both real and personal, belonging or alleged to belong to aliens or allies of aliens, and in some cases has disposed of the same by sale or otherwise; and

Whereas in the exercise of the powers of his office said Alien Property Custodian has collected vast sums of money, aggregating hundreds of millions of dollars; and

Whereas said Alien Property Custodian has made no detailed report of his stewardship, all of his transactions having been apparently conducted with complete secrecy, so far as this Senate is aware: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to make inquiry into the manner in which A. Mitchell Palmer, the Alien Property Custodian, has exercised the powers of his office, with a view to determining what properties, real and personal, he has assumed control of; what moneys he has collected, and what disposition he has made of the same; what property he still holds and what property he has sold, and the manner in which said sale took place; what official and clerical forces have been employed by him, and the duties of each, and the rate of compensation paid, and any and all other matters relating to the functions of his office which may be deemed pertinent to the purpose of this inquiry.

Resolved further, That the Committee on Commerce is authorized and directed to subpœna witnesses and compel their attendance, to send for persons and papers, and do such further acts as may be necessary to secure any and all information desired in the furtherance of said inquiry; and that a report of the finding of the Committee on Commerce shall, upon its conclusion, be made to the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

S. 390. An act to establish the Grand Canyon National Park in the State of Arizona;

S. 4957. An act to establish the Lafayette National Park in the State of Maine;

S. 5038. An act extending the use of the special fund for vocational education provided by section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act, approved June 27, 1918, and for other purposes;

S. J. Res. 195. Joint resolution providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than Members of Congress; and

S. J. Res. 214. Joint resolution authorizing and directing the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow credit to the disbursing clerk of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance in certain cases.

PORT OF ENTRY—BAR HARBOR, ME. (H. DOC. NO. 1831).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The sundry civil act approved August 1, 1914, contains the following provision, viz:

"The President is authorized from time to time, as the exigencies of the service may require, to rearrange, by consolidation or otherwise, the several customs collection districts, and to discontinue ports of entry by abolishing the same or establishing others in their stead: Provided, That the whole number of customs collection districts, ports of entry, or either of them, shall at no time be made to exceed those now established and authorized except as the same may hereafter be provided by law: Provided further, That hereafter the collector of customs of each customs collection district shall be officially designated by the number of the district for which he is appointed and not by the name of the port where the headquarters are situated, and the President is authorized from time to time to change the location of the headquarters in any customs collection district as the needs of the service may require: And provided further, That the President shall, at the beginning of each regular session, submit to Congress a statement of all acts, if any, done hereunder and the reasons therefor."

Pursuant to the requirement of the third proviso to said provision, I have to state that by Executive order dated June 1, 1918, effective June 15, 1918, Bar Harbor, Me., was made a port of entry in customs collection district No. 1, of which Portland is the headquarters port.

This action was taken because the volume of business arising at Bar Harbor warranted the designation of said place as a port of entry.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 26 February, 1919.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. FLETCHER. I present the conference report on the river and harbor bill, and suggest its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report. Is there any objection?

Mr. WEEKS. I ask that the report may be read, so that we may act on the matter intelligently.

The Secretary proceeded to read the conference report, and read as follows:

"The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

"That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 41, 134, 136, and 144.

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 135, 138, 140, 141, 142, and 143, and agree to the same.

"Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following:

"'It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress that water terminals are essential at all cities and towns located upon harbors or navigable waterways and that at least one public terminal should exist, constructed, owned, and regulated by the municipality or other public agency of the State and open to the use of all on equal terms, and with the view of carrying out this policy to the fullest possible extent the Secretary of War is hereby vested with the discretion to withhold, unless the public interests would seriously suffer by delay, moneys appropriated in this act for new projects adopted herein, or for the further improvement of existing projects, if, in his opinion, no water terminals exist adequate for the traffic and open to all on equal terms, or unless satisfactory assurances are received that local or other interests will provide such adequate terminal or terminals. The Secretary of War, through the Chief of Engineers, shall give full publicity, as far as may be practicable, to this provision.'"

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the reading, I should like to ask the Senator having the bill in charge if that is not entirely new matter?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; I will say to the Senator that it is substantially the Senator's own amendment to the bill to which the Senate agreed. It is substantially your amendment modified to some extent, and only inserted at a different place.

Mr. SMOOT. What I wanted to know was not that it is my amendment, but that it is qualified in a way that the terminals, and so forth, could be granted or not as finally decided by the Secretary of War.

Mr. FLETCHER. It leaves the discretion in the Secretary of War, but the policy is declared by Congress in accordance with the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah. All the work is to be held up until that policy is absolutely put into effect, and the policy is declared in accordance with that amendment. The Secretary of War is given discretion to acquire the terminals, dependent upon circumstances whether it shall go into effect before any improvement takes place according to the provisions of the bill and of the law.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, I do not ask this question with any view of making a point of order on it, even though it were new matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the amendment I offered to the bill was so fair and so just that it should not be modified.

Mr. FLETCHER. I agreed with the Senator, and if he will read it carefully he will find that it is substantially the amendment he offered, declaring it to be policy of Congress, just as the Senator desired in his amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. The Secretary can proceed with the reading, and I will take a little more pains in looking at it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Utah. I recollect in the provision requiring fully the furnishing of terminals, and so forth, the engineering department thought that it should not be made so arbitrary as that, as there is a good deal of very desirable work that might be affected, especially as to the continuance of projects under way. I think I can say that the members of the House committee, as well as the Senate committee, are heartily in favor of the principle embodied in the amendment of the Senator from Utah, but we felt from the statements made by the Chief of Engineers that probably it would be unwise to go quite so far at this time. So we framed this amendment to give discretion to the War Department and also to indicate that we wanted them to go just as far as they possibly could toward requiring terminals to be furnished along these different projects.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from Florida if this discretion granted to the Secretary of War only applies to projects that are under way, or does it apply to all future projects?

Mr. FLETCHER. It applies to all future projects or for the further improvement of existing projects. It is intended to be the policy applied to all future work.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will let me make a suggestion, the Secretary of War pointed out that there were two or more projects where it would be very detrimental to the public interest if they were in the beginning of it prevented by this requirement, because of the fact that local interests were not so much affected by it as the general interest. So we put in some clauses here to indicate to the Secretary of War that we do not want him to take up the new projects if the terminals are not furnished, unless the delay would be an injury to the public interest.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment as amended reads in this way:

It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress that water terminals are essential at all cities and towns located upon harbors or navigable waterways and that at least one public terminal should exist, constructed, owned, and regulated by the municipality or other public agency of the State and open to the use of all on equal terms, and with the view of carrying out this policy to the fullest possible extent the Secretary of War is hereby vested with the discretion to withhold, unless the public interests would seriously suffer by delay, moneys appropriated in this act for new projects adopted herein, or for the further improvement of existing projects if, in his opinion, no water terminals exist adequate for the traffic and open to all on equal terms—

And so forth.

I see it does apply not only to future projects but also to all those that are under way at the present time. I want to express the opinion now——

Mr. CUMMINS. I wish to inquire if this report is before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). It is not. The question is, Shall the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report?

Mr. SMOOT. The Secretary was reading the report, and I thought it was up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report is being read, but the Senator from Florida raised the question of the consideration of the report, and that is the pending question.

Mr. FLETCHER. I thought that was agreed to, and then the conference report was requested to be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Vice President informed me when I took the chair that it had not been agreed to and the question was, Shall the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report? The question is, Shall the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report? [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the report. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

PROPOSED CONSTITUTION OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I may assume, I think, that the most of us have some fighting blood in our veins, but, notwithstanding the natural, the human inclination to the battle field, I hope that the discussion of the greatest, most fundamental, most vital question propounded to the American people since we first assumed a place among the nations of the earth will proceed upon that high level which excludes prejudice or passion. I hope that it may go forward without a challenge of the motives of those who may engage in it, so that eventually the people of the United States may render a decision upon the question which they must presently answer with all the intelligence which the twentieth century can command.

I listened with infinite pleasure to the lofty strains of patriotism as they were poured out by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and every moment I thank God I am an American, and that I inherit in common with all my fellow countrymen the traditions, the wisdom, the example, the teaching of the age of Washington, of Jefferson, of Monroe, of Lincoln, and their illustrious associates.

I listened to the graceful periods, the eloquent periods, of the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], who, as I observed not long ago, is the interpreter, and properly so, of both the sayings and the silences of the White House. I desire to say to him—and I mark with pleasure that he is before me—that if it were within human power to convince me that it is better to be a citizen of the league of nations than a citizen of the United States he would have accomplished it.

Mr. President, in a purely preliminary way and as a prelude to the analysis which I shall presently attempt of the proposed constitution of the league of nations, I beg to call to the attention of the Senate and the country certain parts of the speech delivered by the President in Boston, for, in my judgment, he unfolds, with his usual felicity, not only that which is open to our eyes but that which has hitherto been uncertain and vague. I do this without a single suggestion of criticism. I do it because he has enabled me to understand what is really intended in the proposed constitution better than I have ever understood it before.

Speaking of the acclaim with which the people of Europe have met the American representatives, he says:

And in the midst of it all every interest seeks out first of all, when it reaches Paris, the representatives of the United States. Why? Because—and I think I am stating the most wonderful fact in history—because there is no nation in Europe that suspects the motives of the United States.

Was there ever so wonderful a thing seen before? Was there ever so moving a thing? Was there ever any fact that so bound the Nation that had won that esteem forever to deserve it?

I would not have you understand that the great men who represent the other nations there in conference are disesteemed by those who know them. Quite the contrary. But you understand that the nations of Europe have again and again clashed with one another in competitive interest. It is impossible for men to forget those sharp issues that were drawn between them in times past. It is impossible for men to believe that all ambitions have all of a sudden been foregone. They remember territory that was coveted; they remember rights that it was attempted to extort; they remember political ambitions which it was attempted to realize. And, while they believe that men have come into a different temper, they can not forget these things, and so they do not resort to one another for a dispassionate view of the matters in controversy. They resort to that Nation which has won the enviable distinction of being regarded as the friend of mankind.

Again, he says:

We set up a great ideal of liberty, and then we said, "Liberty is a thing that you must win for yourself; do not call upon us." And think of the world that we would leave. Do you realize how many new nations are going to be set up in the presence of old and powerful nations in Europe and left there, if left by us, without a disinterested friend?

Mr. President, this unveils the picture. No one can congratulate the President of the United States more heartily than I do with respect to his unparalleled reception in Europe. No one can recognize more thoroughly than I do the mighty influence he has exercised upon the deliberations of the conference assembled in Paris.

It is, however, as plain as noonday that it is his conception of a league of nations that the United States, being the only friend, or disinterested friend, which these new nations of eastern and southern Europe possess, it has become our duty to maintain and protect them against the avarice, the greed, the power, of their fellow nations in Europe. He so declares with the utmost precision.

Here we have the real question which must be determined eventually by the American people. Shall the United States not only attempt to create these nations which are growing out of the most destructive war in which mankind ever engaged, but is it our policy and shall we assume as our obligation that as against the ambitions, against the power of their sister nations in Europe we must guard and protect them?

Mr. President, this constitution is not a constitution for permanent peace. It is a constitution for the guardianship on the part of the United States of the weaker nations of Europe. It is not a league for the prevention of war. It is a league for invitation to war, although I do not assert and I do not believe that those who are responsible for the terms in which it is framed have aught but the highest desire to promote the welfare of humanity.

The President of the United States believes that this compact should be made because he is sincerely of the opinion that the United States can and will control the league of nations and may use it for the government of the earth in the welfare of the people of the earth.

Lloyd George is in favor of this form of compact because he believes that Great Britain can control the league which it is proposed now to create. I doubt not that his sincerity is as deep and pervading as that of the President of the United States, but both of them have no other conception, as is here clearly betrayed, of the province of a league of nations than as an instrument to govern the world in all its vital respects.

But a discordant note has come floating over the sea. At the very time I was occupied in reading the address of the President at Boston my attention was directed to an article by Frank H. Simonds, which was published in the Washington Star of last night. Mr. Simonds has been one of the great correspondents and writers upon the war. If there has been a man in all of the list of contributors to the literature of the war who has analyzed its meaning and who has described its progress accurately that man is Mr. Simonds. He views the matter from a friendly standpoint, for he has been as stout an advocate of the policies of America as represented in the declarations of the President of the United States as any man either at home or abroad. Mark his perception of the situation and mark his description of it. I read very briefly from this article:

I have tried many times in these dispatches to point out the peculiar situation of France with the resulting condition of mind and of spirit. It is an unfortunate fact, but it is a fact, that as a consequence of the course pursued by Mr. Wilson in Paris the peace conference has come more and more, both in the minds of the French people and of Americans about the peace commission, to be a battle between Wilson and Clemenceau, in which Mr. Wilson has been championing abstract principles of justice and M. Clemenceau advocating measures which represent questions of life and death to France.

France came to the peace conference at the end of four and a half years of war, fought mainly upon her soil, with a population diminished by 3,000,000 as a consequence, with half a dozen Provinces in ruins and a score of cities wrecked, to ask two things: Reparation for material injuries and guaranties against future attacks.

* * * * * * *

Mr. Wilson came to Paris resolved that there should be a league of nations. Encountering at Paris this unanimous French motion, finding French interest and French attention fixed upon the salvation of France rather than upon the formulation of the principles of a league of nations, Mr. Wilson and those associated with him were not successful in concealing their disappointment or their disapproval of what seemed to them a particularistic national policy. When France as a whole asked Mr. Wilson to go and see her devastated regions that he might understand her heart, he returned a cold and unequivocal negative. I do not think that any single act of any man ever carried with it profounder disappointment than Mr. Wilson's refusal to go to the northern regions and see what the boche had done.

And we have had, week after week, a slow but sure change in French emotion with respect to the President. He was hailed by the little people of France as a savior. He was hailed as a man who came from another world to deliver France and other peoples of the world from the shadow of tragedy which had been, and little by little his course here had the effect at least of creating the impression that he cared nothing for the life or death of France, that he was not concerned with those things which the tragic years of war had burned into the soul of every French man and woman.

I do not think it is possible accurately to represent how profound was the disappointment of France at this course of the American President. A sense first of desertion and then of utter isolation crept into the French heart as more and more the American attitude toward France passed from mere coldness with respect of French necessities to open criticism and hardly concealed suspicion. I do not think one would exaggerate by saying that three months ago France believed the war won, and to-day, as a result of what has occurred here in the peace conference, there is something amounting to real terror lest the war shall be lost after all and France left alone again across the pathway of a Germany increased in power and population by the last war.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator give the date of the newspaper which contains the article he has just read?

Mr. CUMMINS. I saw the article in a paper published last night. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] calls my attention to the fact that it was published on Sunday. This article is dated Paris, February 20, of the present year.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if it would not interrupt the Senator, I should like to state that there was in the Washington Sunday Star, of February 23, 1919, an article entitled "Prestige of the President in Europe now at low ebb, Simonds asserts," written by Frank H. Simonds. That is dated from Paris, February 21, 1919. It is a more extended article even than the one which the Senator from Iowa has read.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I do not read this article for the purpose of furnishing ground for criticism against the President. I read it simply to show the points of view as they are now understood in France; to show that what France wants is protection against Germany. France is not so keenly interested nor could she be so keenly interested in the establishment of the nations of the earth in their various borders and their maintenance by the United States or by Great Britain as she is in erecting a bulwark between her and her enemy Germany. I read this article because it seems to me it teaches us that, first and foremost, we ought to agree upon the terms of peace which we shall impose upon this enemy of mankind, and thus protect not only France but the whole world against her aggressions in the future.

Mr. President, if I felt free to follow my inclination I would defer my observations upon the proposed constitution for a league of nations until the Committee on Foreign Relations holds its conference with the President and until we hear, as undoubtedly we will hear, from the distinguished Senators composing that committee. Unhappily, however, I do not feel free to postpone this comment, and for this reason: The Congress now in session expires on March 4. We are informed that immediately thereafter the President will return to Europe to conclude the labors he has undertaken. Before the constitution of the league is finally adopted by the peace conference the President ought to know the views of every Senator with respect to its terms. It would be most unfortunate if the nations represented at the conference were to conclude a treaty upon this subject and return to their respective countries only to find that their work had been disapproved by the Senate of the United States, leaving an instrument of such vital importance to the world without force or effect. I believe it is not only the privilege but the duty of every Senator to exercise his constitutional prerogative and to advise the President before he returns to France of his opinion upon a matter which so deeply concerns not alone the people of this country but of all countries that have organized themselves into governments. As I look at it, it is of far greater importance that we discharge this duty at this time than it is to consider appropriation bills or legislation of any character. Inasmuch as we may well yield to the members of the Foreign Relations Committee after the conference to which I have referred takes place, some of us must speak now or not at all.

Mr. President, no greater mistake could be made than to assume that there may not be an effective compact among nations, the sole purpose of which is to prevent, so far as humanly possible, future wars, without surrendering a single necessary attribute of our own sovereignty. I can not concur in the argument which seems to lead to the conclusion that any form of internationalism is an unwise invasion of nationalism. I can not agree that the highest ideals of Americanism preclude cooperation among nations looking toward the abolition of war. From the very beginning of our national life; indeed, from a time antedating the triumphant close of the Revolution by five years, or more, we have been making treaties of peace and amity with the various powers of the world, and we have now a long and honorable series of agreements for the settlement of international disputes. The United States was a party to The Hague convention and it joined in establishing The Hague tribunal. In 1909 this country participated in the London conference and approved its work, a conference that was called and held for the purpose of civilizing, clarifying, and simplifying the law of nations.

I am saying these things not because anyone has specifically denied them but because it is helpful just now to remember that there is an internationalism which is not only in harmony with the most exalted spirit of nationalism but which supplements and strengthens that national power which every self-respecting government must exercise for itself. It must be clear to every thoughtful person that there must be in a world like ours, where an increasing intimacy among nations has been brought about by the genius of invention, the imperative demands of commerce, the drifting tides of population, and with the constantly growing opportunities of conflict and controversy, a developing internationalism that will meet successfully conditions as they change from year to year. It is not my purpose to enlarge upon this thought or to expand my observations by a more specific recital of the history of mankind, and I mention it simply that you may have it in mind as I turn my attention to the immediate subject which is now uppermost in all discussion throughout the civilized world.

It is my belief that the close of the unparalleled conflict in which we have been engaged presents the most favorable opportunity that we ever have had or that is likely to occur in years and years to come to do something that will be a distinct advance toward preventing war in the future. I do not believe that treaties with this object in view should precede the settlement of the terms of peace which are to be imposed upon Germany.

I have just read the heart-breaking emotions of France, awakened simply because the theory of a league of nations to enforce peace precedes the settlement of the terms of peace with Germany and leaves France hopeless in her fear of future encroachments. It is my opinion that we should first dispose of Germany, and that immediately thereafter the peace conference now assembled in Paris should make a determined effort for peace among all nations and for all time to come.

With respect to the proposed constitution of the league, to which President Wilson has explicitly given his approval and which undoubtedly commands the assent of the remaining American commissioners, I have this to say before I enter upon any analysis of its somewhat confused and complicated terms. From my standpoint, there is some good in it, and I sincerely hope that at some stage of the proceedings of the Senate I may have an opportunity to express in a definite way my approval not only of the purpose in view but of these parts themselves. There is more that is bad in it, and it is my prayer that these parts may be stricken from it. In order that there may be no doubt about my position, I desire to say to the Senate—and I am saying it to the country as well—that if I were compelled to vote upon the instrument as a whole as now proposed I would unhesitatingly vote against it, because there are articles and parts of articles in the proposed treaty which are not only far beyond our authority to make but which change the whole character of our Government and overturn the institutions upon which we have so long depended for the safety of our people and the perpetuity of our independence. There are provisions in it which not only degrade the spirit of our people but put it beyond the power of the Republic to "establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity," and so fulfill, as we ought to fulfill, the initial declaration of the Constitution of the United States.

It requires no close inquiry into the sentiment of the American people to be certain that there is a universal and passionate desire to do something, to enter into some compact to prevent war with all its deadly and destructive consequences. Nor can it be denied that at this juncture in the world's affairs they believe that something can be done to facilitate a peaceful settlement of international controversies which hitherto have led to the battle field. It is this overwhelming conviction which finds expression in the tumultuous applause which thrills every audience as it listens to the glowing appeals for a league of nations.

I for one share the feeling with all the intensity of a lover of humanity and a profound believer in the progress of the world. I can not believe, however, that very many of these people will insist that the overthrow of American institutions is necessary in order to accomplish the beneficent purpose they have in mind and to attain the end they so fervently desire. I do not intend to dwell upon those articles which, as I look at the subject, tend in the right direction. I will be better understood if I trace the outlines of the compact which I think ought to emerge from the struggle just closed.

First. We ought to agree, and all other nations ought to agree, that justiciable disputes—and by justiciable disputes I mean those issues which can be determined by the application of recognized law to established facts—should be settled either by arbitration or adjudication; and we ought to agree, and all other nations ought to agree, without equivocation or reserve, that we and they will abide by and perform the award or judgment.

Second. We ought to agree, and all other nations ought to agree, that with respect to nonarbitrable disputes—those which relate to the welfare of the country itself, those which are necessary to its existence, those principles and those policies which must be maintained if the Government itself is to exist—war shall not be made until some permanent, regular international body, in which every member of the league is represented, shall have had a fair opportunity to discuss and consider it—a body that would combine the enlightened conscience of the world. I am willing, so far as the United States is concerned and my lot and part in it, to agree that we will not make war against any nation until we have discussed the issue, whether it is arbitrable or nonarbitrable, in the face and in the hearing of the whole of civilized humanity. Upon such questions, however, there should be no award, no judgment, and the sanction should be confined to the moral influences which time, thought, and free discussion will awaken.

Mr. REED rose.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Missouri wish to ask me a question?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to do so if it will not interrupt the Senator. I do not want to interrupt him.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should prefer to go on. I shall be glad, however, to answer any questions that may occur to Senators after I have finished.

Mr. REED. I will defer the inquiry, then. Perhaps the Senator will answer it further on in his discourse without interruption.

Mr. CUMMINS. Third: If any nation should refuse to submit a proper controversy to judgment, or refuse to perform the judgment when rendered, or refuse to delay war until the combined powers have an opportunity to consider the subject in all its aspects, I am willing to agree that ostracism shall be the penalty inflicted upon the offending nation.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I will now ask the Senator a question if he will permit me to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. If ostracism of the character mentioned in this constitution were to be adopted, how would that possibly fail to produce war?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am about to prove—at least to my own conscience—that the provisions in the constitution before us are an invitation to war and not measures to prevent war.

Fourth. It is my firm belief that the compact—and when I say "compact" I mean the instrument itself, the thing that we sign, the undertaking that we assume—should contain a program of disarmament. I am utterly unwilling to confide to any such body of men as is proposed for the executive council of the league of nations the power to decide for the United States, for Great Britain, or for any other country the program of disarmament. We should agree now to disarm; and, after all, in disarmament largely lies the hope—and, I think, the only hope—of permanent peace. The constitution proposed in Paris is most disappointing in this regard, for a careful study of its provisions gives us little right to believe that there will be any disarmament among the strong powers which are to give the compact life and vigor.

Who expects Great Britain to disarm under the proposed constitution? Who expects the United States to disarm? No one who surveys the subject with an intelligent and unprejudiced mind.

This is the international compact which I think the American people are waiting, hoping, and praying for, and the acclaim with which the Paris proposal has been received in some parts of the country and by some bodies of the country is due to the fact that they see in it the approach to the fulfillment of their dreams. I can not, and I will not, believe that Americans with red blood in their veins, with fervid longing for peace in their hearts, who have pride in the history of their country, and who love the institutions with which the honorable distinction of the United States throughout the world is inseparably connected, will endure, much less approve, those parts of the proposed constitution to which I am about to refer; parts which, in my judgment—and I express this conclusion with the utmost solemnity and after the most mature reflection—not only neutralize all the benefits of a peaceful settlement of disputes between nations but which affirmatively destroy the national structure and which commit the United States to a course which must inevitably end in humiliation and disaster.

Article 10 of the proposed constitution is as follows:

> The high contracting parties undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all States members of the league. In case of any such aggression or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression the executive council shall advise upon the means by which the obligation shall be fulfilled.

There is nothing in this article, however, dependent upon the discretion of the executive council so far as our duty under it would be concerned. We agree absolutely, positively, unreservedly to preserve the territorial independence and the political independence of all the nations parties to the league, and for all time to come; for there is no provision in the proposed treaty that gives any nation the right to withdraw from it, and there is no provision by which any of its parts can be changed against the will of a single member of the executive council.

Mr. President, I do not assert that in the ordinary sense this article is unconstitutional. Within its sphere, our Government has all the attributes of sovereignty, and making treaties with other nations is one of these attributes; and, moreover, the right to make treaties is specifically recognized in the Constitution.

Alliances, offensive and defensive, have been common among the powers of the world, and while I do not recall a single instance of that character in our own history, I have no doubt of our constitutional authority to enter into a treaty of that kind. I have some doubt with regard to our power to enter into the treaty proposed in the Paris constitution, a doubt arising from the universality and duration of the obligation we are asked to assume; but I do not rest my objection to the article upon our lack of power to enter into the obligation.

I am opposed to it, because it is the most destructive, unjust, and reactionary proposal which was ever submitted to a patriotic and intelligent people. I predict that when the citizens of the United States thoroughly grasp the meaning of the proposed agreement and fairly understand its inevitable consequences, it will be rejected in a storm of obloquy the like of which has never been witnessed within the borders of the Republic.

Let us survey it for a moment and endeavor to gather its true import. It means that a few men assembled in Paris in the year 1919 are dividing the whole world into sovereignties, and are assigning the innumerable men and women who in all time to come are to inhabit the earth to these few sovereignties; sovereignties which the ambitions of the men of this a passing generation are pleased to call eternal. The man who, even in his thought, is willing to play with the fate of mankind in this fashion is indifferent to both the lessons of the past and the judgment of posterity. We are solemnly asked to guarantee that the boundaries of nations, as they now exist or as they will exist when the peace conference has redrawn the map of Europe, Asia, Africa, and Oceanica, shall remain without change forever.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, does not the Senator think that statement should be limited somewhat?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not see any proper limitation for the statement.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The guaranty only relates to those nations which are in this league, and it only guarantees them against outside aggression.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I assume—I must assume—that it is intended that this constitution shall finally draw into the membership of the league all the nations of the world. I assume that that must be its purpose; for if we are to accept any other conclusion, and are to look upon it as simply an agreement between a few nations—four, five, six, or seven—to become masters of the whole earth, it is still more objectionable than from the standpoint I occupy.

The agreement is limited to the members of the league, and as I read the article, and I think everybody had that in mind, that so far as the distinction between external aggression and internal revolution there is no materiality in it, although I intend to treat that entirely from the external standpoint.

Mr. REED. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that six or seven nations constitute the league, and they alone can protect and guarantee the integrity of each other's domain. Even if the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] is correct about that, the very next section provides that these six or seven nations, if they constitute a league, shall boss all the rest of the world, and that they have the right in case of war or any threat of war to proceed to take such action as they see fit; of course, if they are to take action in the case of any threat of war it would undoubtedly be exercised in order to prevent invasion. There are other sections of a similar character.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is utterly impossible to give any other interpretation than that the agreement which we are asked to make will bind us to use all the power, the strength, the force we have to preserve the territorial integrity and the political independence of every considerable country in the world.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTIN of Kentucky in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 14516) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. CUMMINS. The statesmen who are now gathered in Paris might, with equal propriety, have ventured to set bounds to the Heavenly Kingdom or prescribe the activities of the Prince of Darkness. How dare we attempt to determine what sovereignties the civilization of the next century will demand? How dare we attempt to give judgment upon the welfare of all the oncoming generations?

The proposal is to gridiron the earth with an inflexible territorial pattern. It would be just as reasonable that the constitution of the league of nations should declare that neither man nor woman should pass from one sovereignty to another as to declare that the boundaries of sovereignties should remain forever inviolate.

I can not help wondering whether those who have submitted this proposition to us have looked over the past and considered what the effect of an agreement of this character would have been, assuming its enforcement, if it had been adopted at other periods of the world's history. I will not concern myself with the ancient days, the days of Alexander, of Rome in her power, of Charlemagne in his triumphs. I am thinking of the days when Charles and Philip of Spain held the world in their grasp.

If anyone in the days that are left of this session shall have occasion to address himself to this subject, I ask him to tell the country and tell the Senate whether he believes that an agreement of this sort in the days of Charles and Philip of Spain would have helped the civilization of the world and would have accomplished justice among men?

I am thinking of the days when Napoleon swept over Europe and when a league of nations with the article which I have just read, enforced by France and England, would have choked liberty to death. I am asking those who stand for this extraordinary provision in the proposed constitution whether they believe that it would have been well for mankind if France and England in the days of Napoleonic power should have entered into an agreement of this character which would have divided the world and preserved inviolate the sovereignties which had been established. I am thinking of all the years of the seventeenth century under such an agreement, and we may test the validity, the wisdom of a compact of this sort by the evidences of history. I am thinking now of all the years of the seventeenth century when such an agreement between England, France, and Spain, confirmed by the remaining nations of Europe, respecting territorial integrity in the North American continent would have given Canada forever to France, would have partitioned the territory of the United States and Mexico among England, France, and Spain, and would for all time have precluded the Republic of the United States.

I would like some one to tell me whether he thinks it would have been well for the world if France, England, and Spain among them had entered into an agreement in those days to have preserved inviolate the territory which each claimed for its own in the Western Hemisphere?

There is no student of history, however dull of comprehension, who does not know that the discord, rivalry, and wars of these three great European powers made it possible for our beloved country to emerge from their struggles a free and independent Nation. I am thinking of the first half of the nineteenth century, when Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and California became parts of the United States. It matters not whether the Texan war was justifiable or unjustifiable; it matters not whether our war with Mexico was defensible or indefensible; the decree of civilization demanded this territory for the Republic, and let the men and women who inhabit these fair and fruitful regions stand up and declare whether they are willing to bind their country to preserve the territorial integrity and political independence of every nation on earth as it shall exist when the peace conference at Paris concludes its labors.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I call the Senator's attention that there again he mentions every nation on earth, whereas the guaranty only refers to members of the league, and the constitution of the league specifically makes ineligible certain nations of the earth.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Nebraska has no doubt that the war between the Texas Republic and Mexico was a matter of external aggression, I am sure. He has no doubt that the war between the United States and Mexico was a war of external aggression; and if this compact had been in force among the nations of the world the acquisition of territory, the pride of every citizen of the United States, would have been impossible. But it is not less so concerning the illustration I gave of France, England, and Spain. The Senator from Nebraska knows if there had been such an agreement preserving existing territorial limits and it had been observed by England, France, and Spain there could not have been, through any possibility, independence in North America. It required the war between Great Britain and France and between France and Spain to make it possible that America should come into her own; and if all the countries in the world had been banded together to insure the territorial integrity of the possessions of these three mighty powers, and the powers themselves had observed their agreement, this hemisphere would still be a possession of one of the European dynasties.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I was not questioning the historical reference of the Senator. I was objecting to the statement that this league proposes to guarantee the independence and territorial integrity of all the countries on the earth. It does not propose to do that.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator from Iowa permit me the very great privilege of asking the Senator from Nebraska a question?

Mr. CUMMINS. With pleasure.

Mr. REED. I am directing my interrogatory to the Senator from Nebraska. The position of the Senator from Nebraska is that only the territorial integrity of those who may be permitted to belong to the league is guaranteed. That is correct?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is correct.

Mr. REED. Is the Senator then an adherent to the doctrine that those who join the league are to have their territory protected and that the rest of the world shall be a prey to the members of the league?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Not at all.

Mr. REED. Is that the idealism we are now seeking?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; it is entirely different from that. The league is dedicated to the idea of preserving peace, and it contains provisions which make it possible to use the agencies of the league to prevent war even among those who are not members of the league, but it does not undertake to guarantee to any country not a member of the league its territorial integrity or its independence, and it specifically makes ineligible to membership in the league certain countries of the world which are incapable of maintaining their international obligations.

Mr. REED. But this is the point I want to make. If the members of the league guarantee each other as to their territory, then they exclude from the league certain other nations. Is it the proposition that those other nations shall be allowed to invade each other or not?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The proposition is that that is a matter which the league will use its agencies and its resources to prevent.

Mr. REED. To prevent?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It will undertake to do what it can to prevent wars among those who are not members of the league.

Mr. REED. Very well, but——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Just as the United States has used its agencies in the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. REED. Now, if the Senator will pardon an interruption, when it uses its agencies to prevent war between those other nations that are not in the league it does prevent the change of their territory; it does maintain their territories the same as it maintains the territories of the States within the league.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Not at all; there is no guaranty at all; it simply——

Mr. REED. But is it——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me finish, if the Senator pleases. It simply undertakes to use its offices, its agencies, and its resources to adjust disputes between States which are outside the league.

Mr. REED. The Senator says to adjust now. A moment ago he said "to prevent," and the language of the instrument is "prevent."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; the language is not "prevent." The language is "to consider disputes" between nations which are outside the league.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, this is digressing a little, but very instructive. I am glad to be able to recur again to the thought of the Senator from Nebraska. Undoubtedly its obligation is confined to the members of the league, and our obligation to preserve the territorial integrity and political independence of other nations of the world is limited to the nations which sign the compact. It will be infinitely more unjust, infinitely more objectionable, if it is the purpose of those who are controlling the destinies of this instrument to confine the privileges of the league to a few self-appointed nations and to refuse admission to the great body of civilized peoples who need its protection, if there is any protection in it.

However, the point I am making is not disturbed by the suggestions of the Senator from Nebraska. I am not advocating wars of aggression, and I fervently hope that when the welfare of humanity requires changes in sovereign boundaries they may be peacefully effected; but I would hold myself false to the interests of mankind if I should vote to ratify a treaty which obligated my country, under all circumstances and under every condition, to send our men to death on the battle field in any and every land to maintain the boundaries which are now established. I know, the Senator from Nebraska knows, every person within the sound of my voice knows, and every thoughtful citizen of the Republic knows, we would not fulfill any such obligation, and if we were to enter into it we would be guilty of worse than Punic faith.

I pass, Mr. President, to article 19, which I beg to read:

To those colonies and territories which as a consequence of the late war have ceased to be under the sovereignty of the States which formerly governed them and which are inhabited by peoples not yet able to stand by themselves under the strenuous conditions of the modern world, there should be applied the principle that the well-being and development of such peoples form a sacred trust of civilization and that securities for the performance of this trust should be embodied in the constitution of the league.

The best method of giving practical effect to this principle is that the tutelage of such peoples should be intrusted to advanced nations, who by reason of their resources, their experience, their geographical position can best undertake this responsibility, and that this tutelage should be exercised by them as mandatories on behalf of the league.

The character of the mandate must differ according to the stage of the development of the principle of the geographical situation of the territory, its economic conditions, and other similar circumstances.

Certain communities formerly belonging to the Turkish Empire have reached a stage of development in which their existence as independent nations can be provisionally recognized subject to the rendering of administrative advice and assistance by a mandatory power until such time as they are able to stand alone. The wishes of these communities must be a principal consideration in the selection of the mandatory power.

Other peoples, especially those of central Africa, are at such a stage that the mandatory must be responsible for the administration of the territory under such conditions as will guarantee freedom of conscience or religion, subject only to the maintenance of public order and morals, the prohibition of abuses, such as the slave trade, the arms traffic, and the liquor traffic, and the prevention of the establishment of fortifications or military and naval bases and of military training of the natives for other than police purposes and the defense of territory, and will also secure equal opportunities for the trade and commerce of other members of the league.

There are territories, such as southwest Africa and certain of the South Pacific Isles, which, owing to the sparseness of their population, or their small size, or their remoteness from the centers of population, or their geographical continuity to the mandatory State, and other circumstances, can be best administered under the laws of the mandatory State as integral portions thereof, subject to the safeguards above mentioned in the interests of the indigenous population.

In every case of mandate, the mandatory State shall render to the league an annual report in reference to the territory committed to its charge.

The degree of authority, control, or administration to be exercised by the mandatory State shall, if not previously agreed upon by the high contracting parties, in each case be explicitly defined by the executive council in a special act or charter.

The high contracting parties further agree to establish at the seat of the league a mandatory commission to receive and examine the annual reports of the mandatory powers and to assist the league in insuring the observance of the terms of all mandates.

When I first read article 10, I was under the impression that nothing could surpass it in its repugnance to good morals and to the civilization of the world; but I am bound to admit that article 19 is the climax of conflict. This article is not only bad in and of itself, but it is the grossest violation of our powers under the Constitution that has ever fallen under my observation. I can best examine it by taking a concrete instance of what may happen under it, and I select this instance because it is what the members of the league expect shall happen under it.

The league is authorized to issue a mandate requiring the United States to take possession and administer the affairs of Turkey. I think it is well understood in Paris that under that provision, which declares that the wishes of these communities must be a principal consideration in the selection of the mandatory power, as explained and interpreted by the speech of the President in Boston, in which he says that all those countries want us to rule over them rather than Great Britain, France, or Italy, and it may be, I think, assumed that when the mandate issues from the executive council of the league it will be to the United States and it will command us to take possession of the Turkish Empire. I repeat, the league is authorized to issue a mandate requiring the United States to take possession and administer the affairs of Turkey with an indefinite territory both east and west of Constantinople. This mandate will command the United States to undertake the tutelage of the Turkish Empire until the people who live in this uncertain territory are "able to stand by themselves under the strenuous conditions of the modern world."

This gigantic task is to be assumed upon the theory "that the well being and development of such peoples form a sacred trust of civilization." This trusteeship may be for years or it may be forever, depending entirely upon the judgment of the league respecting our success in bringing these people up to the high standards which the league may demand for self-governing countries. I confess to more amazement when I reflect upon this proposal than ever filled my mind before. It does not require a man trained in the study of the law to determine instantly that the people of the United States never gave to the President and Congress, or both, the authority to do this thing. There is not a semblance of power in the Constitution to perform such an act, and the proposal is more inconsistent, if that can be, with the spirit of the Constitution than with its letter.

I will not refer at this moment to the decisions of the Supreme Court, in which that great tribunal has undertaken to define, to explain, to illustrate our authority to enter into treaties with foreign nations, but at some future time that study will be found exceedingly interesting and very enlightening.

Unquestionably we have the right to acquire territory by conquest, and it is just as clear that we have the right to acquire it by purchase, but we have not conquered the Turkish Empire nor have we bought one foot of its soil. Moreover, when we acquire territory, whether by conquest or purchase, it becomes the territory of the United States, controlled by the laws of the United States, and destined either for admission as a State, or to be governed directly as a Territory, or to be disposed of as the will of Congress may direct.

To insist that we can take possession of the territory of any nation, with its millions of people, simply to act as the tutor of these people and to police the country, solely to make the inhabitants better men and women, is the wildest fancy which ever entered the human mind.

But this is not all. We are commanded to govern Turkey, not according to the laws which our authorities may enact, but to govern its people, to educate them, to train them, to make them able to stand alone, under the direction and according to the instructions of the league. I quote again from article 19:

> In every case of mandate, the mandatory shall render to the league an annual report in reference to the territory committed to its charge. The degree of authority, control, or administration to be exercised by the mandatory State shall, if not previously agreed upon by the high contracting parties, in each case be explicitly defined by the executive council in a special act or charter.

We are thus not only to assume the responsibility of governing Turkey, but we must attempt to do it in the manner and degree required by the league. If we take the Turkish Empire, and may lawfully do so, it is ours to control, and we can no more surrender that sovereignty to the executive council of the league of nations than we could assign the Constitution of the United States to the British Parliament and vest that body with the authority to govern the people of the United States.

What I have said I am quite willing to admit is a question for lawyers, and if I ever hear of one who affirms the validity of such a transaction I shall be tempted to tear my certificate of admission to the bar of the courts of this country into little pieces and consign the fragments to the flames, and thereafter I shall do my best to forget that I ever belonged to the honorable profession of the law.

With a great many the authority to execute this mad proposal will be of little moment, and I turn to examine it from another point of view.

It is to be assumed that if the mandate for the government or tutelage of Turkey is given to the United States we will perform our mission with our own men and our own money. Anyone who has even casual knowledge of the conditions prevailing in the Turkish Empire knows that the maintenance of order and the enforcement of the laws and for the tutelage which will accompany the endeavor will require an army of more than a hundred thousand men for many years to come. It will require a civilian force of even more. The fathers and mothers of America will be asked to send their sons 5,000 miles from home to keep the Turk, the Armenian, the Syrian, and the Arab in order and train them for self-government. The civil-service employees in Constantinople will outnumber our employees in Washington. It is safe to assume that the annual cost of this enterprise will exceed a billion dollars. It is all too absurd to contemplate. When the American people reflect upon such a proposal they will reject it with all the emphasis of unanimity.

I hope that it will not be understood that I have any lack of sympathy for the oppressed and miserable people of this part of the world. Whatever we can do for them to lighten their heavy burdens, to bring hope into their cheerless lives, to inspire them for their independence, we ought to do and will do. Were I asked to name the first thing which seems to have been largely forgotten at Paris—and the best thing which can be done—I would instantly say disarm the Turk, just as we ought to disarm the German, and then allow these people, with all the assistance we can lawfully render, to work out their own salvation; and if salvation is to be permanent they must work it out for themselves.

Mr. President, until now I have been discussing articles in the proposed constitution, the construction of which seems to have created no difference of opinion. At this time I bring to the attention of the Senate certain provisions which may be said to be somewhat obscure and which were interpreted by the Senator from Illinois. I mean the consequences which may follow the failure of nations to agree upon a nonarbitrable or nonjusticiable controversy. It is perfectly clear that with respect to such disputes—keep your mind fixed, if you will, upon the classification of disputes. First, there are the disputes which arise between nations and which can be adjudicated by reference to recognized law and established facts. These are issues for courts, and I should like to see an international court permanently established for the disposition of issues or controversies of that character. I am now referring to controversies which arise with respect to the policies of nations, with respect to laws which they pass for the government of their own people, which affect their honor, which affect the lives of the sovereignties themselves—with respect to such disputes, we are asked to agree that there shall be no resort to war without previously submitting them to arbitration or to inquiry by the executive council, and that we are not to go to war with respect to them for a period of three months after the award by the arbitrators or a recommendation by the executive council. I have already said that I am heartily in favor of referring such matters to a body representing the powers of the world and agreeing not to resort to war for settlement until there has been ample opportunity for full, open discussion with every civilized nation on earth. My objection to articles 12, 15, and 16 is not alone that they provide for an award or recommendation by the executive council. That might be tolerated were it not that we bind ourselves not to resort to war against a member of the league which complies with the award of the arbitrators or the recommendation of the executive council. This agreement is found in both article 12 and article 15. In the last article the language is:

> If the report—

These are nonjusticiable questions; questions of policy, which are internal in their character—

> If the report is unanimously agreed to by the members of the council other than the parties to the dispute, the high contracting parties agree that they will not go to war with any party which complies with the recommendations, and that if any party shall refuse so to comply the council shall propose measures necessary to give effect to the recommendation.

Nonjusticiable controversies embrace a wide range. They include disputes over exclusion laws, immigration laws, tariff laws, and scores of other subjects which you will at once have in mind.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. I notice that the Senator from Iowa throughout his entire speech calls this "a constitution." If it is a constitution, what have we to do with it? If it is a league of peace under a treaty, we can, of course, ratify or not ratify it, but if it is a constitution, as the Senator says it is, what are we to do with it?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina is better able to answer that question than am I. I have accepted the terminology which the President of the United States has attached to it. He calls it "a proposed constitution for the league of nations," and I am but following his high example in referring to it by that name.

Do not forget that the proposed constitution makes us agree that we will not go to war with any nation which accepts and performs the recommendation of the executive council. The effect of the proposed agreement can be best understood—and

I want the close and sympathetic attention of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, to this phase of the matter—the effect of the proposed agreement can be best understood by assuming a concrete instance, and I take one that has been the cause of much ill feeling between Japan and the United States.

These countries are to be the high contracting parties, and under the agreement Japan would have the right to refer to the executive council our discrimination against the citizens of that country and the executive council, exclusive of the United States and Japan, would have the right to decide it. Suppose it should be decided against the United States; suppose it should be decided that the United States ought to admit the subjects of Japan not only to our borders, but to our citizenship upon the same terms on which we admit the citizens or subjects of Great Britain, France, or Italy? Then the council would recommend that subjects of the Japanese Empire should be admitted to the United States upon the same terms and with the same privileges accorded to the subjects of other nations.

What then? Follow me now, those who have thought that this article did not contain the seeds of war, dissension, and discord. What then? Japan would say to the world, "We are complying with the recommendation of the executive council as recited in article 12 and as repeated in article 15." In these circumstances we have agreed not once, but twice, that we will not resort to war against the complying nation. Japan is the complying nation; and that means that Japanese subjects must be admitted as are the people of other countries. We could not keep them out except through war.

Moreover, under article 16, if we should go to war in order to exclude them, we shall then have committed an act of war against all the other members of the league, which would lead to the severance automatically of all trade or financial relations between our country and the world.

When we reflect upon the composition of the executive council, it is incredible that a provision of this character should commend itself to the American people.

A controversy of the same character would arise with regard to the qualifications which we demand for admission into the United States of the inhabitants especially of southern and eastern Europe. The same controversy in character would arise were Great Britain or France or any other country to complain of the tariff laws which we may enact in order to protect the industries of our own land.

I do not mention the wider, more abstract controversies that would inevitably spring up. These are enough. I want at some time—not now—a Senator who proposes to advise the American people to adopt this constitution precisely as it has come from the hands of the Paris conference to ask the American people whether they are willing that an executive council composed of the five nations which have already been mentioned in the constitution, and four others of whom we do not know, shall pass upon the wisdom of our laws excluding the subjects of certain oriental countries from the United States. I want there to be no doubt with regard to the scope and effect, if not the purpose, of the thing we are asked to undertake, the thing to which we are asked to assent.

I predict that when you make it fairly known to the people of this country that the validity, the wisdom, and the character of the legislation which we adopt for our own protection and for safeguarding the citizenship of our own country are to be submitted to a tribunal of the world, and that, in the event the decision or recommendation is adverse to us, we must accept it or violate the obligations which we solemnly assume, this proposal will be rejected so emphatically that never again will any one have the temerity to propose it to a country like ours.

Mr. President, I must not pursue the analysis further. The constitution of the league as proposed is not a compact among nations to prevent war; it is vastly more than that. It is the creation of a world nation, and if observed it will draw to the executive council and body of delegates so many of the vital powers of government that the remainder will become as unimportant as the jurisdiction of the States in the American Union as compared with the jurisdiction of the Federal Government. This is its purpose. It was not only foreshadowed in the addresses delivered by the President before he went abroad, but it is clearly perceived in the report which the President made to the peace conference.

Other eminent men so understand it. I quote from the newspaper report of a speech made by our distinguished ambassador to Great Britain, delivered in London on Washington's Birthday:

"George Washington employed the idea of a league of nations in the American constitutional convention," declared John W. Davis, the American ambassador—

A man of the clearest mind and a man of commanding ability—in a speech at the Washington day dinner of the English-speaking Union. He likened the American colonies with their new-found freedom immediately after the Revolution to the nations of the world today.

Why attempt to obscure the plain and obvious meaning of the effort which is now being made?

Mr. President, it will be a sad day for humanity when their affairs pass under the government of a world nation.

I believe that it is possible for us to do everything that can be done to prevent war without transferring to a foreign power the Government of America. A day or two ago I read the following statement issued by a distinguished company of gentlemen headed by Mr. Taft as they toured the country:

The war against military autocracy has been won because the great free nations acted together, and its results will be secured only if they continue to act together. The forces making for autocratic rule on the one hand and for violence of bolshevism on the other are still at work. In 50 years the small State of Prussia so organized central Europe as to defy the world. In the present disorganized state of central and eastern Europe that can be done again on a still larger scale and menace all free institutions.

This statement is conspicuously unfair and uncandid. It is not necessary to abolish national power; it is not necessary that the authority to govern all the people of the world shall be absorbed by one body of men in order to protect the nations which are springing from the ruins of Europe. All that we need to do is to disarm Germany and permit these nations to accomplish their own destinies and achieve the highest victories of civilization.

Mr. President, this paper before us—the constitution of the league—presents a strange anomaly; it presents curious, interesting contradictions. It carefully provides a guaranty that would preserve the territorial integrity and political independence of nations as they now exist, and we must fight to do it, no matter when the invasion occurs or how righteous the cause of the invader may be. On the other hand, after we have received the guaranty that our territorial limits shall never be changed nor our independence overthrown, we turn over to an alien body the determination of the character of our citizenship. It would seem that the framers of this remarkable document considered it more important that our territory should remain intact than our right to say what men and women should live within our borders.

In another aspect, however, the apparent inconsistency is reconciled when it is remembered that the character of our citizens, as compared with the citizens of the world, becomes an immaterial matter, inasmuch as the United States ceases to be distinct, and that the executive council or the body of delegates has the same tender consideration for all parts of its world-wide domain.

Mr. President, I do not ignore the deep anxiety which the President, as the spokesman for this instrument, feels for the laboring people of the world and his keen desire to see that full justice is done to the people—and I quote him—"who go to bed tired and wake up without the stimulation of lively hope." They understand their wrongs, and they are moving to correct them; sometimes in the best way, sometimes in the worst way. They need no such league of nations to assert their rights. They have always been strong enough to do it here, and now they are powerful enough to do it everywhere. Just what will come from the turmoil through which the world is now passing God only knows, but we fervently hope that from the conflict justice to every human being will emerge; but a polyglot and incoherent power imposed upon this mass of conflicting and irreconcilable aspirations will do more to plunge all mankind into continual strife than any plan that can be conceived.

The President repeats over and over again that we must accept our responsibility in world work, and I agree with him. I am no advocate of isolation. It seems plain to me, however, that the chief contribution to peace and good order which we can make at this time is to meet boldly and to solve wisely for ourselves the one mighty question which is tearing Europe asunder and which is advancing upon us with terrific force. If we can not show the world by our own example that the workingman can get more justice, more happiness, more comfort under a reconstructed system of individual industrial activity than he can secure through complete socialism, the world will try the experiment, and, from my standpoint, with the most disastrous results to civilization.

We ought now to be bending all our energies upon the vital subject of reconstruction, and this should be our immediate contribution to the welfare of humanity.

Mr. President, our history is full of the noblest inspiration. We entered a trackless continent. We have filled it with the homes of an hundred millions of people; the happiest homes in all the world. We have enriched it with the best farms, the most productive factories, the greatest system of transportation, and the mightiest commerce upon which the sun shines. Our progress has been the wonder and the envy of mankind. We have pursued the path of honor and justice, and it has led us to the highest distinction and the most enduring fame. We have so guarded and cherished the rights of man that our citizenship stands without peer throughout the earth. Our laws are humane, and protect the weak against the aggressions of the strong. With all its mistakes, the Government of the United States has done more for the welfare of its people and more for the enlightenment of the world than any other government ever established among men. We love peace and we will devote all our intelligence, all our efforts, to attain it; but, sir, we will not surrender our right to live under our own institutions, to control our own destiny, to insure the interests of our own citizens, to worship at the shrine of our own patriots, to any alien body which the wit of man can conceive. If this be to accept the challenge recently announced, I accept it. I was born an American; I have lived an American; and, God permitting, I will die an American.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. OWEN obtained the floor.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of submitting a report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of California in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Virginia for that purpose?

Mr. OWEN. I do.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to report favorably, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I object to the presentation of the report at this time.

Mr. SWANSON. I hope the Senator will not object to the report being presented and printed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I object to the presentation of the report at this time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. OWEN. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator from Oklahoma yield for this suggestion? We were about to take a vote on the question of the adoption of the conference report on the river and harbor appropriation bill. I understand that there is no opposition to it, and I believe we can have that report agreed to and out of the way.

Mr. OWEN. I should be willing to yield the floor for that purpose for a reasonable length of time, though I have given notice that I would speak this afternoon. If it does not take too long, I shall be pleased to yield for that purpose.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am sure it will not take more than a few minutes.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not know of any objection to the adoption of this report, but I think we ought to have a quorum present. There are a number of Senators absent who, I think, have a right to be here; and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Hitchcock	Martin, Va.	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Johnson, Cal.	Moses	Spencer
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Kellogg	New	Swanson
Colt	Kendrick	Norris	Thompson
Culberson	Kenyon	Overman	Townsend
Cummins	King	Owen	Trammell
Fletcher	Kirby	Page	Underwood
France	La Follette	Pittman	Vardaman
Frelinghuysen	Lewis	Pomerene	Warren
Gay	McCumber	Ransdell	Watson
Gerry	McKellar	Reed	Weeks
Gore	McLean	Robinson	Wolcott
Gronna	McNary	Shafroth
Hale	Martin, Ky.	Sheppard

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] are detained on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that Mr. BUCHANAN had been appointed one of the conferees on the part of the House on the bill (H. R. 13277) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, in the place of Mr. MCANDREWS.

The message also announced that the House further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law, asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DENT, Mr. FIELDS, and Mr. KAHN managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14078) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5236) to amend sections 7, 10, and 11 of the Federal reserve act and section 5172, Revised Statutes of the United States.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it had been my intention to address the Senate to-morrow on the subject of the league of nations, and I had expected to do so at the expiration of the morning hour. In view, however, of the critical condition of legislation, and in view of the fact that we only have one week remaining, I have concluded to modify my notice to some extent and to say that I shall not speak at the time I had expected to do so, and shall not speak before 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and then only briefly, and in case the progress of business of the Senate is such as to justify it.

Mr. President, in giving this notice I wish to call attention to the very serious condition of legislation. We still have eight general appropriation bills which must pass the Senate before adjournment, or which ought to, unless we are to run into serious complications. We have the bond bill, which must be passed if the credit of the country is to be protected. We have the railroad money bill, a bill absolutely necessary to provide the Government with money for the operation of the railroads. We have the wheat fund bill, a bill absolutely necessary to supply the Government with the proper authority and means for caring for the wheat crop, for which it is already under an impressive obligation. In addition to that, we have in conference the leasing bill, the water-power bill, and the contract validation bill, all of which have almost reached the point of completion, and each of which is highly important to the country.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to ask the Senator why these bills have not been brought in. The President or the Secretary of Agriculture wrote a letter to the Congress early in December asking Congress to take up the wheat question. It is an entirely simple one. Long ago the Railroad Administration asked to have the appropriation made for the railroads. Why have not those bills been brought in, if they are to be taken care of by the Congress? They have been sleeping in committees.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am not raising a controversial question, and I hope the Senator will not interrupt me.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I decline to yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. But I want to know, and other Senators ought to know. If we are to be chided for not passing bills, how are we going to pass them if they are not brought in?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I disclaim the charge of chiding the Senate. I am merely stating the facts.

Mr. KELLOGG. Well, I am stating the facts, too.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GORE. I should like to state that the wheat-guaranty bill is now on the calendar. I had hoped to call it up this morning, and I will call it up at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I am going to rise to a question of order. I call for the unfinished business. I do not think we ought to delay the bill by all this discussion. I want to get the bill through.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN. While I am on my feet I am going to announce to the Senate right now, so that Senators may understand it, that I am going to ask the Senate to stay here to-night until this bill is passed; and I shall take such proceedings as are necessary to bring here Senators who leave to go to some entertainment.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to ask the Senator if he is going to bring Senators away from the White House?

Mr. OVERMAN. I am going to bring them from anywhere, under arrest, if necessary.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I want again to ask consent to have the question of the adoption of the conference report on the river and harbor bill put to the Senate. That was the pending question when the discussion began, and my information is that there is no real opposition to the adoption of the report. Therefore I should like to ask the Senator's permission at this time to have a vote on that question.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I have no objection, if it will only take a few minutes, as the Senator tells me.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think if we lay aside a bill that has not yet reached the legislative stage where it gets into conference for the purpose of debating conference reports we are liable to get to the end of this session with a whole lot of legislation that will never reach the conference-report stage. It seems to me it is more important now to pass these appropriation bills through the Senate, so that they can get into conference, than to take up time in discussing conference reports. With that idea in view, and that only, I shall object to the unanimous consent requested.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I simply want to say that I would not ask it if I thought there was to be any extended discussion on the conference report. My information was that there would really be no objection to the adoption of this report; and I thought we could dispose of it and have that much business behind us. It seems to me very important. It was the pending question, raised in the regular order this morning, and it was debated for two hours and a half by a speech on the league of nations.

Since objection is made now, I want to give notice that at the conclusion of the consideration of this bill I shall ask the Senate to take up this conference report and dispose of it before we adjourn, and I hope to do it to-day.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill has been agreed to by the House. I submit the conference report on the part of the Senate; and, as it is a privileged motion, I move its immediate consideration.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, is it in order to ask for the reading of the report? I ask that the report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14078) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 24, 25, 30, 36, 53, 60, 63, 64, 69, 70, 71, 94, and 95.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 28, 29, 32, 33, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 51, 52, 54, 55, 56, 57, 59, 65, 67, 68, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 91, 92, 93, 97, 100, and 101, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 2 of the bill, in line 9, strike out "$7,540" and insert in lieu thereof "$7,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Clerical assistance to Senators: For clerical assistance to Senators who are not chairmen of the committees specifically provided for herein: Seventy-nine clerks at $2,500 each; 79 assistant clerks at $1,600 each; 79 assistant clerks at $1,500 each, $442,400: Provided, That such clerks and assistant clerks shall be ex officio clerks and assistant clerks of any committee of which their Senator is chairman.

"Ninety-four additional clerks at $1,200 each, one for each Senator having no more than one clerk and two assistant clerks for himself or for the committee of which he is chairman, $112,800; in all, $555,200."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,400"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "fifteen"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$564,840"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 34 and 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter stricken out by said amendments, and on page 33 of the bill omit all after the words "per annum," in line 9, down to and including line 16; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 36 of the bill, in line 24, strike out "$215,720" and insert in lieu thereof "$217,820"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Provided, That of this amount not to exceed $184,160 shall be available for the expenses authorized to be incurred by the Secretary of Labor upon request of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in accordance with the act 'to provide revenue, and for other purposes,' approved February 24, 1919: Provided further, that no salary shall be paid out of the said sum of $184,160 at a rate exceeding $3,000 per annum"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$7,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,059,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "49" and insert in lieu thereof "35"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 96 of the bill, in line 2, strike out "$672,790" and insert in lieu thereof "$672,470"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out line 51 of the matter inserted by said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "January 7, 1919: Provided, That payment to any employee for leave of absence not earned in proportion to the term of employment shall be deducted from the refund authorized in this section, and the provision made in this act for the transportation of employees shall not be supplemented in any manner by the various services in which they are employed"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 96, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 6 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "compensation" insert the word "only"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 98, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the matter inserted by said amendment all of lines 1 to 17, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 9. That a joint commission is created to be known as the 'joint commission on reclassification of salaries,' which shall consist of three Senators, who are now Members of the Congress, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Representatives, who are now Members of the Congress, to be appointed by the Speaker. Said commission shall submit its report and recommendations as early as possible, and, in any event, by the second Monday in January, 1920, and the members of such commission shall receive a compensation at the rate of $625 per month, unless they are receiving other compensation from the Government. Vacancies occurring in the membership of the commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 99, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the matter inserted by said amendment after the word "of," in line 4, down to and including the word "whom," in line 15, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "two Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and two Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker, who"; and the Senate agree to the same.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
O. W. UNDERWOOD,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
J. W. BYRNS,
J. M. EVANS,
W. H. STAFFORD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move the immediate consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). The Senator from Alabama moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I will say to the Senate, in reference to the items that were put into the bill either by the committee or on the floor of the Senate concerning the Senate force, the clerks, and other provisions relating directly to the Senate, that they have all been agreed to as the bill passed the Senate. With reference to the other amendments there are only a few minor changes as to those that were placed in the bill by the Senate. Practically all of the Senate amendments have been agreed to.

I ask for a vote on the adoption of the report.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I just wanted to ask the Senator what was done with reference to amendments numbered 94 and 95, on page 156, striking out the words "at a rate per annum," so as to leave the $200 appropriation, without being at the rate of that increase?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator that the Senate conferees insisted upon the Senate provisions, and the House refused to yield, and the Senate conferees finally had to yield, and the amendments went out.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I was engaged during the earlier part of the Senator's statement. Did I understand him correctly to the effect that the provisions which were incorporated in the bill by the Senate relating to the clerks of Senators remain as they passed the Senate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senate amendments relating to clerks, and other matters concerning the Senate, were all agreed to as the bill passed the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator from Ohio that the provision in relation to the clerks, as I have no doubt he understood, only applies from July 1, 1919, until June 30, 1920. This bill did not provide for the clerks from March 4 until June 30 of this year.

Mr. POMERENE. I understood that was taken care of by a special resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to say to the Senator that there was a resolution submitted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] providing for those clerks from March 4, 1919, to June 30, 1919.

Mr. POMERENE. I so understood.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask for a vote on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; I did not want to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield the floor.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, amendments numbered 94 and 95 seem to be rather insignificant, and yet they were adopted by the Senate to correct an absolute injustice, and we can not afford to do an injustice even in a small matter. I want to take just a minute or two to call the attention of the Senate to what this injustice is and what the effect of receding from these amendments by the Senate is.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, we provided for an increase of 5 and 10 per cent for persons getting a certain salary. This affected the mechanics in the navy yards and in the arsenals. But after June 30, 1918, we provided for an increase of $120, but provided that it should not be of benefit to those who received, I think, an increase during that year at the rate of $200 per annum. The effect of that was that these employees lost the 5 and 10 per cent increase.

On the 1st of July, 1918, some of them received an increase in their basic pay of 8 cents a day. Then, I think, some time in November they received a further increase of 56 cents a day in the rate paid, making an increase from then on at the rate of 64 cents a day. That, figured for 313 days in the year, would be an increase at the rate of $200.32 for the year. Because of that it was held that those employees did not get the benefit of the $120 raise. So employees who for some period during the year got an increase in pay which, computed on every day in the year, would make more than $200 will not get the benefit of this $240 raise. Now, that is not fair. It is not just.

It may be said that the wages of the employees in the navy yards and arsenals are regulated from time to time by an adjustment board. That is true, and yet the decisions of these boards are sometimes long delayed, and they do not get the benefit of the increase for, possibly, months. Take, for instance, the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919. As I said awhile ago, one increase was given of 8 cents a day on the 1st of July. They did not get the further increase until some time in November, and then they got that increase for the balance of the year.

Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment made by the Senate was, in my judgment, to carry out what was the real intent of Congress when it first provided that those that got an increase during the year of $200 should not get the benefit of the $120 raise; that if they got an actual increase of $200 during the year, then they did not get the benefit of the $120. I believe that was really the intention of Congress, but under the construction that has been given, that was not the effect of it. The effect of the amendment made by the Senate was to make it certain that unless they received an increase of $200 during the year they would get the benefit of this $240 raise.

Mr. President, the rest of the Senate may regard it as a small matter to ask for the reduction of this conference report. I do not believe we ought to permit that injustice to be done; and so, because of the rejection of this amendment, because of the injustice that it really would work, I ask the Senate to reject the conference report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, as I said, the House conferees yielded on almost all the amendments, except four or five, that the Senate put on the bill. The Senate conferees insisted on the amendment the Senator has referred to. The House conferees would not yield. Under the legislative condition of this bill, a few days from the end of this session, in view of the importance of the bill, the Senate conferees did not feel that they could afford to jeopardize the bill by holding out further on this one amendment. Therefore they yielded. I do not think the Senate can afford to jeopardize the bill by sending it back to conference and I hope the conference report will be agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE SESSION.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, in view of the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and the pressure of business, I presume we should not consider any of the important pending appropriation bills but simply rush them through to passage before the 4th of March.

In the very short time I have been in the Senate, and during the war, I have never discussed a political matter or made any charges against any party on any subject. I should like to call the attention of the Senate for a moment to the status of the appropriation bills and to the time when they came into the Senate. Before doing so let me read just a sentence which appeared in the morning paper:

REPUBLICANS ARE BLAMED.

It was reported that the failure of any of the matters of urgent legislation would be charged by the President and administration leaders to the Republicans. Mr. Wilson was said to have been advised that except for Republican opposition the present situation was such that all appropriation and other bills could be passed. The President was reported ready to advise the country of the situation and insist upon the enactment of all urgent measures.

Mr. President, I want the country to understand the situation.

The gigantic Army appropriation bill was reported in the House on February 10, nearly two and one-half months after Congress met. It was reported in the Senate on February 25, yesterday, and only seven days of the session remaining.

The naval appropriation bill was not reported in the House until February 1. It was received and referred to the Senate committee on February 12, and has not yet been reported. That is the bill which carries $750,000,000 for a navy to support and encourage the plan for a league of nations.

The Military Academy bill was reported in the Senate on February 13.

The Agricultural appropriation bill was sent to the Senate committee on February 3 and has not yet been reported.

The fortifications bill was sent to the Senate committee on February 19 and was reported in the Senate on February 22.

The urgent deficiency bill was reported in the Senate on February 1, and is now in conference.

The Diplomatic and Consular bill was referred to the Senate committee on January 23 and was reported to the Senate on February 8.

The sundry civil bill is still in the House of Representatives, and there are other bills in the same status.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SWANSON. We have the naval bill ready to report, and I hope the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] will not object to its being reported.

Mr. KELLOGG. I should like to ask the Senator how many days the naval appropriation bill has been in the Senate committee?

Mr. SWANSON. It was received from the House on the 16th of February. The next day we had a meeting of the committee and appointed a subcommittee. The subcommittee considered it, and the full committee was called last Saturday and was in continuous session and has just completed it to-day, and is ready to report it.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senate committee—and I do not contend that it is too much time—required several weeks in which to consider the bill, it should not then ask the Senate to pass it in a couple of hours.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Minnesota to state that the Agricultural appropriation bill had not been reported.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is so stated upon the history of the appropriation bills on the calendar that I find on my table.

Mr. GORE. It was reported on Saturday last.

Mr. KELLOGG. Very well; it was reported on Saturday last.

Mr. GORE. And I hope to be able to reach it before we adjourn to-night.

Mr. SWANSON. I hope the Senator from Washington will withdraw his objection to reporting the naval bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No.

Mr. LODGE. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. KELLOGG. I deny absolutely that the Republicans are responsible for reports on these bills submitted a few days before adjournment, with the result that the wheat bill, the naval bill, the Agricultural bill, the Army bill, carrying far greater appropriations than ever before, are expected to pass within a few hours without discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has not named all the bills by any manner of means, for in the House there is the general deficiency bill, which has not even been reported to the House of Representatives, and that bill will carry about a billion dollars. Then there is the bond bill, carrying a billion dollars for the encouragement of our commerce with foreign countries and for the issue of notes and certificates. Then there is the railroad bill, appropriating $750,000,000 to advance to the Railroad Adminstration. Those bills are not yet before the Senate, and all these are to be put through the Senate with the bills the Senator has enumerated within the next five days or somebody is going to say it is on account of the Republican opposition.

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; that is exactly it.

Mr. NEW and Mr. THOMAS addressed the Chair.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator allow me to say a word?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield first to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I merely wish to remind the Senator from Minnesota of the fact that the Senate Committee on Military Affairs did not get the Army appropriation bill until three or four days ago, and that the subcommittee to which it was referred, in order that it might be given most expeditious treatment, worked not only all day but until midnight in order that it might be reported to this body. With all the work that could possibly be put on it, devoting every minute day and night for days, we have just been able to report it to the Senate.

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. I am glad to have gentlemen add their remarks.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have been in the Senate during the last three Congresses, and my experience is that these bills invariably come to the calendar during the closing days of a session. There is nothing unusual in this situation. It is natural for each party to blame the other for the delay, but to my mind it sounds very much like the pot calling the kettle black. We are both to blame—not intentionally so, perhaps, but both to blame—for the fact that but four days of this session remain, with a huge congested calendar before us.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask the Senator from Colorado to yield to me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. KELLOGG. I can only yield to one at a time, if the Senator pleases.

Mr. OVERMAN. I asked the Senator from Colorado to yield to me.

Mr. THOMAS. I can not, because the Senator from Minnesota has the floor. I am about through. I merely wish to say that during the last three weeks we have none of us attended to the business of the public. We are talking about matters of vast importance, but having no place within the arena of the Senate at present. That is the reason why we are not going to be able to transact this business.

As far as I am concerned, I have predicted, and I venture again the prediction, that we must have an extra session, and that within a very few days.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

Mr. KELLOGG. I am not blaming anyone or any party. I am objecting to the statement that the Republicans are to be blamed because appropriation bills have not been passed, when I have pointed out that they have all come before the Senate within the last few days, or not at all, and we are expected to agree to billions of appropriations on faith, without even looking at them. That is my objection. I am not debating about an extra session; I do not relish the thought of sitting here all summer. I do, however, object to any such statement as I have read into the RECORD.

Mr. President, I wish to see some of these bills passed, especially the wheat guaranty bill, which is of the most vital importance, because the Government's price guaranty has incapacitated the elevator companies from purchasing and selling the crop. They are not in a position to do it, and there has been no machinery provided by enactment nor is there any money available with which to dispose of the crop which will begin to come into the market during June of this year.

I merely wish to bring this to the attention of the Senate, since the Senator from Nebraska sought to reprimand us for not passing the appropriation bills.

Now, as to speeches in the Senate, of course there have been some speeches upon the plan for a league of nations. Two or three of them have been delivered by Democrats and two or three of them by Republicans. There are three more Democrats who have given notice that they will speak upon this subject, and I believe two more Republicans. I shall be very glad to hear them, or they need not speak as far as I am concerned, because I am going to investigate it for myself, and that question is not one of party issue. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment. The occupants of the galleries have been notified, and they must keep still. There has not been very much confusion there, but if repeated the galleries will be cleared.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I beg pardon for consuming so much of the Senate's time, but I object to any attempt at placing the blame for delay at the door of the Republican Party when that party is not responsible for it.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, to test who is responsible for delay, I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Naval Affairs the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator does not need to try to make any test of that sort. We had a morning hour to-day from 12 o'clock until 2, when it was in order any minute of that time to present this report. The report, as far as I am concerned, shall be presented in regular order, and I object to its being received.

Mr. SWANSON. The committee was in session at that time and simply completed the bill a few hours ago. We hurried up the report so as to submit it to-day. Is objection made to receiving it?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

PROPOSED DRAFT OF A CONSTITUTION FOR THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the people of Europe and the people of the world are heartsick. Crêpe hangs on their doors. Men without arms, men without legs, men without eyes, men who are maimed in every conceivable way can be seen everywhere throughout the world as a result of this last great exhibition of human folly and ambition—the world war precipitated by the Hohenzollerns.

The world is anxious to establish world peace, world commerce, world happiness. And every statesman, it seems to me, Mr. President, should feel himself charged with the responsibility of trying constructively to attain this end.

Delegates representing the United States, Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan, Belgium, Brazil, China, Czecho-Slovakia, Greece, Poland, Portugal, Roumania, and Serbia have submitted for the consideration of the world and of the statesmen of the world a report formulating a plan for a league of nations.

No thoughtful man, certainly no thoughtful statesman, acquainted with the fallibility of man would expect that this first formulation of a draft would be absolutely perfect. It is not perfect, but it is a beginning and contains many things of very great value. And it can be perfected so as to completely safeguard the world against war and at the same time completely safeguard the sovereignty and absolute independence of each one of the member nations.

Statesmen anxious to serve the world should deal with this formulated plan in a spirit of helpfulness, of construction rather than in a spirit of tearing down or of destruction; much less should they show an intemperate or an ungenerous attitude in criticizing a document, the importance of which to the preservation of the future liberty and happiness of mankind is so obvious.

Mr. President, modern science, with the mastery of the air, with the submarine, with poisonous gases, with the steel war tank, with the machine gun, with rapid transportation facilities, with tremendous output of war machinery and the munitions of war make it unthinkable that the world will permit itself to be destroyed by a repetition of the recent war, which, if it is to be repeated, will be far more terrible than the last war and which will break down civilization itself. The men and the women and the children of the world who labor to produce the values of the world are entitled to peace and to happiness, and woe be to those blind statesmen who fail now to safeguard the people of the world in their rights to life, to liberty, and to the pursuit of happiness.

We have already seen the effect in Russia, in Germany, and in Austria of the complete failure of government to protect life, and we have seen the great mass of men moving like a terrible ocean sweeping the Romanoffs to their graves and tearing down the standards of government which have failed the reasonable expectation of the people. It was the blindness and the dullness, it was the stupidity, it was the greed, it was the arrogance of the officials of France that lead to the French Revolution. These same forces led to the revolution in Russia and then to the extreme form of political madness—the Bolsheviki movement of a class war—the war against those who have property or education by those who suffer from famine.

The representatives of the belligerent nations are now assembled at Paris conferring with the representatives of nations newly born and to be born, with a view to using the great influence of the belligerent powers in the establishment of self-governing nations, with territories properly delimited and with a view to giving protection to the backward nations occupying colonies and dependencies, such as the ignorant blacks of the German African colonies.

THE TASK IS THERE.

Mr. President, the immediate peace of the world, the cessation and prevention of actual war between the Balkan States, between Bulgaria and Roumania, between Roumania and the Ukraine, between Poland and Prussia, between the various States that are being born and the surrounding States imperatively demand that the conference of the great powers at Paris lay down the terms fixing territorial boundaries and establish the means by which to keep ambitious States from assailing each other and disturbing the peace of the world. They must consider the question of arbitration of international disputes. It was only the power of Germany and her allies which prevented the nations of the world from agreeing at The Hague to international arbitration and international disarmament in 1899 and 1907.

The Paris conference must consider the question of disarmament as a means of protecting the future peace and to prevent Europe again being thrown into an universal war. All the nations of the world are ready to agree to arbitration of international disputes and to disarmament. As far as the United States is concerned the House of Representatives has just voted in favor of reducing our Army to the minimum of domestic protection. We have made treaties with nations all over the world to arbitrate our differences. The people of the United States are in favor of international disarmament. They are in favor of arbitrating differences with other nations, and I say flatly and emphatically that it is better to leave any dispute that might arise between the officials of the United States and the officials of Brazil or Persia or South Africa or Great Britain unsettled, as some of the Revolutionary claims are still unsettled, than to fly to arms and kill millions of men to gratify official impatience, arrogance, or anger.

Mr. President, I have read carefully the so-called "Formulation of a plan for the league of nations." It interposes a number of obstacles to those who might desire to make war.

First. Article 10 pledges all of the member nations "to respect the territorial integrity and existing political independence" of all States members of the league. This is a guaranty of all the nations of the world of the utmost importance. Moreover, article 10 pledges all the nations of the world "to preserve against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence" of all the States members of the league, whether great or small. This is an undertaking of gigantic magnitude and is a positive bond safeguarding the territorial integrity and existing independence of all States. And no war can happen in the future if this pledge is respected either in the first or second of its provisions. If all nations respect the territorial integrity and political independence of other nations, we will have peace, and if any nation has the temerity not to respect this bond and be guilty of external aggression it will face all the world pledged to oppose it in its aggression. Aggressive war under such a menace is well-nigh inconceivable. Is not this a magnificent barrier against a future ambitious or warlike State?

Article 11 declares that any war or threat of war is a matter of concern to the league, and the high contracting parties reserve the right to take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual "to safeguard the peace of the nations." In other words, it is the declared intention of all of the nations of the world to take steps to prevent war, and to take these steps in time.

Article 12 pledges every nation that it "will in no case resort to war without previously submitting the question and matters involved either to arbitration or to inquiry by the executive council, and until three months after the award by the arbitrators or a recommendation by the executive council, and that they will not even then resort to war as against a member of the league which complies with the award of the arbitrators or the recommendation of the executive council."

Is not this pledge under article 12, made by all nations to every nation in the world, of great value as a deterrent and obstacle to war?

What official will dare to face the whole world with a breach of article 12?

Article 13 agrees to submit questions to arbitration and carry out in good faith the award.

Is not this agreement with all the nations of the world a most important means of preventing unsettled disputes leading to war?

If this had been the rule of international procedure it would have prevented the last war.

Article 14 provides a permanent court of international justice, which may sit as an arbitration tribunal under article 13.

Under article 15 the members agree to refer to the executive council any dispute likely to lead to rupture which is not submitted to arbitration, and if the council fails to agree, then to publish the arguments for and against by the majority and minority members, and here is also provided an appeal to the larger "body of delegates."

In this way the most troublesome cases would be submitted first to the council and, secondly, to the representatives of all the nations of the world for consideration, so that world opinion can be brought to bear upon the merits of the controversy and time ensue in which world opinion may be formulated and during which the litigants may feel the pressure of world opinion before they venture to go to war.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And world prejudice be obviated.

Mr. OWEN. And world prejudice be obviated, as the Senator from Mississippi very properly observes.

Mr. President, the only objection which I have to articles 12, 13, 14, and 15 is that they permit war as a remedy after having provided these means for conciliation and arbitration. In my own opinion, the making of war for the settling of a civil dispute is a heinous crime, and it should be branded by the league of nations and by the opinion of mankind as the highest of all international crimes. Nothing could be more wicked or more dastardly than the organized killing of human beings because of an odious dispute relative to property or relative to some alleged insult. As long as man remains with passion or with defective reason, so long may the world expect that some man will insult another man. And the bigger the fool and the more arrogant the ass the more likely he is to offer an insult. But those who have brains and self-control should know how to deal with those who lack brains and self-control.

Article 16, Mr. President, provides a world penalty for any member nation that wages war without previously submitting the matter of dispute to arbitration and inquiry and determination. This penalty is that when such an arrogant, warlike nation wages aggressive war in violation of the law laid down by the league, such nation—

"shall thereby, ipso facto, be deemed to have committed an act of war against all of the other members of the league which hereby undertake immediately to subject it to the severance of all trade or financial relations, the prohibition of all intercourse between their nationals and the nationals of the covenant-breaking State, and the prevention of all financial, commercial, or personal intercourse between the nationals of the covenant-breaking State and the nationals of any other State, whether a member of the league or not."

What official on the face of the earth would dare face this penalty. The penalty should be directed, however, in my judgment, against any nation that invades the territorial integrity of another nation. Official murder by aggressive war of offense should be stopped by the mandate of the people of the world, and officials who violate that mandate should be held personally responsible.

Is it not clear, Mr. President, that the captains of industry and the great financiers of the country whose support is vital to successful war and whose support in Germany was expressly solicited by William II as a primary condition to enable him to wage the late war would never under such a threat as this dare to support an aggressive war which would of necessity mean the instant paralysis of all their enterprises and their ultimate financial and industrial destruction? And is it possible that any official charged with the authority of declaring war would feel justified in declaring an aggressive war against all the world? The human imagination can not picture such a proposition. Moreover, we must now remember that every military dynasty is gone. Where are the Hapsburgs? Where are the Hohenzollerns? Where are the petty kings of the German States? Where is King Constantine of Greece? Where is the Romanoff family and the Czar of all the Russias? Where is the Sultan of Turkey? Where the King of Bulgaria? Where is the King of Roumania? Abdicated all, and fled to cover! What real war-making power has any king on the globe? Not one is left.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want, in reenforcement of what the Senator has said in the first clause of his last argument, to suggest to his mind this consideration: Why can not we in the treaty of peace take a leaf out of American history? The Senator remembers that the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution declares that no debt made by the Confederacy or by any State forming a member of the Confederacy should be valid or ever paid. That was passed with the idea of discouraging future projects of that sort. Suppose that in the treaty of peace we provided that all debts made by Germany, Austria, Turkey, and Bulgaria for the furtherance of their objects in this war were declared to be nullified and invalid, and that those respective Governments should issue an amount of bonds equal to the amount thereby nullified and rendered invalid, and that the proceeds of those bonds should be devoted to the restoration of Belgium, of northern France, and of Serbia, what would be the effect, I want to ask the Senator?

Mr. OWEN. I think it is a good suggestion as it would help to deter nations from making aggressive war for private objects. It would prove unprofitable under such circumstances.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Moreover, would it not have an effect upon the people who finance wars?

Mr. OWEN. Assuredly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Hereafter would not bankers who have financed wars say to the country wanting to finance an unjust or aggressive war, "Stop a minute; I must think as to whether or not this war is just, whether it is aggressive or defensive. If it is not just, the example of the American Republic in the thirteenth amendment and the example of the world in this treaty of peace leads me to suppose that I may lose my money." And if bankers are threatened with losing their money, does the Senator think they would finance any unjust war in the world?

Mr. OWEN. It is perfectly practicable to write into this formulated plan the suggestion made by the Senator from Mississippi, and it ought to be done, I think, for it would operate as one of the additional deterrents to war; and what we want to do is to deter war making.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not talking about writing it into these 26 articles of the league of nations, but I am talking about writing it into the final articles of peace.

Mr. OWEN. I am agreeable to its being written into both, to apply to Germany now and to apply to any other nation in the future that dares to make aggressive war on mankind. I thank the Senator for his suggestion. I think Senators ought to consider this matter from a constructive standpoint and help to perfect this formulated plan.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not propose to put it in this plan, for I think if you go to amending this plan you will have 14 other people to amend it, and you will never get it through; but I am talking about it as a part of the treaty of peace.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the greatest of all democracies, the United States, threw its financial power, its man power, on the side of democracy against autocracy, on the side of right against might, on the side of decency and justice and humanity against those who assaulted the great principles of human life. And autocracy lies in its political grave, never to be resurrected on this earth. Great Britain is a republic, and so are the great dominions speaking the English tongue—Canada, whose border, lying between the United States for 3,000 miles, is undefended except by those who love liberty and justice on both sides of this line; Australia, New Zealand, the South African Union are all republics, and all the colonies and dependencies of Great Britain are in effect republics in greater or less stages of advancement. France and her colonies are republics. Switzerland is a republic. Italy is a republic with a nominal King, who has no power against his parliament or against his people under their structure of government. And so Portugal is a republic, and Spain and Belgium and Holland and Denmark and Norway and Sweden are in substance republics.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They are democracies.

Mr. OWEN. They are democracies. They have the form of kingdoms, but the substance of democracies.

The nations being born in the Balkans and in Russia are being born as republics. And the subject people of Turkey, under the protection of the great democracies of the world, are being brought into being as embryo republics. China is a great republic. Siberia can not be conceived as being anything less than a republic. The Poles, the Jugo-Slavs, and Czecho-Slovakia are avowedly republics. Even Japan under an Emperor is ruled by a body of elders cooperating with the parliament chosen to represent every class of the people, and Japan, when this war broke out, threw herself at once without hesitation on the side of the great democracies of the world. What greater testimony could Japan have given of her attachment to the doctrines of liberty, justice, and civilization and of her hostility to dynastic autocracy? Where is there on earth remaining a military dynastic autocracy that would threaten the future peace of the world?

All the Governments of North and South America, all the Governments of Africa, of Asia, of Europe, of the East Indies, and of the West Indies are republics or under the patronage of republics.

The doctrine that might makes right is dead.

The doctrine of terrorism is dead.

The divine right to rule has gone to hell, whence it came.

The doctrine of liberty, justice, and humanity is triumphant and is writing its Magna Charta to last for all future time.

Let the United States Senate honor itself by lending its very best efforts to perfecting this charter.

Mr. President, what was it that protected the liberties of mankind, that protected civilization, that protected the democracies of the world against the military domination of the Teutonic dynastic autocracies? It was a league of nations in arms cooperating as one great league of democracy against autocracy. It was a league of nations in arms willing to pay the penalty in gigantic sacrifice of property and of human life; willing to die upon the battle field in joint, concerted, cooperative action to protect liberty and civilization. Gen. Foch, as commander in chief of the armed forces of this great league of nations, directed on the battle line from his headquarters Belgians, English, Scotch, Irish, French, Italians, Greeks, and Americans, and many others, all of them operating in a league to maintain liberty and to protect human life and organized society throughout the world. Shall this lesson bear no fruit? Shall our sons have died in vain who are buried upon the bloody battle fields of Europe?

The world wants peace, justice, and liberty, and has shown itself willing to die for this cause. Do not underestimate the demand, Mr. President. Do not deny or ignore this profound aspiration of the human heart. At Paris are assembled representatives—military, economic, political—of all the great democracies of the world, facing the task of making the world safe against the chaos and disorder of war. The geographical lines of the newborn States must be delimited and agreed upon and authorized. The relations of these nations with each other must be so protected that they do not instantly fly at each others' throats on some mad issue of geographical boundary or fancied interest. There must be established by some power somewhere the relations which shall exist between these nations, between them and the balance of the world. The colonies which the Teutonic dynasty has shown itself unworthy to control must be protected and safeguarded by some definite agreement under some safeguard of administration that will establish and maintain peace and order and good conduct, internal and external. This task of readjustment is now being performed at the peace table at Paris, of necessity, by the very nature of the case. Shall all the delegates be withdrawn from the peace conference and the world left in turmoil with the Bolsheviki in control soon to bring on another world war and drag the people of the United States from their peaceful avocations to the havoc and destruction of war? No, Mr. President; there is a better way. The way of order out of chaos. And the proposed league of nations is wise and sound and just in its fundamental principles. It represents the aspirations of the peoples of the world to safeguard the peace of mankind.

I have pointed out some of the more important provisions, but there are others which must not be overlooked.

Article 17 takes care of the disputes which might arise between members of the league and those who are not members of the league and imposes suitable penalties if a State not a member of the league disregards the provisions of article 12, forbidding it to make war as a remedy because of a dispute with other nations.

Article 18 authorizes the league to be intrusted with the joint supervision of the trade in arms and ammunition with the countries in which the control of this traffic is necessary and in the common interest.

Article 8 provides for steps to be taken to control the manufacture of munitions by private enterprise, so that private interests may not be made provocative of war, and this article recognizes the great principle that the maintenance of peace—

"will require the reduction of national armaments to the lowest point consistent with national safety and enforcement by common action of international obligations, having special regard to the geographical situation and circumstances of each State."

Is not article 8 of tremendous importance in removing one of the great dangers to war? Do we not all know that the Teutonic dynasty for over 20 years was manufacturing on a gigantic scale the munitions of war and organizing armaments far beyond domestic need with the intent and purpose to assail the liberties of Europe and to dominate the world by military force? And shall we not remove this danger from our future by international agreement? All the nations of the world except the Teutonic allies at The Hague in 1907 were ready to agree to disarmament, but were prevented by the King of Prussia and his allies. Now is the most opportune time to write these safeguards by treaty into the international law by the consent and approval of all nations.

Article 19 provides a reasonable and just method for administering the affairs of subject peoples and developing them into democracies under charters granted from the league to advanced nations qualified by their resources, their experience, their geographical position to undertake this responsibility as mandatories on behalf of the league. And the consent, even in these cases, of the backward peoples is recognized, the proposed formulated plan expressly providing that "the wishes of these communities must be a special consideration in the selection of the mandatory power," and "the mandatory must be responsible for the administration of the territory, subject to conditions which will guarantee freedom of conscience or religion, subject only to the maintenance of public order and morals, the prohibition of abuses, such as the slave trade, the arms traffic, and the liquor traffic, and the prevention of the establishment of fortifications or military and naval bases, and of military training of the natives for other than police purposes and the defense of territory, and will also secure equal opportunities for the trade and commerce of other members of the league."

And this provision could be further amended to provide that the bill of rights of civilized States, as far as applicable, should be recognized as a part of the principle of the government of these backward peoples.

I suggest the following amendment to article 19, and I feel entirely at liberty to suggest this amendment; and amendments which are offered or suggested on this floor, I have no doubt, will receive respectful consideration from those who are assembled at Paris, and if they have value I have no doubt that action by our peace commissioners will be taken accordingly: "The mandatory must, as far as practicable, recognize the principles of the bills of rights of civilized States in administering the law in such territories, and the charter to the mandatory shall prescribe these principles."

Article 20 provides, as a part of the organization of the league, a permanent bureau of labor, with a view of securing and maintaining fair and humane conditions of labor for men, women, and children by the good offices of the league. Shall we have no means of objecting when the blacks of the Kongo have their hands cut off because they failed to bring in sufficient ivory, as we have seen in the bloody days of the past? They, too, must have justice and liberty, and should be educated and civilized as rapidly as circumstances will permit.

Mr. President, the happiness of mankind absolutely depends on those who labor; they comprise the world; they are the world. Does this mean that the league of nations will interfere with the internal sovereignty of member nations? Not at all. Article 10 and article 26 and other articles protect this vital requirement, and other safeguards can be added. In this matter the league would function with no more authority than that of a bureau of publicity—I speak of the particular organization of a "bureau of labor"—which could appeal to the opinion of mankind for the protection and conservation of human life where it is not adequately safeguarded.

Article 21 provides that the high contracting parties agree that provision shall be made through the instrumentality of the league to secure and maintain freedom of transit and equitable treatment for the commerce of all members.

Is not this decent and just and right? Shall interior nations having no access to the sea be bottled up without the right to ship their goods under bond in transit to the sea? It was this denial of an outlet that has been one of the contributing causes for war in the Balkans.

Why shall not suitable provisions be drawn up by amendments to the plan to secure and maintain these rights?

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him a question?

Mr. OWEN. Not at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. I understood the Senator to say that the proposed constitution of the league did not interfere with the internal affairs of the various governments. I should like the Senator's opinion as to whether articles 12, 15, and 16 together provide for the arbitration of all questions without distinction, and whether or not disputes as to political questions, such as trade relations with other countries, import duties, and so forth, would come under the provisions of the proposed constitution?

Mr. OWEN. In my judgment, it only relates to those things which are external, because internal affairs are safeguarded by article 10, which guarantees to respect and to preserve the territorial integrity and the existing political independence of every nation.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does that include all laws pertaining to our dealings with other countries, such as immigration laws, tariff laws, and trade relations?

Mr. OWEN. The question of immigration and tariffs affects the internal affairs of our own country and concerns our existing political independence, and certain trade relations might do so.

Mr. KELLOGG. Would the proposed constitution prevent us from changing our existing political conditions?

Mr. OWEN. Not at all. I shall deal with that a little later on. I have not quite come to that, but I am going expressly to discuss that and show what my opinion is with regard to it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that article 12 does not require the nations to submit every controversy to arbitration——

Mr. OWEN. That is perfectly obvious.

Mr. McCUMBER. But when difficulties arise it simply provides that "they will in no case resort to war without previously submitting the question and matters involved either to arbitration or to inquiry" by the league.

Mr. OWEN. I think that is quite clear.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator from Oklahoma will pardon me, the inquiry is enforced in exactly the same way as the judgment of the arbitration tribunal.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not agree with the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. Article 22 agrees to place under the control of the league all international bureaus already established by general treaties, if the parties to such treaties consent. What objection could there be to this by consent? Is it not better to have a clearing house between the nations to which all international business may be directed, and where through a common center international relationships may be conveniently adjusted? Having a common center for international business is just as convenient and necessary as having a clearing house for the bankers of New York City, where around a common board they can instantly dispatch their business with each other. Suppose each nation of 50 nations must transact all business by an independent means, then each nation would have to send 50 representatives to 50 nations, making 2,500 representatives altogether, at great expense, great confusion, great delay. But, meeting around a common council table, one representative of each nation would meet one representative from every other nation at a common board, and 50 men would transact the business of 2,500 men.

This is merely common sense and a practice based upon modern science and usage in the business world.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MOSES. Does the Senator from Oklahoma contemplate the wiping out of all existing diplomatic establishments?

Mr. OWEN. Certainly not.

Mr. MOSES. That seems to me to be the trend of the Senator's recent language.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator's inference has no foundation in fact.

Mr. MOSES. There are now 50 nations each sending 50 representatives to 50 different countries.

Mr. OWEN. The article to which I was referring was the article which deals with international bureaus. I was referring to that alone, not to the Diplomatic Service or the Consular Service. Those services are quite necessary for other reasons entirely.

Article 23 provides for publicity of international agreements with the penalty that they shall be void unless registered with the league.

This prevents secret treaties. It makes them void and an act of treachery to all other nations. It is a powerful deterrent.

Article 24 merely provides for the reconsideration of obsolete treaties which might contain some element of danger to the peace of the world. This article is entirely justified, and no man would deny it.

Article 25 provides that the high contracting parties agree that the present proposed covenant is accepted as abrogating all obligations as between themselves inconsistent with the great principles laid down in the proposed agreement to safeguard the peace of the world, and contains an engagement that the member nations will not hereafter enter into any engagements inconsistent with the terms thereof.

Is not this a wise provision of importance in safeguarding the future peace of mankind? And there is imposed the further duty that new powers admitted to the league shall come under the same rules. Is not this common sense, and in the interest of the world?

Article 26 provides that amendments to the covenant of the league shall only take effect when ratified by the States whose representatives compose the executive council and by three-fourths of the States whose representatives compose the body of delegates.

Mr. President, do you not here observe that this gives a veto upon any amendment to this instrument not acceptable to the United States, and gives a like veto to Great Britain and to France and to Italy and to Japan, and is it not obvious that no amendment would therefore be possible to this proposed agreement between the nations except with the approval and consent of the United States?

Is this not a great safeguard against the possibility of anything being written in the relations between the member nations of the league that might at any time be embarrassing to any of the great powers or to the world?

But, Mr. President, a great objection has been made by various honorable and able Senators to the formulated plan on the ground that it was proposed to govern the world by the overlordship of a body of delegates representing the high contracting parties and by an executive council and by a permanent international secretariat.

It has been urged with great eloquence and zeal that article 1 would invade the sovereignty of the United States.

I confess very frankly that article 1 should be left in no obscurity, but it is easy to amend article 1. The interpretation which has been put upon article 1 by its critics could certainly not have been the intention of the representatives of Great Britain and France and Italy and Japan or others of the 14 nations who approve this draft. They certainly had no intention of sacrificing the sovereignty of Great Britain or France or Italy or Japan or Belgium or China or of other members. On the contrary, they have taken great pains in the body of the formulated plan to safeguard the territorial integrity and political independence of all State members of the league as they now exist in article 10, where the members mutually undertake to respect and preserve against external aggression, the territorial integrity, and existing political independence of each other. This is not consistent with the interpretations of article 1, that would permit the body of delegates to invade by statutes any domestic concern of any nation.

The proposal of Lieut. Gen. Smuts, who represents perhaps the best English thought, was as follows:

"Tenth. The constitution of the league will be that of a permanent conference between the governments of the constituent States for the purpose of joint international action in certain defined respects, and will not derogate from the independence of those States. It will consist of a general conference, a council, and courts of arbitration and conciliation.

"Eleventh. The general conference, in which all constituent States will have equal voting power, will meet periodically to discuss matters submitted to it by the council. These matters will be general measures of international law or arrangements or general proposals for limitation of armaments or for securing world peace, or any other general resolutions, the discussion of which by the conference is desired by the council before they are forwarded for the approval of the constituent governments. Any resolutions passed by the conference will have the effect of recommendations to the national governments and parliaments."

That was Gen. Smuts's idea. That idea is prevalent all over Great Britain. That is the general conception of the authority to be granted to these delegates who would meet around a council table, representing the nations of the world.

It will here be observed that Gen. Smuts only proposed that the resolutions passed by the conference would have the effect of recommendations to the national governments and parliaments—nothing more. It is perfectly easy to amend article 1 by inserting the following words:

"THE BODY OF DELEGATES AND THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL SHALL HAVE NO AUTHORITY TO MAKE LAWS, BUT MAY PROPOSE INTERNATIONAL RESOLUTIONS TO BE SUBMITTED TO THE MEMBER NATIONS FOR CONSIDERATION. AND WHEN SUCH RESOLUTIONS HAVE BEEN RATIFIED BY ALL THE STATES WHOSE REPRESENTATIVES COMPOSE THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL AND BY THREE-FOURTHS OF THE STATES WHOSE REPRESENTATIVES COMPOSE THE BODY OF DELEGATES SHALL HAVE THE EFFECT OF INTERNATIONAL LAW."

This is the method proposed in article 26 for amendments to the formulated plan. Any amendment must, under article 26, have the approval of the United States before it can be amended.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I notice that the Senator from Oklahoma frequently refers to amendments. How are those amendments to be gotten before the peace council unless they are adopted or approved by this body officially? I have been informed—and perhaps the Senator from Oklahoma knows whether or not it is true—that the proceedings of this body do not reach Paris; that there is a censorship on what is done here; and that leads me to ask how we are likely to get such matters before the peace conference?

Mr. OWEN. I think there is no difficulty about access to the peace conference. I do not think there is any such censorship as the Senator refers to.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not know, but I have been told that that was the case.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, I think not. I got my mail while I was in Paris, and I suppose other gentlemen got theirs in the same way.

Mr. President, the peace of the world is too important, the future happiness and security of our people is too important, that we should fail at this wonderfully auspicious time to adopt a plan which will safeguard the future of the world.

I am quite willing to agree, and determined as well, that no obscurity whatever should be permitted in the proposed plan, because it is one of the frailties of human nature to have powers construed into a constitution by those who are charged with the duty of its administration, and therefore it is of special importance to put in negative proposals, such as our forefathers inserted in the Constitution of the United States.

We should insert in the proposed formulated plan that "NOTHING CONTAINED IN THE INSTRUMENT ITSELF SHOULD BE CONSTRUED AS GRANTING ANY RIGHTS TO THE LEAGUE OVER THE INTERNAL AFFAIRS OF MEMBER NATIONS, BUT THAT EVERY MEMBER NATION SHOULD BE RECOGNIZED AS HAVING COMPLETE RIGHT OVER ITS EMIGRATION AND IMMIGRATION, ITS IMPORTS AND EXPORTS, AND ALL ITS DOMESTIC AFFAIRS WITHOUT ANY INTERFERENCE WHATEVER BY THE LEAGUE."

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is exactly what I had in mind. As Senators seem to disagree as to the meaning of sections 12, 15, and 16, it does seem to me that it should be made plain, so that no political question can be raised.

Mr. OWEN. I agree with the Senator that an instrument of such importance as this should be made absolutely plain; and, frankly, I should not feel justified in supporting an instrument of this magnitude and this importance unless it were made plain, and I think the Senate of the United States are in a position to make it plain. They have the capacity; they ought to have the will. As far as I am concerned, I shall stand firmly for seeing that this instrument shall be free from any ambiguity whatever.

It is not necessary for the league to interfere with the internal affairs of any member nation. I am sure that Great Britain and France and Italy and Japan do not contemplate granting this right to the league of nations.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FRANCE. I am very much interested in what the Senator is saying. Would he care to define what he means by "internal affairs"? Would he consider a question arising between Great Britain and one of her colonies—Ireland, for example—as being an internal affair or not?

Mr. OWEN. I would. We can not at this time and in this way undertake to settle the disputes between member nations and the component parts of member nations, unless we want to tear asunder the whole procedure. We can not undertake that. We can not go into it. You might as well undertake to deal between the United States and Texas as a part of this proposal.

It is easy enough to have an amendment that the league of nations shall not exercise any powers except those that are expressly granted to the league. But the great principles of international law which are laid down in this formulated plan are vital to our own future and to the peace of the world, and I venture to express the hope that the Senate of the United States will consider this matter constructively, with a view to perfecting the plan rather than with a view to confusing counsel and exciting suspicion and arousing the hostility of our people on the theory that this instrument is full of pitfalls and dangerous. We assuredly have the wisdom to analyze the formulated plan and to point out how it may be improved and made free from any objection, and this ought to be done.

I do not care, Mr. President, to repeat the arguments which have already been presented with such force upon the floor relative to the views of our revered first President in his Farewell Address. I am altogether in accord with the principles expressed in the Farewell Address of Washington. But the day of American isolation has long since ended. Our interests are bound up in the welfare and happiness of mankind. We are no longer isolated. A submarine could come up the Potomac River and blow down the Capitol of the United States, it could drop a gas bomb in the Senate that would smother the most glorious declamation and the most magnificent oratory. We are not isolated; we can never be isolated. We are face to face with the duty and the task of using the influence of this great Nation to bring about the security and peace of the world.

Our people realized this when they determined that the time had come for us to engage in suppressing the military autocracy of the Teutonic allies, and we have just completed that task at a stupendous cost in treasure and in human life. We can not afford to have another world war. The interests of the American people demand peace, security, stability, in order that they may enjoy the rights guaranteed by our Constitution of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Mr. President, may I not be permitted to pray that my colleagues shall consider this matter with very great patience and deliberation, to the end of perfecting this proposed establishment of international law in order that our people may have the peace to which they are so thoroughly entitled? America brought this war to an end, to the imperishable glory of her gallant and intrepid sons, who, over every obstacle of barbed wire, sunken trenches, concealed machine guns, against poisonous gases, against a hurricane of shrapnel, and high explosives, never paused and never failed to advance until the German military commanders collapsed.

The people of Europe and the people of the world owe to America a debt which can never be paid, and America must not depart from her high standards of human service. The time is at hand to establish the conditions which will verify the prophecy of a thousand years of peace. The time has come when there shall be established upon the earth the great principles of liberty, of justice, of humanity, and America should take the leading part in that constructive work. I am one of those who strongly advised the President of the United States to go to Europe in order that the ideals of America might be presented to the European statesmen, whom I knew were embarrassed because of their long and painful experience with militarism. I knew that they could not help thinking in terms of strategic boundaries, in terms of battalions, in terms of armaments, and I am rejoiced that our President was able to favorably influence European opinion, so that we now have laid before us the preliminary formulation of a plan which when perfected will effect and maintain forever the peace of the world. Let America take her place in the front rank in this forever-glorious enterprise.

I ask permission to insert in the RECORD a quotation from Mr. Roosevelt upon this matter, which he made in his Nobel speech, as an exhibit to my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From an address on "International Peace" before the Nobel Prize Committee, delivered at Christiania, Norway, May 5, 1910, by Theodore Roosevelt.]

(Italics are inserted to emphasize certain proposals.—R. L. O.)

Now, having freely admitted the limitations to our work and the qualifications to be borne in mind, I feel that I have the right to have my words taken seriously, when I point out where, in my judgment, great advance can be made in the cause of international peace. I speak as a practical man, and whatever I now advocate I actually tried to do when I was for the time being the head of a great Nation and keenly jealous of its honor and interest. I ask other nations to do only what I should be glad to see my own Nation do.

The advance can be made along several lines. First of all, there can be treaties of arbitration. There are, of course, States so backward that a civilized community ought not to enter into an arbitration treaty with them, at least until we have gone much further than at present in securing some kind of international police action. But all really civilized communities should have effective arbitration treaties among themselves. I believe that these treaties can cover almost all questions liable to arise between such nations, if they are drawn with the explicit agreement that each contracting party will respect the other's territory and its absolute sovereignty within that territory, and the equally explicit agreement that (aside from the very rare cases where the nation's honor is vitally concerned) all other possible subjects of controversy will be submitted to arbitration. Such a treaty would insure peace unless one party deliberately violated it. Of course, as yet there is no adequate safeguard against such deliberate violation, but the establishment of a sufficient number of these treaties would go a long way toward creating a world opinion which would finally find expression in the provision of methods to forbid or punish any such violation.

Secondly, there is the further development of The Hague Tribunal, of the work of the conferences and courts at The Hague. It has been well said that the first Hague conference framed a Magna Charta for the nations; it set before us an ideal which has already to some extent been realized and toward the full realization of which we can all steadily strive. The second conference made further progress; the third should do yet more. Meanwhile the American Government has more than once tentatively suggested methods for completing the court of arbitral justice, constituted at the second Hague conference, and for rendering it effective. It is earnestly to be hoped that the various Governments of Europe, working with those of America and of Asia, shall set themselves seriously to the task of devising some method which shall accomplish this result. If I may venture the suggestion, it would be well for the statesmen of the world, in planning for the erection of this world court, to study what has been done in the United States by the Supreme Court. I can not help thinking that the Constitution of the United States, notably in the establishment of the Supreme Court and in the methods adopted for securing peace and good relations among and between the different States, offers certain valuable analogies to what should be striven for in order to secure, through The Hague courts and conferences, a species of world federation for international peace and justice. There are, of course, fundamental differences between what the United States Constitution does and what we should even attempt at this time to secure at The Hague, but the methods adopted in the American Constitution to prevent hostilities between the States and to secure the supremacy of the Federal court in certain classes of cases are well worth the study of those who seek at The Hague to obtain the same results on a world scale.

In the third place, something should be done as soon as possible to check the growth of armaments, especially naval armaments, by international agreement. No one power could or should act by itself, for it is eminently undesirable, from the standpoint of the peace of righteousness, that a power which really does believe in peace should place itself at the mercy of some rival which may at bottom have no such belief and no intention of acting on it. But, granted sincerity of purpose, the great powers of the world should find no insurmountable difficulty in reaching an agreement which would put an end to the present costly and growing extravagance of expenditure on naval armaments. An agreement merely to limit the size of ships would have been very useful a few years ago, and would still be of use, but the agreement should go much further.

Finally, it would be a master stroke if those great powers honestly bent on peace would form a league of peace, not only to keep the peace among themselves but to prevent, by force if necessary, its being broken by others. The supreme difficulty in connection with developing the peace work of The Hague arises from the lack of any executive power, of any police power, to enforce the decrees of the court. In any community of any size the authority of the courts rests upon actual or potential force, on the existence of a police, or on the knowledge that the able-bodied men of the country are both ready and willing to see that the decrees of judicial and legislative bodies are put into effect. In new and wild communities where there is violence, an honest man must protect himself, and, until other means of securing his safety are devised, it is both foolish and wicked to persuade him to surrender his arms while the men who are dangerous to the community retain theirs. He should not renounce the right to protect himself by his own efforts until the community is so organized that it can effectively relieve the individual of the duty of putting down violence. So it is with nations. Each nation must keep well prepared to defend itself until the establishment of some form of international police power, competent and willing to prevent violence as between nations. As things are now, such power to command peace throughout the world could best be assured by some combination between those great nations which sincerely desire peace and have no thought themselves of committing aggressions. The combination might at first be only to secure peace within certain definite limits and certain definite conditions; but the ruler or statesman who should bring about such a combination would have earned his place in history for all time and his title to the gratitude of all mankind.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FRANCE. I have been very much interested in the address of the Senator, because I know that he entertains some very progressive political views. I desire to ask him one or two questions, for I know that he has given much study to the phraseology of the proposed constitution of the league. Does he apprehend that under the present phraseology we might be called upon to conscript our soldiers for the purpose of fighting Ireland, for example, if Ireland should desire her independence, or of fighting India, if India should desire her independence from the British Empire?

Mr. OWEN. The exact reverse, of course, is true. The conditions which, under the old régimé, made subject nations a military asset will no longer exist if the league be established; and nations would not regard subject nations as an asset, but as a liability, where they were discontented.

Mr. FRANCE. I ask that question in view of the statement of the Senator that he thought the language should be made clear, so that it would be apparent always that member nations should not interfere in internal disputes.

Mr. OWEN. There is nothing in this proposed league of nations which would require the United States to furnish her troops on the battle field. It is one thing to have an aggressive nation invading the territorial integrity or political independence of a nation, and by that act, in violation of these terms, making war itself upon all nations. We had war made on us a long time before we yielded to the affront and to the danger which threatened us. A nation can make war under the terms of this constitution without involving us in any degree to furnish any troops. On the contrary, instead of its leading to conscription, Gen. Smuts in his book on the League of Nations argues that conscription is a potent means of promoting war, and he is opposed to conscription.

Mr. FRANCE. Certainly there is great ambiguity in the language when it is susceptible of so many different interpretations.

Mr. OWEN. I think some of the interpretations of the language used are not justified at all by the language itself, but are quite hypercritical and entirely unjustified by anything in the instrument.

Mr. FRANCE. Now, I desire to ask the Senator one more question. What does he consider to be the purpose of this league of nations? Is it merely to secure peace, or is it really to secure justice and the advancement of the welfare of all men, including the advancement of the backward nations of the world?

Mr. OWEN. They are coincident. Justice and peace go hand in hand. You can not have peace if you do not have justice.

Mr. FRANCE. I am very glad the Senator is bringing out that thought——

Mr. OWEN. The Senator himself brought it out.

Mr. FRANCE. Because, according to the idea that I entertain, the two things are not always synonymous. Sometimes there can not be justice if there is to be peace; sometimes justice can not be advanced by peaceable means; and it seems to me it should be clearly stated what the purpose is. If it is merely to be a league of peace for the preservation of the status quo, that is one thing. If it is to be a league which is to express the great cooperative spirit for the advancement of the world and for the uplifting of those peoples of the world who are backward and have been kept down because heretofore there has been exploitation rather than a desire for elevation, then the league is quite a different thing.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, so far as Great Britain is concerned, I think, the best evidence that she had tried to give justice to her colonies was shown by the loyalty and zeal of her colonies in coming to her support in this great crisis of the war.

Mr. FRANCE. To try is not enough. To try for justice is not enough. Justice must be accomplished. How about the great country of Africa, composing approximately one-fourth of the earth's land surface? The same heathenism, the same savagery, exist to-day in the heart of Africa as existed when the pyramids were new. A mere good-natured will is not enough. The liberals of the world to-day demand results, and they will have them.

Mr. OWEN. I am pleased to see the Senator's enthusiasm in favor of justice. I am in accord with his desire.

Mr. FRANCE. I believe that the Senator is; but let us keep the great purpose to the front, not merely a stagnant universal passivity but a purpose of progress and advancement. That is what I hope to see come out of this great cooperative movement.

Mr. OWEN. I think great advancement will come from this league, because the principles of justice and right are written in the provisions of the proposed league; and when those principles are made the universal law I have no doubt that they will become more and more potent, and that they will become the universal rule.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, if I am not disturbing the Senator, may I ask him this question: As the Senator from Oklahoma entertains very progressive views, does he not realize that many countries of the world have been in the hands of reactionary ministries who look with suspicion upon any effort to advance and improve the conditions of the backward nations of the world?

Mr. OWEN. Undoubtedly. That is not altogether untrue of the United States.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two House on the bill (H. R. 14078) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. KENYON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Kendrick	Overman	Spencer
Baird	Kenyon	Owen	Sterling
Bankhead	King	Page	Sutherland
Beckham	Kirby	Pittman	Swanson
Calder	La Follette	Pollock	Thomas
Chamberlain	Lewis	Pomerene	Thompson
Colt	Lodge	Ransdell	Trammell
Cummins	McCumber	Reed	Underwood
Curtis	McKellar	Robinson	Wadsworth
Fletcher	McNary	Shafroth	Warren
France	Martin, Ky.	Sheppard	Watson
Gay	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Weeks
Gore	Moses	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Gronna	New	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott
Harding	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Johnson, Cal.	Nugent	Smoot

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-three Senators having answered to the roll call, there is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in support of the motion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] that this conference report be rejected. I voted for amendments numbered 94 and 95 because I believed we deal fairly with all our Government employees. Under the terms of the conference report these two amendments have been eliminated. The effect now will be that Government employees who received an increase in pay during the past year, even if it was less than $200, but if at the rate of $200, will be debarred from receiving the $240 increase next year.

I have in mind a number of men who have received increases in pay at the rate of $210 a year, but that raise extending over a period of less than six months. I believe these men are dealt with unjustly under the circumstances, and I hope that the motion of the Senator from Washington that the conference report be rejected will be agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] stated the situation that existed in the conference when this bill was under consideration, but there could be an injustice done the Government if the amendments offered by the Senator from Washington remain in the bill. I do not say that it would be the case, but perhaps the wording is unfortunate in both cases. The way the provision read with the amendment of the Senator from Washington it could allow an employee of the Navy Department to work up to a time that would bring him an increase of wage of $199 and then he could stop work for the balance of the year and draw $240. That is hardly a proper provision to leave in the bill. I do not say that it would be done; I do not charge that; but I say it could be done.

The employees of the navy yards requested legislation giving them the same rate of pay that was paid by individuals or companies for similar work. The pay increased on account of the war so rapidly and the rates were so high that the employees of the navy yards received more than the $200 increase where they worked the full year. The bill as reported now simply carries out the provisions of the law granting them that increase. I understand that since the high rates were paid there has been a decrease to a certain extent, but if the Senate provision remains in the bill it would mean that a party working a part of the year whose salary did not show an increase of $200 per annum could claim under this provision an increase in salary of $240.

I do not want to do injustice to an employee of the Government; but the reason why the mechanics at the navy yard were not included in the $120 increase last year is what I have already stated; and that being brought to the attention of the conferees, and the further fact that the House conferees would not yield upon it, the Senate conferees yielded upon the two amendments numbered 94 and 95. I think they were fully justified in doing so, and the conference report should not be defeated for that reason.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there was one amendment on the legislative bill in which I took very great interest, and that was making provision for the enforcement of the child-labor tax law as embodied in the revenue bill. A certain sum was allotted from the lump sum appropriation to be given to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the enforcement of the law, and it provided that the force of the Secretary of Labor should be used for the purpose of reporting on those manufactures in which child labor was employed. It has been changed in conference so that the information gathered by the officers of the Department of Labor can only go before the Commissioner of Internal Revenue on his request. The information will be gathered, I am sure of that, and as perfect information as possible will be brought together by the officers of the Department of Labor showing what goods are subject to tax under the revenue law; but the commissioner has to ask for it.

I am not going to attempt to delay or stop agreement to the conference report. I merely want to point out that if there is a failure to enforce the tax law respecting child labor it will lie at the door of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I hardly think there will be any danger of that, because the Commissioner of Internal Revenue requested that this appropriation of $184,160 be made out of the $21,000,000.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is entirely mistaken. He made no such request.

Mr. SMOOT. It was so stated, I will say.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know where it was stated. It came to me from the Secretary of Labor. It was not put in by the committee. I offered the amendment on the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the Senator did, and what the Senator has just stated I have no doubt is true. I sincerely trust, as he has already stated, that there will be no effort on the part of any official of the Government to prevent the enforcement of the child-labor law.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, I did not mean to suggest that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who is a most admirable officer, for whom I have the highest respect, would not gather the information and enforce the law. I merely wanted to call attention to the fact that the whole responsibility is now placed on him, and the original amendment did not do that.

Mr. SMOOT. If it is not enforced, of course the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts is correct that it will be laid at his door.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have every confidence that the provision of that law will be enforced, and I share with the Senator from Massachusetts the very high regard for the integrity and efficiency of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. I shall look with interest at the progress that is being made, and if it is necessary to have any additional legislation to help enforce the provisions of that law I shall join hands with the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I am sure the Senator from Ohio will do so. The Senator will remember that my amendment made it the duty of the Secretary of Labor to furnish the information. That is the only change.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that the conferees, I think, took the wording of the revenue act.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On the matter the Senator from Massachusetts has suggested the House conferees refused to agree to the Senate amendment. It was a question of compromise. We could not defeat a supply bill because we could not reach an agreement, and we reached the compromise that is included in the bill. It carries all the money that is required, all the authority that was in the original amendment, and merely puts the control of the situation in the hands of the man who in the last analysis must enforce the law. That is all there is in it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask that the unfinished business be proceeded with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is none.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 14516, the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill.

Mr. PENROSE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Kenyon	Nugent	Smith, S. C.
Baird	King	Overman	Smoot
Beckham	Kirby	Owen	Spencer
Colt	La Follette	Page	Sterling
Curtis	Lewis	Penrose	Sutherland
Fletcher	Lodge	Pomerene	Swanson
France	McCumber	Ransdell	Thomas
Gay	McKellar	Reed	Thompson
Gore	McNary	Robinson	Trammell
Hale	Martin, Ky.	Shafroth	Underwood
Harding	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Warren
Johnson, Cal.	Moses	Simmons	Watson
Jones, Wash.	New	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Kendrick	Norris	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from North Carolina moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 14516.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14516) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, line 9, after the word "allowances," strike out the words "during pendency of existing war and for six months after its termination," so as to make the clause read:

To enable the President, in his discretion and in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe, to make special allowances by way of additional compensation to consular and diplomatic officers and consular assistants and officers of the United States Court of China in order to adjust their official income to the ascertained cost of living at the posts to which they may be assigned, $700,000.

Mr. LODGE. I merely wish to ask the Senator from North Carolina—I was not here when he explained it last night—if he can tell me in a few words the purpose of this amendment?

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to have the Senator take time to read the evidence before the committee. I will read just a few lines.

Mr. LODGE. I do not mean to ask the Senator to read all the evidence.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; I said I would like to have the Senator read it. We increased the amount of special allowances to consular and diplomatic officers during the war. It was shown to our committee that a great many of the consuls had resigned because they could not live on their salary. We gave an appropriation of $700,000 in the last appropriation act to take care of the situation. The testimony shows how consuls have resigned and that the situation is the same now that it was during the war. Mr. Carr said:

> The history of prices after previous wars shows that as a rule prices have been higher 12 months after the war than they were during the war, and that they did not really fall to anywhere near the prewar level for several years after the war; so that if you were to strike out this appropriation six months after the treaty of peace is signed I am perfectly certain that you would destroy our service in several countries.
>
> If you will remember, when I came before the committee last year and asked you to remove one of the limitations on the appropriation, I said that I then had in my hands a telegram from the consul general in Chile, transmitting the resignations of every officer in Chile. We also came very near having a complete disintegration of the service in China.

He goes on to state that unless this appropriation is given to take care of these people the whole service will be disintegrated, and that these people can not live without an increase. He also shows how we increased their salaries. If the Senator would like to hear it, he shows the cost of telegrams and of every article at every place, and made a very careful estimate. We allowed what we considered absolutely necessary for these people to live abroad.

Mr. LODGE. What I was referring to does not affect the appropriation.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. LODGE. I was referring merely to the words proposed to be stricken out, "during pendency of existing war and for six months after its termination." What is the reason why the committee struck it out?

Mr. OVERMAN. We struck it out because the prices are as high now as they were during the war, and in some places higher, and it costs at least as much now as during the war, and probably more.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. MOSES. I should like to ask the Senator why it is that in the course of the hearing when the Director General of the Consular Service was testifying he said a table would be inserted in the hearing showing the prices after former wars; but upon examination I find it is altogether with reference to post allowances for the Consular Service.

I have not made any computation of the total amount of post allowances under the Diplomatic and Consular bills heretofore passed, but I assume that similar allowances were made in the diplomatic establishment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; that is so.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move to strike out "$700,000" and to insert "$600,000," and I want to call the Senator's attention——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment has not yet been agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. The pending amendment, then, is the one in lines 9 and 10, on page 22?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; that has been under discussion.

Mr. OVERMAN. This appropriation is only for the ensuing year, and then we shall have to appropriate again. The State Department say that the condition making this appropriation necessary will last all of this year, and they are afraid it will continue longer.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I observe that this $700,000 applies to diplomatic salaries as well as to consular salaries. I fail to recall a single diplomatic appointment of anyone who has not been a very heavy contributor to the national committee of the Democratic Party. There was a name sent to the Senate to-day of, I have no doubt, a very estimable gentleman, but I discover in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that in 1912—I do not know what he contributed in 1916—the sum of $20,000, in different installments, was contributed for campaign purposes by Mr. Wallace. Would the Senator from North Carolina consider that a case to come under this benefaction?

Mr. OVERMAN. I have a list here of post allowances, and I do not think that the name of an ambassador is included in the list.

Mr. MOSES. That is what I was undertaking to develop.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think that any ambassador was allowed anything. I had them all put in the record before the committee so that every Senator could see how much was allowed.

Mr. MOSES. But these post allowances were stated to the committee by Mr. Carr, who is the Director of the Consular Service, and naturally he would have given the allowances only for the consuls, being familiar with that branch of the service.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think Mr. Carr gave the whole list.

Mr. MOSES. I asked the Senator from North Carolina a few moments ago if similar allowances were not made in the diplomatic establishment where cases of necessity arose.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think it applies to ambassadors. I think it applies merely to consular officers. Of course, the table shows the facts.

Mr. PENROSE. The bill says for "additional compensation to consular and diplomatic officers." A gentleman who can squander money in a political campaign certainly does not require any addition to his salary.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think he will get it unless he needs it.

Mr. PENROSE. I was only asking the question.

Mr. OVERMAN. The matter is left in the discretion of the President, whether or not he will allow it.

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Senator think that presidential discretion would cover the case of Mr. Morgenthau, who gave $10,000 to the campaign?

Mr. OVERMAN. Morgenthau was not allowed anything, as the table shows.

Mr. PENROSE. Would the presidential discretion cover such a case as that?

Mr. OVERMAN. The bill says "diplomatic and consular officers," and I suppose it would include anybody who is not getting salary enough to take care of him.

Mr. PENROSE. Whether he had exhibited superficial evidence of great wealth in the campaign or not?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not suppose they would be allowed a cent they did not need.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, assuming the facts to be exactly as the Senator from Pennsylvania states them in regard to campaign contributions by some men, wherein does the practice differ from the practice which prevailed during the Republican administration?

Mr. PENROSE. Not at all; but this paragraph was not in any consular or diplomatic appropriation bill prior to the war.

Mr. POMERENE. I thought my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania was trying to indicate that there was a difference in practice.

Mr. PENROSE. Oh, no. I think that it is a commendable practice for a citizen who is wrought up regarding the issues of a campaign to attest his faith by a contribution; and he is worthy of encouragement, even by being appointed as a diplomat. But it does not arouse any sympathy in my breast toward an appropriation of $700,000 to increase his salary. A disinterested patriot like that really ought to serve his country abroad for nothing, as I know that in the history of the American Republic some of them have served for nothing, for the salary admittedly has been insignificant compared to their needs.

I think as to this paragraph, Mr. President, the House provision ought to be restored, so that the people may know that it is a war measure, designed, in the opinion of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], to correct the inequalities in exchange, in the opinion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], to make provision for the excessive cost of living, and, in the opinion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], who was speaking when we adjourned last evening, on account of the fact that shoes cost differently in different parts of the world.

Mr. MOSES. Oh, Mr. President, I beg the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] not to confound me with the distinguished Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], who spoke so feelingly on the subject of shoes. I addressed my remarks to the ethical trend of the argument advanced last night by the Senator from Pennsylvania, the sentiment of which appealed very strongly to me, although I felt that there were some circumstances in connection with this paragraph which would impel me to support it in spite of the strong moral argument which the Senator from Pennsylvania was making at that time.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, Mr. President, perhaps I misunderstood the Senator from New Hampshire. He has had great experience in the diplomatic service; but when I recall that for campaign purposes the ambassador to Germany contributed $13,000, the ambassador to Spain contributed $15,000, the ambassador to Turkey contributed $10,000, and that Mr. Morgenthau contributed another $10,000—without going down the complete list—I really think that the word "diplomatic" ought to be stricken from the bill, and when we reach that stage of the consideration of the measure I intend to make the motion that it be stricken from the bill.

Meanwhile, as I understand, the question before the Senate is on the elimination of the House provision that these allowances shall only last pending the war and for six months after its termination. So far as I am concerned, I intend to vote to retain that provision in the measure.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether the committee considered the change the House has made in this paragraph from the form in which it appeared in the last appropriation act and, I think, in the last two or three such acts? In the last Diplomatic and Consular appropriation act this additional compensation is confined to consular and diplomatic officers "in belligerent countries and countries contiguous thereto," including China, officers in Hongkong, and so on. Under this provision the President can go anywhere in the world and readjust these salaries.

It also applies to officers of the United States Court in China. Now, does it contemplate that the United States judge in China, who receives $8,000 a year, shall have an allowance made on account of the increased cost of living? Is it intended that the United States attorney in China, who gets a pretty good salary, shall have an allowance that has not heretofore been made?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator is as familiar probably with this case as I am, because it was his amendment a year or so ago that was adopted. The Senator will remember that, I think; but when the Secretary came in and said this worked a hardship on the representatives of the United States living in China and Peru, and especially in Chile, and that our representatives in Chile had already sent in their resignations, we changed it at his suggestion to hold these men if possible.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say to the Senator that I am not on the subcommittee now.

Mr. OVERMAN. We put it in exactly like it was last year, and the Senator was a member of the subcommittee then.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; we put it in last year in a different form. That is what I am asking about, namely, why it has been changed? This is the way we put it in last year:

Additional compensation to consular and diplomatic officers in belligerent countries and countries contiguous thereto.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think not.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, yes; as the Senator has suggested, that was my amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know that it was, and we changed it because the Secretary came to us and asked us to change it for the reason I have given.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I see the provision has been changed in this bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; we changed it in accordance with the suggestion of the Secretary of State, because, as the Senator will see if he will read the testimony, otherwise it would work a great hardship on the representatives of the United States in countries that were not contiguous to belligerent countries and where the necessity for some kind of an allowance is as great as in any other countries in the world, especially in the case of Chile.

Mr. JONES of Washington. They tried to make that showing in connection with the previous bill, but, notwithstanding the statement they made, the committee put in the words "or countries contiguous thereto," and the House accepted it in conference, and that has been the law for the last two or three years. Now, apparently, the committee is accepting what the House has been in this instance contending for all the time.

Mr. OVERMAN. This is a House provision, as the Senator knows.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know that this is a House provision. I do not remember, however, at any time the Secretary urging any increase for the court officers in China. He did for the consular officers; but this goes further than the House provision, and I wish to ask the chairman whether the committee considered that language?

Mr. OVERMAN. We took it as the House sent it over, with the language written in by the House "during the pendency of the existing war," which the House probably inserted without knowing its effect. The committee struck that language out; that is all we had to do with it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was not particularly discussing that.

Mr. OVERMAN. We did not consider any of the officers in China. Provision for them was put in by the House.

Mr. JONES of Washington. What the committee struck out was put in by the House, and that is what I am trying to get at—why the committee did not consider the change that the House made in the terms of existing law or, rather, in the similar acts which have heretofore been passed.

Mr. MOSES. Is the Senator from Washington undertaking to limit the expenditure of this money to our representatives "in belligerent countries and countries contiguous thereto"?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am thinking about offering such an amendment when the proper time comes, because that is in accordance with the acts that have been passed heretofore. Now that the war has actually ended, I can not see any reason why we should so frame the provision as to have it cover the whole world.

Mr. MOSES. Even with such a limitation, it would take in practically all the world.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is probably true.

Mr. MOSES. There might be a few back countries that would not be included.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think that is probably true, but I have never thought that we ought to give the President blanket authority to go anywhere in the world and readjust salaries. If we are going to do that all over the world with reference to our consular officers, then why do we not appropriate a lump sum and give it to him to readjust salaries throughout the United States that need readjustment? I have been willing heretofore to permit the additional allowance to go to our representatives "in belligerent countries and countries contiguous thereto." While I know that that includes a great part of the world——

Mr. MOSES. The Senator may remember that I criticized this section last night as seeking to do a good thing in a bad way; but even the fact that favoritism might creep into the distribution of this fund, even though some of those who have been as generously disposed as the Senator from Pennsylvania has pointed out might in this way recoup themselves for some unwonted expenditure made during the year of the presidential campaign, that does not detract from the meritorious object sought to be attained by the section, which is to enable our representatives who are underpaid, as most of them are, to live with some degree of respectability without too much of a drain upon their private resources. Anybody who has had any personal contact with the Consular and Diplomatic Corps of the United States knows that it has constantly existed at the cost of its own private resources.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. As a general proposition I am in entire sympathy with the position taken by the Senator from Washington, that too much latitude should not be given in the fixing of salaries or other compensation of our representatives abroad; but I think during the trying period of the last few years some latitude should be given to some one in authority, and I know of no one in whom it could be better vested than in the President. As an illustration of the extraordinary expense to which some of our diplomatic representatives have been subjected, I know that last year in Paris the embassy was obliged to pay $80 a ton for coal, and then could not get enough to keep the embassy comfortably warm. That is only one of many instances that might be cited. It is utterly impossible for the Congress to anticipate what the special expenses will be in any particular place, and it seems to me that for the time being it would be well to leave a certain amount of discretionary authority with the President.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not questioning that at all; I think there is no doubt about that; and I have never opposed that proposal with reference to this item. I have seen much justification for it not only on account of the fact mentioned by the Senator from Ohio but with reference to other conditions. The only point I am trying to make with reference to the matter is that heretofore during the continuance of the war we have limited the President in the use of this money to consular and diplomatic officers in belligerent countries and countries contiguous thereto. Now, when the war is practically over, we propose to remove that limitation and to allow the money to be allotted to our representatives in any part of the world. There may not be very much territory that is not contiguous to some country that was engaged in the war; but I think it might be well to preserve in the language of the act, at any rate, the real character and purpose of this appropriation, which was to take care of especially peculiar conditions brought about by the war itself.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, this war has advanced the cost of living everywhere. I would not be able to understand what was meant by "belligerent countries" now. To illustrate, are Siberia, Russia, and other nations in Europe and in Asia what might be called "belligerent countries."

Mr. JONES of Washington. They are "contiguous" anyway.

Mr. POMERENE. That may be.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, if the Senator from Ohio will permit me, the United States for a long time was neither belligerent nor contiguous to a belligerent country, and yet there was a great increase in the cost of living here.

Mr. POMERENE. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; but we did not pretend to take care of that situation by a lump-sum appropriation. If the salaries of these officers are not sufficient, let us take care of that in a proper sort of a way. The same argument that is being urged here for unlimited authority in the President to enable him to add to the salary of an officer anywhere in the world is applicable to conditions in this country. We might just as well say to the President, "Take a hundred million dollars and readjust salaries of the Government employees throughout the country." We have not seen fit to do that, and yet their demands, their needs, and requirements are just as great as the needs and requirements of the gentlemen who represent us in foreign countries.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if in times like these we are going to be niggardly with our diplomatic and consular representatives abroad, no one will be able to accept such a position except the man who has a very large fortune, and I should regret that condition.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is largely the situation even in normal times. A man of ordinary means can not afford to be a diplomatic officer. Personally I am in favor of giving these men ample salaries and to make provision for residences and accommodations for them, so that they may live in accordance with the dignity of their Government; but under the stress of war conditions I do not think it is the proper thing to appropriate a lump sum, with unlimited authority to expend it anywhere throughout the world. I am not questioning the situation the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from New Hampshire suggests, and I will join with them in remedying that condition of things in the ordinary and regular way.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Washington. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Ohio that in the bill a year ago we appropriated $700,000 for this purpose, qualified, however, as stated by the Senator from Washington. The testimony before the committee showed that from July 1, 1918, to January 1, 1919, 6 months of the 12, the State Department only expended $300,000; and we certainly must admit that prices during those 6 months for coal, mentioned by the Senator from Ohio, for instance, and for everything purchased by the officials of the Government abroad were as high as they possibly can be for the coming 6 months. Upon that basis, that the department would only need $600,000, instead of $700,000, I desire to offer the amendment.

Mr. MOSES. This kind of an appropriation has been in the bill for two or three years, has it not?

Mr. SMOOT. One hundred thousand dollars has been appropriated, until last year.

Mr. MOSES. Only $100,000?

Mr. SMOOT. One hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. OVERMAN. Then they increased it to $400,000.

Mr. SMOOT. The first increase, I think, was to $400,000, and then to $700,000; but I will say to the Senator that the first appropriation was $100,000.

Mr. MOSES. Can the Senator tell me how much was ever spent in any one year under this authorization?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President, I can not say, because we have not had reports upon it; but I can say that if this department has done like every other department—and I have no reason to believe that it has not—every cent that was appropriated has been expended. I have not any hesitancy in saying that.

Mr. MOSES. From what document was the Senator reading just now?

Mr. SMOOT. I was not reading from a document; but I can show the Senator, if he wants it, the testimony in the House hearings, where Mr. Carr admits that during the first six months there was only $300,000 expended.

Mr. MOSES. The first six months of the current fiscal year?

Mr. SMOOT. The first six months of the current fiscal year.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is right.

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps the Senator had better let me look it up, and I will show it to the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. Here is the testimony of Mr. Carr:

> The House gave us $700,000, and for next year we asked for $800,000, but, of course, that estimate was put in before the armistice was signed. We ask for $100,000 more because we thought we ought to have $100,000 more if prices keep on increasing as they have been. As you know, for example, in China prices did not begin to increase until the latter part of 1916. What happened was this: The salaries of our officers in China are payable in gold; the Government only provides for the payment of salaries in United States gold, but the money current in that country is silver. Local silver dollars used to cost us before the war 43 cents, while in 1917 the local silver dollar had increased in value so that it cost us 89 cents.

Mr. MOSES. But there is another appropriation in the bill, on page 7, providing against loss by exchange.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not for consular officers, I think.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes; it applies to all diplomatic and consular officers.

Mr. MOSES. No; the Senator from North Carolina is right about that, on the strict construction of the language in the bill. The language is:

> For loss on bills of exchange to and from embassies and legations.

It is that section that I gave him formal notice last night of purposing to amend.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator, I think, ought to amend it, if that is what he intends, because that is exactly what the practice has been—that all the losses through exchange of American money in any country of the world have been cared for by that appropriation.

Mr. MOSES. That is perfectly true, Mr. President, so far as the diplomatic officers are concerned. I know that myself. If there is any loss on exchange, the chief of mission or the secretary of embassy or legation is authorized to make a charge in his quarterly account for the loss by exchange. It is a somewhat jug-handled arrangement, I am free to admit, because if there should chance to be a gain by exchange the representative is entitled to pocket that and say nothing to the Government about it, and that has frequently happened in places where there has been a depreciated currency. I happen to recall at the minute a Levantine country where, following military operations, exchange fell to a point where the current unit of exchange, based upon London exchange, was 42 to the pound. That is to say, 42 of the monetary units of the country could be purchased for an English pound. Later it came to the point where it was difficult to get 21 of the monetary units of the nation for the English pound. While the exchange ran to the benefit of the representative, he gained by it; when he was likely to lose by it he was entitled to charge the loss to the Government; and that is true with reference to the language here on page 70. But this section does not in its language provide for any loss by exchange. This is for additional compensation, to be allotted more or less without reference to the particular conditions, but by the favor of the Executive—either the State Department or the President.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, I have the testimony taken by the House committee, Mr. President, in relation to the amount expended during the first six months of this fiscal year from the $700,000 appropriation.

> Mr. ROGERS. Can you tell us what the amount of the unexpended balance is? I notice you ask for $700,000 plus the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the current fiscal year.
> Mr. CARR. I think the unexpended balance at the present time is approximately $400,000.
> Mr. ROGERS. With just about half of the year gone?
> Mr. CARR. With just about half of the year gone and with a possibility of a great many expenditures in the second half of the year.
> Mr. ROGERS. And also with the possibility that changing conditions may reduce the scale of necessary expenditures?
> Mr. CARR. That is quite true.

In other words, Mr. President, during the first half of this fiscal year the amount expended out of the $700,000 appropriated was only $300,000; and no one can say that the prices for the remaining half of the fiscal year are going to exceed the prices that were in force during the first six months.

Mr. MOSES. Of course, the Senator from Utah knows that during this six months there were very many of our diplomatic and consular establishments which were in disuse, and where there was no occasion for the use of this fund, or any other fund, for their maintenance.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator a question. I understood from him a while ago that the Senate committee did not consider the matter with reference to the court officers, but that they simply took the House provision as it stood.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say to the Senator that the evidence shows, as the Senator will see if he will look at it, that this fund has been administered with wisdom and economy. Now, I will ask him a question. Suppose a man's salary was $3,000 and the cost of living was $3,000, how much would you give him? You would give him nothing. Expenses of living have gone up 70, 80, 85, and 90 per cent. If you will look at this table and see what they have allowed them, you will see that they have allowed them nothing except what they ought to allow them. We now have provision for a commission to arrange salaries hereafter, incorporated in a bill passed this afternoon, so they can arrange these consular salaries afterwards. Let this provision go in here as it is. The Senator wants to have these consuls paid what is right.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But the point I am getting at is this: The court officers are not consular officers at all, and the court officers never have been covered by this provision.

Mr. OVERMAN. That was put in because exchange in China to-day is 89.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is the reason why that was put in, is it—to cover that situation?

Mr. OVERMAN. I think so; yes.

Mr. MOSES. But the language of the section says absolutely nothing about loss by exchange here.

Mr. OVERMAN. I suppose that is the reason why the House put it in. I do not know why they put it in.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course this is not the time to offer any amendment with reference to it; but I want to call the Senator's attention to it, and I may offer an amendment when we get to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, does the Senator desire to dispose of the committee amendments first?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the last one, I think, is it not?

Mr. LODGE. That is the last one.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; there is one more.

Mr. SMOOT. There is one that was passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; there is another amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes; on the same page.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Allowance for clerk hire at United States consulates," on page 22, line 18, after the word "State," to strike out "$1,200,000" and insert "$1,000,000," so as to make the clause read:

Allowance for clerk hire at consulates; to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, $1,000,000.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, why is that reduction made?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is because the war is about over, we think—we hope so—and they have had an extraordinary number of clerks at all these places during the war, and we thought we would cut down the amount by $200,000, and save that much to the Government, because they will not need as many clerks now as they did during the war.

Mr. LODGE. I have here a memorandum from the State Department, which says:

The reduction in clerk hire from $1,200,000 to $1,000,000 will prevent the Consular Service from accomplishing the result desired both by the State and Commerce Departments. The lack of clerks is the weakest link in the Consular Service. The amount available should be increased rather than decreased. It is not economical to make consuls stay in their offices and do clerical work. They can be of more value interviewing business men and gathering information. Inadequate appropriations for clerks will result in employing foreign clerks on small salaries instead of American citizens at higher prices.

Mr. OVERMAN. I will say to the Senator that, as he well knows—I need not tell him that—during the war they had an enormous number of clerks in all these departments. Now they ought to get along with $200,000 less.

Mr. LODGE. These are consular clerks.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; that is right.

Mr. LODGE. I mean, they are not department clerks.

Mr. OVERMAN. No; they are consular clerks, but they have had an unusual number in these countries, especially in the centers, during the war.

Mr. LODGE. There is only one thing there that makes an impression on me, and that is forcing the Government to hire foreign clerks. We have had too much of that. They are cheap; their pay is small, but they are very bad to have in an American consulate. They can not be relied on. They give information to their own governments, and they are not trustworthy. It is a great deal better, I think, to have Americans.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think so, Mr. President; but I am satisfied that they can get along with a million dollars for clerk hire. They had $1,200,000 last year for the first time. They had less than that the year before. They had only $993,000 year before last and $1,200,000 last year to get the extra clerks they needed. Now we want them to go back to something like what they had before. The war is over. During one year of the war they had only $993,000.

Mr. LODGE. I am not going to delay the bill on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Does that dispose of the committee amendments?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; on page 16 an amendment was passed over.

Mr. OVERMAN. There was only one passed over.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all.

The SECRETARY. On page 16 the committee proposes to strike out the item relative to the International High Commission, with an appropriation of $25,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, upon that I want the yeas and nays.

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator want the item in or out?

Mr. SMOOT. I want it out.

Mr. LODGE. It will go out if the Senator does not call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment on page 2, line 4. I will ask the Secretary to read it, and then I will explain it. It comes in after the word "Chile."

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is in line 3.

Mr. LODGE. It is not important where it goes in.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 3, after the word "Chile," insert "Peru" and a comma, and, in line 5, change the total so as to read "$245,000."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, that is in accordance with a joint resolution which has been reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations and passed by the Senate, and it is to carry out the law with regard to the creation of ambassadors. Peru has appointed an ambassador and sent him to this country.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am authorized by the committee to accept that amendment, for the reason that the joint resolution has been reported by the Foreign Relations Committee and has passed the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. That will necessitate taking Peru out of the clause for envoys and making a change of the total there.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 17, it is proposed to strike out "Peru" and the comma following, and, in line 19, to change the total from "$260,000" to "$250,000."

Mr. MOSES. The Senator from Massachusetts said that this change made in line 3 was in accordance with the law. Is it mandatory upon us in case any nation chooses to send us an ambassador that we must send that nation an ambassador? That was the original statute, as I remember it.

Mr. LODGE. That was the law passed through Congress, solicited by Mr. Evarts as the only way of enabling us to get ambassadors, which were thought very important at certain posts. I did not know that the provision had been repealed; it may have been.

Mr. MOSES. I am not concerned about its repeal; but I thought that it had been modified in some way so that it is no longer mandatory upon us.

Mr. LODGE. Now that the Senator speaks of it, I think he is right.

Mr. MOSES. The only comment I wish to make upon the raising of our representative in Peru to an ambassadorial rank is that we seem to be placing a reward upon the success of a revolution in Peru, while denying even recognition to the established government in Costa Rico that came into power.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think there is any revolution in Peru. She is on the edge of war with Chile.

Mr. MOSES. The administration now in power in Peru came in on the heels of a military revolution and was recognized within 48 hours.

Mr. LODGE. It was recognized at once, but the judgment of those best entitled to know is that there are odds in revolutions apparently as there are in other cases.

Mr. MOSES. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the revolution in Peru was rewarded, while the revolution in Costa Rica has not been rewarded, although successful.

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely; the Senator is quite right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I have another amendment which I should like to offer. It is a bill which was passed by the Senate without objection, after having been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations. It has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House and is now on the House Calendar. Unless we can put it on this bill I am afraid it will fail. The only purpose is to allow those persons who were connected with the American Embassy during the war in Berlin to receive certain pieces of plate which were presented to them by the British Government in recognition of our services in the care of British prisoners and the representation of British interests. There is no decoration in it, simply small pieces of silver.

Mr. OVERMAN. As it passed the Senate once, as the Senator states, and has been reported favorably by the House committee, I accept it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, after line 18, insert as a new paragraph:

The following persons formerly connected with the American Embassy at Berlin be, and they are hereby, authorized to accept pieces of plate presented to them by the British Government in recognition of services rendered by the embassy while in charge of British interests in Germany: Mr. Joseph C. Grew, counselor of embassy; Messrs. Hugh R. Wilson, Albert B. Ruddock, Alexander C. Kirk, L. Lanier Winslow, Lithgow Osborne, Oliver B. Harriman, Robert M. Scotten, and Charles H. Russell, jr., secretaries of embassy or legation; Brig. Gen. Joseph E. Kuhn and Maj. George T. Langhorne, United States Army; Lieut. Col. C. L. Furbush, Medical Corps, National Army; Maj. Albert H. Roler, Medical Reserve Corps, United States Army; Lieut. Grafton W. Minot, Ordnance Reserve Corps, United States Army; Lieut. Jerome P. Webster, Medical Reserve Corps; Mr. H. R. Pyne, Aviation Service, United States Army; Commander Walter R. Gherardi and Surg. Karl Ohnesorg, United States Navy; Director A. E. Taylor, War Trade Board; Mr. Christian A. Herter, Department of State; Mr. E. L. Dresel and Miss G. de Courcy, employed at American Legation at Berne.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOSES. On line 3, page 7, after the word "legations," I move to insert "and officers of the United States Court for China."

Mr. OVERMAN. I accept that amendment as a proper one.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 22, line 14, I move to strike out "$700,000" and insert "$600,000," so as to read:

To enable the President, in his discretion and in accordance with such regulations as he may prescribe, to make special allowances by way of additional compensation to consular and diplomatic officers and consular assistants and officers of the United States Court for China in order to adjust their official income to the ascertained cost of living at the posts to which they may be assigned, $600,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. On page 22, after the word "assistants" in line 12, I move to strike out the words "and officers of the United States Court for China."

Mr. OVERMAN. I am sorry that my very good friend who helped frame this bill moves such an amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington. All I have to say is that since I got off the subcommittee they have been putting such things in the bill, and that is the reason why I have been opposing them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to offer an amendment. On page 22, line 11, I move to strike out the words "and diplomatic officers," so that this lump sum of money to evade the law fixing the salaries of consular officers shall not be applied to diplomatic officers who have almost invariably paid very generous campaign contributions prior to getting their places.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think the Senator can be in earnest about the amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. I am absolutely in earnest.

Mr. MOSES. I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania if he wishes to prevent men of wealth who chance to be in the diplomatic service as chiefs of missions from receiving any benefit of this fund, instead of striking out the complete characterization "diplomatic officers" he frame his amendment in such wise as to make it apply only to chiefs of missions, because there are many in the secretarial corps of the diplomatic service whose salaries are monstrously inadequate, and who in many instances have to require and do require some assistance from their earnings as writers or in other ways; at any rate they have to supplement their incomes. It is well known that we have no such provision in our diplomatic regulations as that in some other countries requiring men to be possessed of an ifidependent personal income in a certain sum before they can even be considered as candidates for the diplomatic service.

We have many young men in the secretarial corps who have come in by way of examinations and who render splendid service, and are really the backbone of the Diplomatic Service. If those men can be benefited even by indirection, I hope very much it may be done.

While the object which the Senator from Pennsylvania has in mind is entirely worthy, and I have tried to describe it as such in several other instances in the course of the debate, I very much hope he will attempt to frame his amendment in such wise as that it will affect only chiefs of missions.

Mr. PENROSE. I have no sympathy with these young men. They are mostly Anglicized or Frenchified fops who get these appointments for the social distinction which it confers upon them and to give them a little experience in visiting great capitals. I do not recall any of them who are not the sons of rich parents, and frequently sent from home for their parents' good. I do not see why we should make an exception anyway. If there is an element of triviality and frivolity in the foreign service, it is in the assistants in the diplomatic corps. I would prefer to adhere to my orginal amendment.

Mr. MOSES. I have no desire to advocate particularly the cause of the secretaries in the diplomatic corps. I am free to admit that many of them are frivolous and many of them are much more intent upon sitting at the proper place at the table and upon passing through a door at the proper time——

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator is a keen observer.

Mr. MOSES. Than they are upon performing some of the more serious functions of their office. But there are a great many men in the service to whom this characterization will not apply. I have in mind particularly a young man from the Senator's own State whose service in the secretarial corps chanced to have passed under my own observation, whose service was most praiseworthy, and to whom the description which the Senator from Pennsylvania so aptly made of a few others in the secretarial corps would not apply, and there are many others without question among the secretaries in the Diplomatic Service of whom that may be said.

While I am in sympathy with the Senator's purpose to deprive generous contributors to campaign funds from benefiting at all by this appropriation, I do hope that it will not be made so drastic that worthy members of the secretarial corps may not receive the additional compensation which so many of them require.

Mr. PENROSE. I offer the amendment, Mr. President, to strike out the words "diplomatic officers." If the Senator from New Hampshire has an amendment to my amendment I will consider it. But as he is not disposed to follow the suggestion I will ask for a vote on my amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. SHAFROTH, and Mr. CURTIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 16136) to amend the liberty bond acts and the War Finance Corporation act, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 5279. An act to authorize the resumption of voluntary enlistment in the Regular Army, and for other purposes;

H. R. 13035. An act to amend section 4 of chapter 5 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918, and to make said amendment retroactive;

H. R. 13394. An act to extend the time for the completion of the dams across the Savannah River by authority granted to Twin City Power Co. by an act approved February 29, 1908, as amended by acts approved June 3, 1912, and March 1, 1916; and

H. R. 15950. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Halifax, in the State of North Carolina, to construct a bridge across the Roanoke River.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 16136. An act to amend the liberty bond acts and the War Finance Corporation act, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15979, the fortification appropriations bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask the Senator from Alabama to lay the bill aside in order that I may get action on the conference report upon the river and harbor bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am willing to do that. I ask unanimous consent that the fortification bill may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I feel that I have to act consistently with reference to these unanimous-consent agreements. So I shall have to object to laying aside the fortification appropriations bill. I objected to the request of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. I hope the Senator from Washington will not persist in delaying the naval appropriation bill for a day in its consideration.

VALIDATION OF INFORMAL CONTRACTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives further insisting upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments and agree to the further conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. KNOX conferees at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. PENROSE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Smith, Ariz.
Beckham	Jones, Wash.	Owen	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Kellogg	Penrose	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Kenyon	Pittman	Smoot
Chamberlain	King	Poindexter	Spencer
Curtis	Kirby	Pollock	Sutherland
Fletcher	La Follette	Pomerene	Swanson
France	Lewis	Ransdell	Thompson
Gay	Lodge	Reed	Trammell
Gore	McKellar	Robinson	Underwood
Gronna	Martin, Ky.	Saulsbury	Warren
Hale	Martin, Va.	Shafroth	Wolcott
Harding	Moses	Sheppard
Henderson	New	Sherman
Hitchcock	Nugent	Simmons

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Florida moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House bill 13462, the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to take the time of the Senate to discuss the conference report. When it was up for consideration this morning we had reached amendment numbered 1. I think the amendment that was originally offered by myself and accepted by the chairman of the committee was fair; that it was just not only to the Government but to the people living upon the banks of the stream or river benefited by the expenditure of public money. The amendment as proposed in the conference report leaves the whole question in the hands of the Secretary of War. He can require the donation of terminals if he so wishes, or he can pass the question over and require none. I think this is a step in the right direction. It can be amended at the next Congress, and I sincerely hope that that may be done.

So, Mr. President, upon this question I will say no more. I will ask if the conference report has been read through?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that it was read once to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it was only read down to the first amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct. The Secretary will resume the reading of the conference report.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the conference report, as follows:

"Transfer item so modified to page 28 of the bill, after line 13.

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 40, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment strike out the language proposed and insert the following: '$108,000; continuing improvement of St. Johns River between Jacksonville and the ocean, $125,000; continuing improvement and for maintenance of Oklawaha River, $95,000'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment strike out the numerals '$347,000' and insert in lieu thereof the numerals '$337,000'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment strike out the word 'completing' and insert in lieu thereof the word 'continuing'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment strike out the numerals '$1,375,000' and insert in lieu thereof the numerals '$1,733,000'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the proposed amendment add the following:

"'The Secretary of War is requested to investigate and submit to Congress on or before the 1st day of January, 1920, a report showing what progress, if any, has been made toward providing satisfactory and adequate public terminals at the several cities and towns located on the Ohio River from December 1, 1918, to December 1, 1919, inclusive.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment strike out the period at the end of the item, insert in lieu thereof a colon and add the following proviso: 'Provided, That no part of this appropriation for continuing improvement by the construction of locks and dams shall be expended until the channel spans of the bridges forming unreasonable obstructions to the navigation of the Allegheny River at Pittsburgh have been modified as heretofore directed or shall hereafter be directed by the Secretary of War, or until the Secretary of War shall have received satisfactory assurances that such modifications will promptly be made contemporaneously with the prosecution of the work of improvement.'

"And the Senate agree to the same.

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the proposed amendment add the word 'Harbor'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment strike out the word 'for' following the word 'maintenance,' and insert in lieu thereof the word 'of,' and make a separate paragraph of this item; and the Senate agree to the same.

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the numerals proposed insert the following: '$141,500,' and transfer the item to the end of line 15, page 23; and the Senate agree to the same.

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the second line of the proposed amendment strike out the words 'appropriated for,' and insert in lieu thereof the word 'adopted'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 122, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed insert the following: 'Waterway connecting Merrimack River, Mass., and Piscataqua, River, N. H.'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 137, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment strike out the word 'And' at the beginning of the first line, and insert in lieu thereof the words 'Missouri River, South Dakota,' and strike out the words 'South Dakota' in line 2 of the amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 139, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the period at the end of the proposed amendment insert a comma and add the following: 'including any recommendation for cooperation on the part of local interests'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 145, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment change the section number from '8' to '7,' and strike out the last four lines, reading as follows: 'Freight routed a part way by water and a part way by rail shall be charged only the waterway freight rate for the water haul and the proportional through rail rate for the rail haul'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 146, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment change the section number '9' to '8'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 147, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment change the section number from '10' to '9'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 148, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proposed amendment change the section number from '11' to '10'; and the Senate agree to the same.

"DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
"JOS. E. RANSDELL,
"W. L. JONES,
"Managers on the part of the Senate.
"JNO. H. SMALL,
"THOMAS J. SCULLY,
"CHAS. A. KENNEDY,
"Managers on the part of the House."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15979, the fortifications appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15979) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Fortifications and other works of defense," subhead "Armament of fortifications," on page 3, after line 22, to insert:

For purchase, manufacture, and test of seacoast cannon for coast defense, including the carriages, sights, implements, equipments, and machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenal, $3,385,000: Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is authorized to enter into contracts or otherwise incur obligations for the purposes above mentioned not to exceed $3,385,000 in addition to the appropriations herein and heretofore made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment is agreed to, without objection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] desired to be present when this bill was considered. I think he thought, when the conference report on the river and harbor bill was taken up a few moments ago, that this bill would not come up so soon. I do not know whether or not he is interested in this amendment, but I ask that the amendment go over. I have sent for the Senator.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think this amendment is about all there is in the bill. I do not think it can be this amendment in which the Senator is interested, because I have not heard from him on the subject.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The bill will have to be read, and it has not been read through yet.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask that the amendment be passed over until the reading of the bill shall have been concluded.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator from Massachusetts may be here by that time, as I have sent for him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to the end of line 16, on page 4, the last clause read being as follows:

PROVING GROUNDS.

For current expenses of the ordnance proving grounds, comprising the maintenance of rail and water transportation, repairs, alterations, accessories, and service of employees incidental to testing and proving ordnance and ordnance matériel, hire of assistants for the Ordnance Board, purchase of instruments and articles required for testing and experimental work, building and repairing butts and targets, clearing and grading ranges, $400,000.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator having this bill in charge if in a former appropriation bill there was not a large sum carried for the purchase of proving grounds? As I read this bill, there are proving grounds to be authorized.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There have been large sums appropriated for this purpose, but this is to carry out a part of the plan heretofore adopted. This bill has not been an annual bill heretofore, but it is sought to make it an annual bill from now on.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator whether this bill contemplates the purchase of additional proving grounds or whether it is merely in harmony with plans heretofore adopted in previous bills and for the carrying out of such plans?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is in harmony with plans adopted in previous bills.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Fortifications in insular possessions," subhead "Engineer Department," on page 6, line 13, after the word "Islands," to strike out "$125,000" and insert "$140,000," so as to make the clause read:

For the construction of mining casemates, cable galleries, torpedo storehouses, cable tanks, and other structures necessary for the operation, preservation, and care of submarine mines and their accessories, and for providing channels for access to torpedo wharves at the defenses of the Philippine Islands, $140,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Panama Canal fortifications," on page 12, after line 17, to insert:

SEC. 8. That no part of the moneys appropriated in each or any section of this act shall be used or expended for the purchase or acquirement of any article or articles that at the time of the proposed acquirement can be manufactured or produced in each or any of the Government arsenals of the United States for a sum less than it can be purchased or procured otherwise.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I hope that section 8, which has just been read by the Secretary, will not be agreed to. In my judgment it is bad public policy to put such a provision as that in a bill. If we had attempted before this war to manufacture all the requirements in a military way for the Government at the Government arsenals we would not have done anything like as well as we have done, bad as that has been, in preparing ordnance and other necessities for war purposes. Such a provision, too, involves the whole question of the bookkeeping system. There will be a constant dispute whether or not an article could be manufactured cheaper or as cheap or not as cheap at Government arsenals if such a provision be incorporated in the bill, and I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, if the committee is determined to allow this amendment to go out of the bill, which they have put in, I am powerless; but I should like to say that a similar provision has been placed in a number of bills, and is in the Army bill, as I understand.

Mr. WEEKS. I think it has been stricken out of that bill.

Mr. KENYON. If these articles can not be produced in arsenals cheaper than they can outside, then the Government may go ahead and purchase them outside. So, I do not see how the argument of the Senator from Massachusetts is sound. If, in fact, we can produce all we need in the Government arsenals—and there are great arsenals in this country now that can do more than they are doing, and can produce the articles cheaper than can be done by private parties—why should we not do it? That is the principle which this amendment is designed to initiate.

I am not going to take any further time on the question, but will let the Senate vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment which was passed over.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, after line 22, the committee reported an amendment to insert the following:

For purchase, manufacture, and test of seacoast cannon for coast defense, including the carriages, sights, implements, equipments, and machinery necessary for their manufacture at the arsenal, $3,385,000: Provided, That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is authorized to enter into contracts or otherwise incur obligations for the purposes above mentioned not to exceed $3,385,000, in addition to the appropriations herein and heretofore made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CLAIM OF CHARLES MORGAN, MAIL CONTRACTOR.

Mr. GAY. I submit a Senate resolution, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 473), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report the facts, as shown by the records of the Treasury Department, as to a claim of Morgan's Louisiana & Texas Railroad & Steamship Co., as assignee of Charles Morgan, mail contractor, for $2,094.17 for one month's extra pay, under certificate No. 74 of the sixth auditor, which claim was certified to Congress for appropriation in House of Representatives executive documents as follows: No. 29, Forty-sixth Congress, second session (p. 99); No. 30, Forty-sixth Congress, third session (p. 133); No. 26, Forty-seventh Congress, first session (p. 78); No. 153, Forty-eighth Congress, second session (p. 93); No. 314, Fifty-first Congress, first session (p. 5); and No. 210, Forty-ninth Congress, first session (p. 17), and was reported upon favorably by the Committee on Claims of the House of Representatives in its report No. 2750, Fifty-first Congress, first session, and further reported to Congress in Senate Document No. 92, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session (p. 18); and to report also whether any reason appears to the Treasury Department why appropriation should not now be made.

Mr. GAY. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have objected to similar requests for matters coming up out of order this afternoon, and while I dislike to object in this instance, we will have a morning hour to-morrow, and no doubt the Senator can then call up the resolution. So I will have to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

Mr. WEEKS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, it is perfectly evident that a quorum is not present. I therefore move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 27, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 26, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Be graciously near to us, O Thou Great Spirit, whose eternal energy is everywhere potent; incline our hearts to Thee, that our work may be full, complete, in consonance with Thy will; that we may have no regrets to look back upon, but go forward to meet the future with brave and manly hearts, after the similitude of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MRS. MARY RUSSELL BUTLER.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a recent editorial from a New York paper on the life of Mrs. Mary Russell Butler, who died recently, leaving 19 grandchildren who have patriotically served their country in this war.

The SPEAKER. In what paper was the editorial printed?

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. The New York World.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an article from the New York World about a lady who had 19 grandchildren in the Army. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 207. Joint resolution admitting into the United States 35 puncheons of Gordon's sloe gin, ordered by E. La Montagne's Sons, of New York, before the passage of the food-control act prohibiting the importation of distilled spirits, the delivery of which was delayed on account of war conditions until after that act went into effect;

S. J. Res. 217. Joint resolution admitting into the United States 560 barrels of Spanish wine ordered by Luigi Bick, of New York City, before the passage of the food-control act prohibiting the importation of distilled spirits, the delivery of which was delayed on account of war conditions until after that act went into effect;

S. 1102. An act for the relief of Simon M. Preston; and

S. 5323. An act to authorize the governor of the Territory of Hawaii to acquire privately owned lands and rights of way within the boundaries of the Hawaii National Park.

S. 5556. An act to provide for the erection of memorials and the entombment of bodies in the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater in Arlington National Cemetery, Va.; and

S. 5224. An act to prohibit intoxicating liquors and prostitution within the Canal Zone, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 5279) to authorize the resumption of voluntary enlistments in the Regular Army, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 15950. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Halifax, in the State of North Carolina, to construct a bridge across the Roanoke River;

H. R. 13394. An act to extend the time for the completion of the dams across the Savannah River by authority granted to Twin City Power Co. by an act approved February 29, 1908, as amended by act approved March 1, 1916; and

H. R. 13035. An act to amend section 4 of chapter 5 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918, and to make said amendment retroactive.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 9897) to authorize the contesting and cancellation of certain homestead entries, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 12211) entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors," the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strike out the name "Hermann" and to insert in lieu thereof the name "Herrman" where it appears in line 19, page 11, of said bill.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the following concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 72):

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Senate resolution 468.

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM P. BORLAND, late a Representative from the State of Missouri.

Resolved, That a committee of 10 Senators be appointed by the Vice President, to join such committee as may be appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, to attend the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On February 4, 1919:

H. R. 79. An act for the sale of isolated tracts of the public domain in Minnesota;

H. R. 1423. An act for the relief of Alexander F. McCollam;
H. R. 4240. An act for the relief of Alma Harris;
H. R. 8444. An act for the relief of Ira G. Kilpatrick and Guy D. Dill; and
H. R. 12194. An act to provide for the award of medals of honor, distinguished-service medals, and Navy crosses, and for other purposes.

On February 7, 1919:

H. R. 9865. An act to authorize the sale of certain lands to school district No. 28 of Missoula County, Mont.

CHANGE OF CONFEREES—DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McANDREWS], one of the conferees on the District appropriation bill, has been called to Chicago on important business, and the Chair appoints the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] in his place.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, the following concurrent resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

Senate concurrent resolution 27.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 25,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 310, Sixty-fifth Congress, entitled "Revenue bill of 1918," and that there be printed separately 10,000 additional copies each of the majority and minority reports and individual views of the members of the Committee on Finance on H. R. 12863, the revenue bill of 1918, for the use of the Senate—to the Committee on Printing.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the lighthouse bill (H. R. 15551).

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think we ought to go on with the special order first. The Chair will recognize the gentleman as soon as he get through with that.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Speaker, I submit a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks we ought to go on with the unfinished business. Then the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The same remark applies to the gentleman from Washington.

THE VICTORY LOAN.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the victory loan bill. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is entitled to 20 minutes. The Chair will first recognize the gentleman to offer his motion to recommit.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I offer the motion to recommit which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to report it forthwith with the following amendment: Strike out all of sections 9 and 10.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, the proposition before the House is to strike out sections 9 and 10 of the pending bill. These sections seek to amend the War Finance Corporation act passed a year and a half ago. Last night I discussed this particular feature of the bill at considerable length, but in the time I now have at my disposal I shall confine myself to a statement of that which is involved.

We passed the War Finance Corporation act as one of the immediate necessities of the war, urged by the administration as necessary to finance industries and business engaged in the production of necessary war materials or arranging to meet the demands of the war activities. This war-finance bill was such an essential departure from our usual legislation, and was of such enormous proportions, that I do not believe there was a Member of the House who would have voted for the stupendous proposition if it had not been understood that it was a necessary war provision and that it would terminate six months after the close of the war. It provided for business within this country based upon war activities. Now, we are asked to amend the act in two essential particulars: First, to extend the life of the corporation six months, and second, to reverse absolutely the scope and character of its business. Whereas it was intended entirely for domestic purposes, it is now to be made wholly for foreign purposes to support export trade; so that it may take the place of the banking functions of the country, and if anybody has a doubtful proposition that the banks of this country do not see fit to accept, in the matter of export trade, then it is proposed that the Government, with all its resources, its credits, and its power is to be called upon to make these loans.

I am one of those who believe that our banking system is sufficient to meet all the demands of our legitimate commerce at home and abroad. If it requires any amendment to give longer time for paper for export trade, as the banking system we now have gives longer time to agricultural and live-stock transactions than to commercial transactions, an amendment could be made. But it should be made through the Banking and Currency Committee after thorough investigation instead of in the hurried way that we now seek to amend the War Finance Corporation act in this bill.

I take it that the large reason for the bringing in of this measure in the form in which it appears here is the urgency of those directly involved. I take the position that it is time, gentlemen of the House, that we should begin cutting out these war activities, especially where they seek to extend them over into times of peace. Four directors are to handle this corporation and are handling it now. Each one of them draws a salary of $12,000, a salary that under the circumstances is worth from three to four times the salary of any Member of this House. The business that they have had and that they may have will probably give plenty of leisure for them to discover some means of extending the life and scope of this corporation when the period of this bill will have expired. I have no doubt that if this bill should go through and become a law these gentlemen during the next six months would be able to suggest some very plausible reasons why the War Finance Corporation should be extended, and their salaries with it. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I am not in favor of the continuance of the War Finance Corporation under the provisions of the act as it is written. I had some hesitancy in originally supporting this feature of the former bill. My objection to it was that it gave the opportunity of expanding the credit of the country to the amount of something like $3,000,000,000 if it might appear advisable to do so. Whatever might be the claims of those in charge that we are not expanding our currency and thus expanding our credit, the truth about the matter is that with this riot of expenditures induced by the war we have been increasing our issue of currency until to-day we have at least $35 per capita in the form of paper money. It is true it is supported by what you would call securities in the way of commercial paper, and a portion of it by gold, but this inflated condition of the currency that finds its best expression in the high cost of living, which has cut the purchasing power of the dollar probably one-half of what it was before and maybe one-quarter, has no possible remedy until we get back to foundation principles of sound finance, and that is the only method by which we produce the artificial value and increase the price without increasing the value.

In addition to my opposition to this as a principle, there is another consideration, and that is an artificial Government agency is here created for the business of loaning. I doubt the wisdom of that. In the second place this artificial agency of the Government when fastened on the Government is almost impossible of disassociating it from the Government. I warn this House that when this Government agency is discontinued by limitation there will be an effort to revive it and to continue it, and the same argument you hear to-day will be offered then; in other words, it is almost impossible for us to disassociate or discontinue any artificial Government agency from the Government, for it will be put upon the basis that it is demanded by the exigencies of the war, and I do not think it wise to allow interested persons to bring in such recommendations and proceed upon their judgment alone.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I will.

Mr. GARNER. I agree with the gentleman that there will be a tendency to keep these corporations, and other war activities, wherever there is any possible chance, but the gentleman from Ohio has not seen any tendency to continue them in this Congress, and I think there will be very little in the next Congress. I can speak for some Members on this side that will not want to continue the war activities any longer than is absolutely necessary.

Mr. FESS. If I could be sure that the judgment of the gentleman from Texas would be the vote of the House I would not so much hesitate. But I warn you again that we will find this very same thing a year from now, when it will be put up to us that if we do not do it we are not considering the best interests of the country.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, the extension of power of the War Finance Corporation under this bill is simply an extension of power of the Federal reserve banks which they could not avail themselves of and keep within the law, and it therefore makes this provision of the bill iniquitous.

Mr. FESS. The gentleman has well stated it; it gives an opportunity to expand the circulating medium that they do not now have in Federal reserve banks. That is one reason why I am opposed to it.

Mr. MADDEN. That is why I am opposed to it.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] has correctly stated that when the act creating the War Finance Corporation was passed there were some misgivings on the part of the membership here as to the wisdom and necessity of creating that corporation. And yet the experiences we have since witnessed in connection with the activities of the corporation have thoroughly justified the action of Congress in creating it. The corporation has served a most valuable and useful function, not so much in the way of exercising all of its activities and agencies as it has in the way of allaying apprehension and maintaining confidence with respect to our credit situation.

So far as the present amendatory proposal is concerned, I submit that any Member of the House who will investigate our domestic and international economic conditions, present and prospective, will find that every business fact and every economic fact warrants the continuance of the life and activities of this organization during the time proposed in the present bill.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to discuss in a general way the proposed new loan measure now pending, its terms, the ability of the country to take care of it, and the economic effects of our present outstanding and proposed loans, and also to offer some comparisons of the record our Federal Treasury has made in financing the present war with the record of the methods and policies of the Treasury in financing the Civil War, as well as those of the treasuries of foreign governments in financing the present war. Such comparison makes a wonderful showing of wise and sound financial achievement by the Federal Treasury which far surpasses that of our own Government during the Civil War or of any foreign government during the present war. I confidently predict that as we get further away from the period of immediate activities connected with this war, and as the American people thus gradually secure a clearer perspective of the unprecedented accomplishments of the Treasury, captious criticism of minor phases will give way to general approval and admiration.

Mr. Speaker, the pending bill would authorize the Treasury to issue notes aggregating $7,000,000,000, about $5,000,000,000 of which is estimated as necessary to finish defraying the total expenditures of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919. Owing to the general shifting economic and security conditions, it is agreed by an overwhelming majority of the two Houses of Congress, by the Treasury, and by the ablest financiers throughout the country, that it would be utterly unfeasible for Congress at this time to prescribe the interest rate for these notes. The only possible alternative, therefore, is to leave this duty to the sound judgment of the Treasury. The Treasury has really suggested the interest rates in the cases of the four liberty loans heretofore authorized by Congress, after most carefully sounding out business, financial, and economic conditions throughout the country. In practically each instance the Treasury insisted on a rate of interest lower than that proposed by financiers and lower than Congress really expected.

This uniform record, which has resulted in the saving of considerable interest for which the people would otherwise have become liable on a vast amount of long-term bonds, affords a guaranty of the extreme care I know the Treasury will exercise in safeguarding the people against excessive interest burdens under the fifth or victory liberty loan. I may say that the duration of the notes can not exceed five years, and this limitation further justifies Congress in dealing with the present exigency in the manner proposed by the bill. They are also redeemable before maturity at the option of the Treasury. I shall not enumerate all the provisions of this loan measure. I prefer first to undertake a discussion of our receipts and expenditures and of our Treasury policies during the war, and to offer some comparisons, such as I referred to at the outset.

Mr. Speaker, it is now estimated that the disbursements of the Treasury for the year ending June 30, 1919, will be near $19,000,000,000. To meet these requirements during the fiscal year the Treasury is receiving from the proceeds of the fourth liberty loan, in round numbers, $7,000,000,000, from war-savings certificates $1,000,000,000, and from taxes $6,000,000,000, or a total of $14,000,000,000, thus leaving a deficiency of $5,000,000,000 to be made up from the proceeds of the proposed note issue of $7,000,000,000.

The citizen and taxpayer is naturally interested in knowing the amount of the total receipts of the Treasury and their sources since April 6, 1917, when the Nation entered the war, and also the chief items of expenditures and their purposes.

Let me first refer to the state of our indebtedness, present and prospective. The total amount of our interest-bearing debt when the Nation entered the war, on April 6, 1917, was $1,023,357,000. During the war loans have been incurred, if we include $1,011,000,000 war-savings certificates, to the amount of $17,989,091,000. This makes an aggregate indebtedness to date of $19,012,448,000. Add to this amount $5,000,000,000 to be derived from the coming victory liberty loan and we have a gross debt of $24,012,448,000 as the loan situation will present itself on June 30, 1919. This amount does not include outstanding Treasury certificates of indebtedness, because they are to be absorbed either in long-term bonds or to anticipate taxes. It is reasonable to estimate that the amount of our additional loans to meet remaining immediate war expenditures accruing during the next fiscal year, 1920, will be offset by the proceeds of assets the Government has on hand. To be more than safe, however, let us include a further long-term loan during the next fiscal year of $3,000,000,000, and this would make a total gross debt at the end of the war of $27,012,448,000.

The total war and ordinary receipts of the Treasury, exclusive of receipts from loans, from April 6, 1917, to June 30, 1919, as nearly as can be computed and in part estimated, will be $10,785,000,000, to which if we add the total loan receipts of $22,989,000,000 for the same period makes a showing of total receipts aggregating $33,797,000,000. Assuming that the total loans to the allies by June 30, 1919, will be $9,000,000,000, the deduction of this amount from $27,012,448,000, the estimated amount of our gross debt at that time, leaves a net indebtedness of $18,012,448,000. This amount offers the basis for viewing the real amount of the Nation's outstanding obligations which must be met in the future.

The total normal and war expenditures of the Government from April 6, 1917, to June 30, 1919, as nearly as can be determined, will be $32,915,000,000. It is thus seen that our total ordinary and war receipts, exclusive of those from loans for the same period, are about 33⅓ per cent of our combined ordinary and war expenditures; or if we consider this percentage to total expenditures after deducting the amount loaned to the allies, $9,000,000,000, it is about 45 per cent. If, again, we deduct from $10,785,000,000, the combined ordinary and war receipts, the ordinary receipts of $2,497,000,000, we find the total war receipts, excluding those from loans, to be $9,245,000,000 from April 6, 1917, to June 30, 1919. On the other hand, deducting the normal or peace expenditures of $2,710,000,000 for this same war period from the combined normal and war expenditures of $32,915,000,000 shows actual war expenditures of $30,205,000,000. The percentage of actual war receipts, other than those from loans, to actual war expenditures is found to be near 30 per cent. It is due to say concerning these computations that certain items of special disbursements, such as $25,000,000 for the Danish West Indies, and which do not strictly constitute either normal or war expenditures, are included as extraordinary expenditures. The fact may also be noted that the actual tax revenues for the entire war period only aggregate $9,513,000,000, and the full amount of receipts I have stated is made up by regular revenue receipts from public lands and other miscellaneous sources.

Each of these comparisons shows a substantially higher percentage of revenues to expenditures than any other nation has been able to make during the war, although foreign treasury officials have agreed as to the soundness of this policy and have striven to follow it, but fell short of the length to which our Government has been able to go in meeting the expenses of the war by current taxation.

Mr. Speaker, in pursuing its policy of sound and successful financing, it is seen that the Treasury first decided that during the war long-term loans should not pay the high commercial interest rates incident to the war. This was likewise the view of Congress. As a second step to prevent bondholders from ultimately gaining greater interest advantages, the right to convert into any long-term bonds bearing a higher interest rate than 4¼ per cent has been prohibited by statute, save as to about $1,400,000,000 of unconverted 3½ per cent bonds of the first loan. Our financing by loans will show a substantially lower net interest level and a correspondingly larger saving to future taxpayers than can be found in the treasury records of any other nation participating in the war. The Treasury and Congress early in the war agreed on the policy of issuing no tax-exempt bonds running for long periods. Under the operation of the income-tax law, with its graduated rates, this policy equalizes the relative situations of the wealthy and poor investors, and in so doing prevents the large investor from locking up his fortune in tax-exempt securities, thereby avoiding all taxation. This policy is also based on the sound view that no country should allow thirty or forty billion dollars of its wealth to become immune from all taxation for a period of 20 to 30 years. Such policy would be conducive to socialism besides being discriminative. The plan of the Treasury to finance itself with short-term paper in the form of certificates of indebtedness, which in turn is periodically absorbed into long-term bonds, is acknowledged by the best financiers at home and abroad to be at least superior to any of the substitute methods followed by foreign governments during the war.

A most thoughtful and wise course has also been pursued in fixing suitable and feasible periods for the redemption of our war debt so that such amounts of bonds will become redeemable at such regular intervals throughout the life of the long-term debt as will enable the Treasury either to take them up through a sinking fund or to refund into lower rates of interest when possible. Under the methods of handling these loans, as I have stated, the lowest possible level of interest, both now and hereafter, is assured, and the opportunity to pay off the bonds at par and not at a premium, and stop interest accumulations just as rapidly as the ability of the Treasury will permit, is offered.

Both Congress and the Treasury have consistently striven to meet war expenses by as large a proportion of taxes as could be levied without materially injuring production and retarding enterprise. Our success in this respect has scarcely been approached, much less equaled, by this or any other nation in the past. The wisdom and economic soundness of this policy are universally recognized. Bonds are but deferred taxes with interest. A war debt contracted in time of high and artificial prices and paid off in a time of low or normal prices is calculated to work serious hardships, in that the burden is greatly augmented. This is true, because it will require twice the services and commodities to pay off a debt that are required to purchase the bonds during the war when the prices of such services and commodities are 100 per cent above normal. The exercise of the taxing power and the refunding opportunities already provided by law should, however, take care of this phase to a measurable extent, especially since practically the entire war debt is purchased and held at home.

There has naturally been complaint and criticism at the huge amount of our war expenditures and their apparent extravagance in many instances. No one opposes extravagance more than I do, but we should consider all the circumstances. Agreeing, as I do, that expenditures at times have been more or less extravagant, we must realize, however, that in the light of the unusual circumstances and conditions this extravagance, in the main, was the price we were compelled to pay for victory. Whatever that price was, we had to pay it. We are forced to realize, and can not soon forget, that the most rapid haste on our part after we entered the war was supremely necessary if we were to get enough trained men and supplies to France in time to check and turn back the great German hordes in their rapid onrush toward Paris in the summer of 1918.

Our military forces did not reach the battle lines a day or an hour too soon to prevent a world catastrophe and to save civilization. The American Government could not make possible their timely arrival at this most critical juncture without putting on the fullest speed in every conceivable line of war activities. It sought to throw every ounce of its strength into the war within the shortest time. The work of mobilizing the man power and the resources of the country and rushing them across 3,000 miles of ocean to Belleau Wood and Chateau-Thierry, where the German Army was making its unchecked advance on Paris, was pushed with all possible vigor. It was not then a question of price, of costs of labor, or of supplies; it was supremely a question of most hasty preparation to get an army to France before it was everlastingly too late. Messages flashed hourly from London, Paris, and Rome, calling for men, more men, still more men. Let the overhasty critic of extravagant expenditures first ponder what the unspeakable and unthinkable results would have been if, owing to our delay in joining the forces of our allies, the German Army had penetrated to Paris and hopelessly separated the English and French forces. Let him further ponder over the hundreds of thousands of precious lives of American boys that would have been lost by a continuance of the war another year, to say nothing of the enormous expenditures that would have been then involved. It is far cheaper to finance a war brought to a quick conclusion by extreme haste, even though extravagance is involved, than to finance a long drawn-out war caused by such delays as a careful and strict regard for economy in every detail would require. The number of American lives saved by the swift prosecution of our part of this war will far more than offset the extravagances which were unavoidable in so doing. I do not in any sense justify one dollar of extravagance when possible to avoid it.

While the complaint of extravagance by our Government is on my mind, I wish to call attention to the fact that wherever a citizen or politician finds an occasion for the criticism of any war policy, method, or activity here, he will find that citizens and politicians in every other country engaged in the war find there occasion for threefold the amount of similar criticism. We should remember, too, that our war-tax laws clip off billions of war profits and turn them back into the Treasury. Democrats and Republicans jointly framed and voted for all appropriation bills. No political party can criticize.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct attention to a few facts pertaining to the financing of our Civil War by way of contrast with the record the present Government is making. Dewey, in his admirable Financial History of the United States, says:

> The weakest element in the financing of the Civil War was the delay in applying effective taxation.

During the fiscal year ending in 1862 the ratio of loans to taxes was 8½ to 1, and for the fiscal year ending in 1863 it was 5½ to 1. Dewey refers to the hopelessly confused and complicated state of the Civil War loan situation as follows:

> June 30, 1866, the interest-bearing debt consisted of loans bearing 5 different rates of interest and maturing at 19 different periods of time. On a part of the loans the interest was payable in coin, and on a part in currency. Of the 6 per cent bonds and notes there were 12 different kinds; of the 5 per cent loans, 5 different issues; and of the 7–30 notes at least 5, some convertible at the option of the Government and some at the option of the holder. * * * Of the total debt (amounting to $2,758,000,000) only one-ninth ran in any contingency longer than two years. Eight-ninths of it consisted of transient forms, issued under laws made up to a great extent of incomprehensible verbiage giving unlimited direction over the mass to one man, and expressing in the aggregate nearly 100 contingencies of duration, option, conversion, extension, renewal, etc.

During the Civil War, Jay Cook, who was in no sense an official of the Government, was given the general agency to sell United States bonds, and he in turn engaged 2,500 subagents. Under his first individual contract with the Government he received a commission of three-eighths of 1 per cent on all sales, but one-half of 1 per cent on the first $10,000,000. This method opened wide the doors to speculators and syndicates to plunder the people. This private citizen, Jay Cook, along with his numerous subagents, was employed a second time to sell the bonds of the Government, aggregating hundreds of millions. Had the present Treasury revived this plan, Republicans would have raved.

All authorities in finance now agree that the fundamental error in financing the Civil War was the dependence upon loans for all extraordinary expenditures, and that this policy was the principal cause of the issuance of legal-tender notes (greenbacks). There is the same unanimity of agreement that the undue use of short-term loans, which comprised 60 per cent of the total loans for the period of the war, was disastrous in many ways.

I am not criticizing the statesmen and financiers of the Civil War in thus making comparison with the state of our present loans—they no doubt did the best they could—but I am offering something for critics to digest when they are looking for some phase of our war financing to criticize. I should say in justice to officials of both war periods that the conditions in each case were not entirely the same in all respects. To the politicians or citizens who are inclined to be unduly critical of extravagance on the part of the Government in the present war, I call attention to the following extract from the statement of the chairman of a congressional investigating committee during the Civil War, and in so doing I may say that the part quoted but illustrates the subject matter contained in three separate reports aggregating several thousand pages. I read from Bolles's Financial History of the United States:

> Rascality (in the Government contract business), widespread and sickening, soon appeared. Said Mr. Van Wyck, chairman of the committee to investigate the subject of defrauding the Government: "The mania for stealing seems to have run through all the relations of the Government—almost from the general to the drummer boy; from those nearest the throne of power to the nearest tide waiter. Nearly every man who deals with the Government seems to feel or desire that it would not long survive, and each had a common right to plunder while it lived. Colonels, intrusted with the power of raising regiments, colluding with contractors, bartering away and dividing contracts for horses and other supplies to enrich personal favorites, purchasing articles and compelling false invoices to be given. While it is no justification, the example has been set in the very departments of the Government. As a general thing, none but favorites gain access there, and no others can obtain contracts which bear enormous profits. They violate the plain provisions of the law requiring bids and proposals on the false and shallow pretext that the public exigency requires it.

Mr. Dewey, referring to inflation during the Civil War, said:

The economic results of the successive issues of the legal tender United States notes (greenbacks), accompanied by enormous issues of short-term Treasury notes which circulated almost as money, were the rise of prices of commodities and the fluctuating premium on gold. The depreciation of the currency measured in gold fell from 100 to 39 in September, 1864. The total effect of paper issues in increasing the cost of the war has been estimated at between $518,000,000 and $600,000,000; even this large amount is small when compared with the burdens which inflated prices placed upon the people in the ordinary relations of trade and industry.

Under this influence of inflation the purchasing power of money wages in 1865 stood at 143 as compared with the commodity price level of 216. They should, in fairness, have been on the same level. These figures show the heavy load that was thus placed upon the laborers of the country. The soldiers were paid $13 a month until 1864, when their wages were raised to $16, payable in depreciated currency. I need not dwell in detail on the abnormal prices that resulted from the suspension of specie payments and the long train of evils that followed in its wake. The ease with which the Treasury can make mistakes in financing which entail enormous injustice to the people is shown by the action of the Treasury and Congress in connection with the refunding act of 1870, which, among other things, authorized the issuance of $1,000,000,000 of bonds at 4 per cent, redeemable after 30 years and exempt from all taxation. These bonds within a short period after went to a premium of more than 25 per cent. Long before they matured the Government could borrow at a rate of 2½ per cent. In later years many of these bonds were bought up by the Government at a large premium.

The extreme viciousness and injustice of large issues of tax-exempt Government bonds are illustrated in the case of our Civil War loans. The chief volume of the war bonds were bought up by wealthy citizens. The interest rates were highly attractive and the tax-exempt feature permitted the rich to lock up their wealth for a generation with entire immunity from taxation. The taxes imposed to pay off this indebtedness were placed on the masses chiefly through the customhouse. The result was that the masses of the people, though not in a condition to own these bonds, were obliged to pay them off, while the privileged class of wealthy bondholders received satisfactory interest and avoided almost the entire tax burdens incident to the payment of the Civil War debt. May I say here that this is in striking contrast with the policy of our present Federal income and other tax laws, which will compel every citizen, whether the owner of a war bond or not, to meet his just share of taxes for their payment according to his ability?

Mr. Speaker, at this time I am reminded of a recent exclamation of an intelligent Member of Congress, made in a tone of great surprise, that "it may be necessary for the Treasury to issue a substantial amount of bonds during the fore part of the next fiscal year to supplement tax revenues," and he further exclaimed that "it would be a dreadful thing for the Government to issue bonds in time of peace." My distinguished friend wholly failed to understand the sound principles of war and peace financing. Every government free from debt should levy a sufficient amount of taxes to meet its ordinary expenditures. Every government carrying a debt should levy a sufficient amount of taxes to meet its ordinary expenditures and the interest on its indebtedness, as well as an adequate amount for sinking-fund purposes. There are two classes of expenditures—ordinary and extraordinary or nonrecurring expenditures. There may be extraordinary expenditures in time of peace, to meet which a bond issue might become necessary or advisable, as in the case of the construction of the Panama Canal. All war expenditures fall in the extraordinary class. While the maximum amount of war taxes should be levied, the very minimum would be an amount necessary to pay ordinary expenditures and to meet all interest and adequate sinking-fund requirements. An immense portion of the present war expenditures will not accrue until the next fiscal year, and if the largest amount of taxes Congress feels justified in imposing during the reconstruction period should fall short of the combined normal and war expenditures in the next fiscal year, it would be in accordance with every principle of good finance to issue bonds for the remainder. Certainly Congress has already imposed a sufficient amount of taxes to meet ordinary peace expenditures, to pay interest on all war and other indebtedness, to meet every requirement of a large sinking fund, and in addition to afford a considerable remainder for the payment of war expenditures accruing during the fiscal year 1920.

We should not overlook the fact that within a period of 19 months the combined human financial and industrial efforts of the United States were feverishly exerted to put its maximum of resources, including man power and supplies, into the war. The result was that huge plans were perfected, thousands of contracts entered into, colossal programs framed, enormous military and industrial structures built up, upon the reasonable theory that the war would continue another year. On this unprecedentedly broad basis the United States was going full tilt when suddenly, not to say unexpectedly, the armistice came about. The volume of expenditures arising from this vast plane of war activities—stretching from France to every part of America—were naturally enormous compared to what they would have been if our military preparations could have been on that far smaller, cheaper, and narrower scale which contemplated that in any event the war would end favorably on November 11, 1918.

Mr. Speaker, as illustrating the course of war expenditures, I wish to add that while at its close the cost of the Civil War was estimated at $2,713,568,000, yet in 1879 an estimate of the expenditures growing out of the war down to that date showed the enormous sum of $6,190,000,000. Even this does not include many millions expended by the States.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of other constructive acts and policies which Congress and the Treasury adopted in financing the present war, but I shall not take much time to discuss them; it is sufficient to say that the wisdom of each has been thoroughly vindicated by experience and testified to by the ablest financial authorities. I do wish briefly to refer to what was practically the enforced policy of making loans to our allies. When England entered the war she could only furnish a small army, with the result that in lieu she was called on to make loans to her less powerful allies who had large armies fighting in the field and depleted treasuries with which to maintain them. England realized that she could most effectively contribute to the prosecution of the war by making these loans to sustain the armies of her allies while raising, training, and equipping adequate forces of her own. When the United States entered the war a similar situation confronted it.

The hard-pressed allies were in sore need of equipment, foodstuffs, and other necessary military supplies. They wanted men at the earliest moment possible; in any event, they must have supplies for their armies. Little Roumania had been overrun; Serbia was blotted out; the Russian giant was staggering and reeling backward; the gallant and war-weary French were barely holding the battle line in the west; Italy's armies were soon to be pushed across the Alps and driven far back within her borders. The outlook when we entered the war was not encouraging. Should I not frankly say that it was perilous? It was under these circumstances that the United States Government, in its efforts to bring every element of strength to the aid of the allies, proceeded to make loans for the purposes I have stated. These loans and credits now aggregate $8,841,000,000. My honest belief is that the timely aid which they afforded, in the way of furnishing arms, ammunition, clothing, and foodstuffs for the armies of England, France, Italy, and the other nations fighting with them, made it possible for those armies to hold the ever-advancing German troops in check until our military forces could join them in 1918 and inflict a knockout blow.

An English financier recently stated that the loans of Great Britain to her allies were so distributed that only about one-half the amount loaned could be safely counted as assets of the treasury, but that no such condition applied to the loans of the United States to the allies, because more than $7,500,000,000 of her total loans were to Great Britain, France, and Italy, and that it would, according to all human calculation, be repaid.

Another important phase of our loans to the allies is that in addition to paying the United States 5 per cent interest practically their entire proceeds were expended in this country in payment for merchandise, including foodstuffs and other war supplies of all kinds. We received high war prices and profits for these products.

Mr. Speaker, I must make brief reference to the sinking fund provisions of the pending bill. A sinking fund is expressly created for the purpose of paying off our entire war debt. These provisions require an annual payment into a sinking fund of 2.32 per cent of the net total debt, estimated at not less than $18,000,000,000 after deducting the loans to the allies, the interest and principal of which will offset a similar amount of our war indebtedness. It is estimated that the plan just stated will wipe out our war debt in less than 25 years, assuming the interest rate to be 4¼ per cent. The total interest and sinking-fund requirements would aggregate something over $1,100,000,000 on a debt of $18,000,000,000. The proposal would involve an equal charge each year for these two purposes, because as the interest charge is decreased the sinking fund would be correspondingly increased. This is true because the per cent of the total debt to be allotted to sinking fund would continue each year to be based on the total original debt, without regard to the amount redeemed and canceled in the meantime. In my judgment, the action of Congress and the Treasury in thus making comprehensive provision for the payment of the public debt is timely, businesslike, and wise. I have not the time to cite the history of the payment of war debts in the United States, which is very interesting. I do wish, however, to refer with the heartiest approval to the action of Jefferson's first administration in adopting the policy of public retrenchment with a view to the reduction of debt and taxation. Dewey states that when Gallatin went to the Treasury "he had been unceasing in his demands for economy, for specific instead of general appropriations, for the extinction of the debt in preference to military and naval expenditures, and for a change in the form of the sinking fund." Gallatin announced a wise and sound principle for dealing most effectively with public debts, as follows:

> I know but one way that a nation has of paying her debts, and that is precisely the same that individuals practice, "spend less than you receive," and you may then apply the surplus of your receipts to the discharge of your debts. But if you spend more than you receive you may have recourse to sinking funds, you may modify them as you please, you may render your accounts extremely complex, you may give a scientific appearance to additions and subtractions, you must still necessarily increase your debt.

I find but one possible fault with the present sinking-fund proposal, and this criticism would not arise if the policy of Gallatin should be vigorously followed. I am of opinion that Congress might enact a specific provision allotting certain stable revenues to the sinking fund and providing that they should constitute a separate and distinct fund for this purpose only. Such action would not only render certain the annual flow of a given amount of money into the sinking fund but would operate as a check on extravagant appropriations. Affirmative legislation would be necessary to interfere with the constant and uniform operation of the sinking-fund requirements thus prescribed.

Mr. Speaker, I wish here to reiterate a statement I made on this floor, when the war-finance bill was pending in March, 1918, in support of an intelligent, practical, and efficient program of economy in public expenditures. I desire also most strongly to emphasize the idea that by far the easiest and wisest method of paying off the public debt is by the constant practice of rigid economy. From this source ample sinking funds would annually flow into the Treasury, and new or higher tax rates that will otherwise be required could be avoided. Economy furnishes the most desirable sinking fund. In leaving this topic I will simply add that in order to practice the fullest measure of economy in public expenditures it is necessary that the people themselves should be thoroughly impressed with the doctrine, both in theory and in practice. Their cooperation is essential. The conditions following a war, when war taxes have been heavy, generally arouse both the people and the legislative officials to the necessity for economy, with the result that whole-hearted cooperation to that end is always given more freely than at any other time. Including interest and sinking fund, we should soon be able to get our normal expenditures down to a permanent peace level of not over $3,000,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, we hear much discussion as to whether the bulk of the war debt should be paid by the present or a later generation. This presents some additional topics for consideration. If our war debt had been contracted abroad, the failure of this generation to meet it would automatically transmit its burdens to the next and succeeding generations.

The fact is, however, that virtually the entire debt has been floated at home. Its payment, therefore, will in large measure mean the payment of taxes by the taxpayers to each other. As a Nation the amount of our total wealth continues the same in any event. The situation is different, though, when the debt is viewed from the standpoint of different classes of citizens. It would seem to be in a measure true that if our citizens purchased these bonds in amounts according to their respective abilities, and if the citizens of the country should later be taxed to pay off these bonds according to their respective abilities, no material discrimination would soon arise in connection with the burdens of our war debt. It would further appear that under the application of our system of graduated income taxes any citizen having an income subject to supertax would have difficulty in escaping the chief portion of his fair share of the war-debt burdens whether he should own bonds and pay the tax on their interest or whether he should invest elsewhere and pay both super and normal tax on his income and in this way contribute to paying off the war debt. Whichever horn of the dilemma he may take, he does not escape. It would seem, in any event, that the character and nature of the tax levies imposed to pay our bonded war debt will constitute the controlling factor in its redistribution among the people. If such tax levies should be made according to the ability of the citizen to pay, each will be reached for his reasonable share of the war debt, except in those individual cases where tax evasion occurs. On the other hand, if such tax levies should materially depart from the principle of ability of the taxpayer to pay, a corresponding discrimination would arise.

An interesting sidelight on this general phase is found in the statistics of the English estate tax. These statistics show that practically all the material capital of the country is owned by persons over 21 years of age; that persons over 45 years of age, constituting one-third of the class just stated, own three-fourths of the entire material capital. This would make the representative person over 45 years own about six times as much as the representative person between 21 and 45. It is manifest, therefore, that if this condition should apply to the United States to a material extent the bulk of our war debt will be paid by those who did not enter the military service during the war. If true, this is as it should be.

Mr. Speaker, I have discussed the causes and effects of inflation in speeches on former loans, and it is not necessary to elaborate on that subject now, except to call attention to the fact that our Government has carefully avoided some of the worst causes of inflation, which it failed to avoid during the Civil War and which other nations have been unable to avoid during the present war. At the very outset the Government proceeded to impose heavy taxation; it has consistently avoided the issuance of fiat money; it has curtailed the hurtful expansion of credit wherever and in every way possible. These three conditions, when not properly dealt with—as they have not been elsewhere and as they have been here—are each highly conducive of inflation, which means artificial high prices. We seem to have a certain degree of international inflation at this time. This fact renders it necessary that in determining and gauging our domestic financial and economic situation we should keep in mind the international or world conditions as they affect our internal affairs in any of the ways I have pointed out.

I am thus reminded of certain important ideas to be kept in view when we are considering the amount of our war expenditures. Had we entered the war during its early stages, when price levels were near normal, our expenditures would have been scarcely one-half what they are. This condition enabled the other nations which entered the war in the beginning to keep their expenditures during the first year or two on a far lower basis than they otherwise could. The fact that the prices of labor and of commodities were practically doubled when we entered the war has meant a corresponding increase in the total of our expenditures. For illustration, the committee on public expenditures in England found that an increase of 10 per cent for labor and the price of commodities increased government expenditures $650,000,000 a year. This finding should enable one to draw some interesting inferences with respect to the cause of our large war expenditures. There is a general view that war's demand for supplies increases prices, which calls for increase of the price of labor, both of which call for a larger volume of currency, which produces inflation unless accompanied by the corresponding increase of the supply of commodities.

Mr. Speaker, let me now proceed with a brief reference to the financing of the war by a number of important foreign Governments. The American citizen will then readily see that, whatever he may find for criticism at home, he will agree that his condition would be far worse if he should become a citizen of any other desirable nation.

The total expenditures of the United Kingdom from August 1, 1914, to December 31, 1918, were $45,000,000,000. The deduction of the normal peace expenditures for this period leaves a total war expenditure of $40,640,000,000. For this same period the aggregate revenues have amounted to $11,490,000,000, while the strictly war revenues were $7,120,000,000. The difference between the British war expenditures and the war revenues is $33,520,000,000. The British Government since the beginning of the war has borrowed $33,750,000,000, which, added to its prewar debt of $3,250,000,000, makes $37,000,000,000. The average interest rate on the English debt is 4.6 per cent. It is estimated that the Government will have to borrow $3,500,000,000 at a later date to meet the cost of reconstruction and remaining war items. This would make the gross debt $40,500,000,000. Deducting from this amount the value of surplus assets, estimated at $3,360,000,000, the amount of loans to Dominions, $1,300,000,000, and one-half the amount of loans to the allies, considered recoverable, $3,750,000,000, would leave the net amount of the British debt at $32,290,000,000. Her foreign debt is $6,000,000,000. The interest on this net debt, amounting to $1,472,000,000, if only supplemented by an annual sinking fund of $500,000,000, would involve an annual burden of $2,000,000,000 in round numbers. They are discussing a capital levy in England. When the normal peace expenditures of $990,000,000 are augmented by several hundred millions for pensions and other expenditures growing out of the war, it is clear that the minimum of fixed annual peace revenues the United Kingdom must establish will be $3,500,000,000. England has less than half our wealth and population. Compared to that of England, our net war debt would be $65,000,000,000, and still greater when compared with France, Italy, Canada, and other countries.

During the war England has only continued nominally on a gold basis. There are in circulation $1,500,000,000 of currency notes very similar to our greenbacks of the Civil War, the principal portion of which is uncovered by gold. We observe wholesale expansion of currency and credit there during the war.

Inflation of most every kind is rampant. Only price regulation has to a moderate extent held it in check. At certain stages of the war, instead of being able to economize, the Government was obliged to aid scores of industries by voting hundreds of millions in bonuses. During the period of six months the aggregate bonuses authorized amounted to $980,000,000, including such items as $225,000,000 subsidy to reduce the price of bread, $25,000,000 bonus to potato growers, $100,000,000 bonus to miners, $200,000,000 bonus to munition workers, $50,000,000 bonus to railway workers, and so forth. It is seen that almost the entire industrial structure has been measurably maintained by bonuses. The floating debt of England is $7,315,000,000. On March 8, 1919, England's expenditures were at the rate of $825,000,000 a month, or $9,900,000,000 a year. England has a balance of trade running against her at the rate of near $3,500,000,000 annually.

No further contrast of the financing of England and the United States is necessary, except I may call attention to the cost of our larger Navy and our merchant fleet, both of which England already had, and to the higher scale of compensation we pay our soldiers and sailors and the enormous cost of freight we had to undergo for transportation of men and materials, first to our seaboard, thence across the sea, and finally to the interior of France. The frantic cry of our allies for ships, more ships, and yet more ships still rings in our ears.

I deem it wholly unnecessary to detail the German financial situation, having set out her methods and economic conditions in former speeches. It is sufficient to say that she is loaded with a war debt of some $33,000,000,000, overrun with fiat money or its equivalent, and every kind of the most vicious inflation exists.

Poor France is trudging along under a load of debt aggregating $23,400,000,000. Her foreign debt on November 30, 1918, was $5,400,000,000. She has levied $3,600,000,000 of taxes, $10,800,000,000 was raised by four loans, while $4,000,000,000 has been advanced by the Bank of France. These items have been supplemented by loans from the United States, short-term internal loans, and credits opened in foreign countries. The wealth of France prior to the war was estimated at $60,000,000,000. She now faces a huge deficit of $4,000,000,000, and the Government is seriously proposing a capital-tax levy, estimated to yield from $9,000,000,000 to $10,500,000,000, spread over the next few years. The next annual budget is expected to approach $3,600,000,000, as compared with her normal peace budget of $1,000,000,000. France has been obliged to pay exorbitant interest rates and to sell her bonds considerably below par. The financing of Austria has been hopeless, as is her present financial condition.

The national debt of Italy prior to the war was $2,750,000,000; her present total indebtedness is $12,500,000,000, but when all war expenditures are met this amount is expected to be increased to $16,000,000,000. The national wealth of Italy is not exceeding $20,000,000,000. It will be seen that Italy expects to have to pay further indebtedness, principally growing out of the war, to the amount of $3,500,000,000, although her normal expenditures should be deducted from this. Italy, too, was obliged to accede to high interest rates on her war debt, as well as to the sale of securities below par. The striking phase of her financial situation is that her estimated total war debt will comprise about three-fourths of her total national wealth. The press reports commodity prices in Italy as $2 per pound for bacon; $2.10 per pound for canned beef; 70 cents per pound for sugar; drop letters, 4 cents; others, 5 cents; post cards, 3 cents. I have submitted enough facts to illustrate the financial and economic condition of Italy in comparison with our own.

The Canadian debt before the war was $336,000,000, while her debt is now $1,500,000,000, and her total war debt is estimated later to be $2,000,000,000. The national wealth of Canada is $7,000,000,000. Her war interest rates have been far above those of the United States, tax free, and approximating the commercial interest level. Canadian revenue before the war amounted to $173,000,000 a year, but it can not be less than $350,000,000 in future normal peace times. Canada, like England, France, Italy, the United States, and all other solvent nations in the war, will be obliged to borrow a substantial amount during her next fiscal year to meet extraordinary expenditures growing out of the war, because of the inadequacy of her combined war and peace revenue.

It is appalling to contemplate the cost of the war—the cost in men, money, and material. The most recent official statement as to the loss of men shows 7,354,000 killed in battle or died from wounds, these losses distributed among the different nations, in part, as follows:

Russia	1,700,000
Germany	1,600,000
France	1,385,300
Austria	800,000
England	706,700
Italy	460,000
Turkey	250,000
Belgium	102,000
Roumania	100,000
United States	50,000

I have not the time to enumerate the lists of those who died from sickness or were wounded in battle. I might illustrate these two latter phases, however, by giving the latest official figures as to France, which place the number of wounded at 3,000,000, of which 700,000 are crippled and pensioned, with some few hundred thousands French war prisoners later to be added.

The cost of the war in money or its equivalent is now estimated at a little over $200,000,000,000; the cost for the first five months of the war in 1914 was $10,000,000,000; for the year 1915, $26,000,000,000; for the year 1916, $38,000,000,000; for the year 1917, $60,000,000,000; and for the year 1918, $70,000,000,000. Interest on the combined public debts of all nations prior to the war was placed at $1,000,000,000, while the interest on the future debts of these nations will aggregate more than $10,000,000,000 per annum.

I can not undertake to give figures, or even approximate estimates, of the losses of property and materials by the war. The French high commission estimates the physical losses of their nation at $13,000,000,000. This would make her total war cost $36,000,000,000, plus $8,000,000,000 for pensions. The value of English, allied, and neutral shipping lost at sea through German piracy is incalculable. The loss of production can never be estimated. The value of munitions, arms, and other equipment consumed by the war, to say nothing of thousands of cities and towns destroyed, is so vast and the facts so vague as to be utterly impossible of computation.

Turning again to our own financial and economic situation, we experience a feeling of great relief after dwelling on the dark picture presented by the other belligerent countries. Our population is more than 100,000,000 and our wealth more than $250,000,000,000, while our annual savings must be more than $15,000,000,000. The Nation can without difficulty meet and pay off its obligations far in advance of other nations. The Nation can and should maintain and strengthen its unparalleled position of world supremacy industrially, financially, and commercially. The United States has to its credit a 19 months' war record which is the admiration of the world, as it is the despair of the enemy. Let us keep in mind at least some of the big things the Nation has accomplished, some of the big achievements with which it has startled the world. The courage and patriotism of our soldiers and sailors have brought lasting honor and glory to the Nation. Let us, without brooding over little things, cheerfully practice enough financial heroism to pay the necessary taxes involved.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman from North Carolina intend to consume more time?

Mr. KITCHIN. There will be but one more speech on this side.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I want to warn the country of the processes that have prevailed under administrative auspices for the past few months. I want to warn the incoming Congress of what it has to face. Gentlemen have voted very cheerfully on this side, many of them upon that side, for increased appropriations for the Army that will give the administration what it pleases to use when the new Congress comes in. The same thing has been done for the Navy. We are still voting lump sums that will enable these departments to keep going a number of bureaus that might well be dispensed with in peace times. Similar appropriations are demanded elsewhere, all of which will be expended by the administration without let or hindrance from the incoming Congress. The Department of the Interior, ambitious, like Agriculture and others, is asking for enormous appropriations to be passed by this Congress, while the majority is here and the going is good, fearing it may not be well to come to the incoming Congress. The Department of Labor is seeking an increase of appropriations for all its bureaus before the new Congress has anything to say about the expenditure of these funds. It has become the practice of every department and of every bureau and of every war-created agency to work this Congress to the limit and push its hand just as deep down into the Public Treasury as possible before the reckoning. I warn the country that the Republican Party is not responsible for the saturnalia of expenditure that has been authorized or that will be authorized before this Congress closes. But it will have dumped upon it all of the responsibility.

One of the dumping processes is found in this bill. We provide the Secretary of the Treasury with means to expend $7,000,000,000. That is a war measure. Under cover of the bill we are asked to continue a war-created War Finance Corporation that was started as an exigency of war, but which now desires to continue on a peace basis. If we continue it, as here proposed, the War Finance Corporation, protected as to the future, may snap its fingers at the Congress. With money and authority in hand it can go on and make itself a perpetual institution of the United States. It can use our money and issue bonds.

I am against permitting these war-created agencies to obtain such large authority from Congress under guise of war and such large lump-sum appropriations now as will enable them to snap their fingers at Congress when the Democratic majority releases its hold on the House. The War Finance Corporation was created because it was said the banking facilities of the country had broken down and because they were unable to meet the demands of the railroads and the public-utilities companies and other concerns that must be continued if the war was to be successfully prosecuted.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can not yield——

Mr. PHELAN. I want to say that nobody every said that the banks broke down.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I regret that I can not yield. I can not get any more time, otherwise I would be very glad to yield to the gentleman. I want to say some things about these dumping processes. I want Republicans particularly to know that they are running up against a tremendous responsibility that is being unloaded upon them. Oh, gentlemen vote cheerfully for all these things now, and they say, as the Democratic leader said in debate last night, "When you come into power we will join you in endeavoring to curtail these expenses." Why do they not stop them now before the authority is given? War Finance Corporation, indeed! What was it? An agency to relieve railroads. We did very well for the railroads. We appropriated $500,000,000 to the railroad director, and that is all gone. We have appropriated another $750,000,000, and that is to go. Will you gentlemen over there, when you go out of power, aid us in curtailing these extravagances? Will you aid us in cutting down these tremendous lump-sum appropriations that you have been authorizing in order that your power over the Treasury and the people may continue in spite of the November election?

The War Finance Corporation is one of the growths upon the body politic. It was created to help American banking and commercial institutions. It has served its purpose. It should be disbanded, but it seeks to hold on. It discovers a new reason for its existence and seeks to enter a new and foreign field. What does it ask to do? It wants to go into the business of promoting foreign commerce. It wants to encourage exports from the United States. A worthy purpose, but it involves a new lease of life. Its old war emergency business is done. It was awarded $500,000,000 to capitalize itself, and got its money from the Treasury of the United States. It was our money that was used to finance such corporations as the War Finance Corporation did finance during the war. Now, as to the need for it. One hundred and sixty-seven million dollars of the $500,000,000 of capital taken out of the Treasury of the United States was used, and used for whom? War purposes? Was it used to help Pershing, to help the boys over yonder in the trenches? Or was it used to help the railroads back yonder in the country, or the big railroads in the East, or the public-utility companies, or the bankers, or the planters through the bankers?

In various ways it used about $167,000,000. It did not use all of its resources. It used only $167,000,000 of the total of $500,000,000 allotted to it, and yet it would have the power, if this new lease of life is given, to issue bonds to the extent of six times its $500,000,000 capital, or a total of $3,500,000,000, at a time when the Secretary of the Treasury and his efficient assistants tell the Committee on Ways and Means that they are unable to sell the liberty or the victory bonds of this country unless they can offer inducements as to interest.

If we encourage this war corporation to go into foreign trade, it is questionable whether we do not help our competitors more than ourselves. We displace the private banking interests and set the Government up in permanent control of our foreign exchange.

I think it is time to stop, to stop right here and now. The whole proceeding was debatable at the start. Members of Congress voted for the organization of the War Finance Corporation only because of the representations of the President of the United States, who said it was necessary as a war emergency measure. Now, all that we have been predicting about these war-born agencies is verified. They want to retain the tremendous power they have enjoyed during the war. This corporation, with an organization costing the Government possibly $100,000 a year in salaries and offices, comes forward and says, "We do not want you to dispense with our services; we have been patriotic during the war; we want you to continue us now; and if you can not see, as we can not see, that there is a war demand for our existence, then let us furnish you the excuse for a perpetuation of our power. We say to you that we can engage in the business of encouraging foreign export trade."

That would be a reason for their continuance. It is what we expected; but, as some of us see it, it is another dangerous step in the direction of paternalism. We are pushing the Government in business and displacing the bankers.

When is this thing going to stop? The Secretary of Labor wants to organize bureaus to keep everybody employed. The Government is to pay for it. The Secretary of Agriculture wants an enormous appropriation to keep a vast number of employees busy. The Government pays for that. Go down the line and you will find in every instance that they are simply preparing for the future, feathering their nests now, hoping to avoid the wrath to come. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] is recognized for 11 minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] offers a motion to recommit the bill, striking out sections 9 and 10, amendments to the war-finance corporation act. He made his 10 or 15 minute speech without having hardly referred to these sections. What are they? I want every business man in this House just to pay attention for one minute. Not a dollar of this money can be advanced by the Finance Corporation except for one purpose, and one purpose only, to assist in the exportation of our domestic products, and such authority can only exist for one year after the termination of the war. The first question to ask and answer is, Do our domestic products need extra help at this time for their exportation? If the answer is no, why, of course, sections 9 and 10 ought to go out. If the answer is yes—and every man in this House, every intelligent man in the country, knows that in this transition period from a war condition to a peace condition that our export trade, that the exporters of our domestic products, require assistance—then arises the question, What is the best and wisest method of help? Only two ways have been suggested: First, according to the suggestion of the Treasury Department, let the Government loan to the allied Governments one and a half billion dollars more, so that they can loan to their people in order that they can buy from our people. To get the money for such loan we must sell one and a half billion dollars more of bonds or notes; that is, borrow that amount from our people or tax our people an additional billion and a half dollars. The committee unanimously turned down that suggestion. The other suggestion is sections 9 and 10. It is that the Finance Corporation shall continue in existence for 12 months after the war only, and only for the purpose of assisting the exportation of our domestic products. I stated that every intelligent man in and out of the House knows that at this extraordinary time the exportation of our domestic products require extra assistance. Our foreign customers desire and need our products. They can buy only by cash or credit. They have not the cash or gold. The gold supply of Great Britain, France, and Italy, our principal customers, is greatly reduced. They of necessity require all their gold during the transition period for the readjustment of their finances. They do not wish gold to be exported to pay for balances of trade which are against them. The foreign purchaser must therefore have credit if we are to continue to sell him. This amendment to the War Finance Corporation, which the gentleman by his motion would strike out, enables the foreign customer to get credit from the American exporter by providing that the Finance Corporation can, upon full and adequate security, make advances to the exporter to assist him in exportation of our products.

Some gentlemen said that the banks can do it. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] says the banks can do it; the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] says the banks can do it; the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] says the banks can do it. Why, gentlemen, if the banks can do it there is a provision in this bill that the exporter can not get a dollar from this corporation.

Mr. HUSTED rose.

Mr. KITCHIN. Do not interrupt me, I have but 10 minutes; I wish I had an hour and then I would permit anybody to get in, as all gentlemen know. It provides that the exporter can only get money from the corporation direct by showing that he can not get money on reasonable terms from the banks. If the banks can do it, this corporation can and will make no loans. If the bank can not do it, there is but one practicable way that we can help the exporters of our domestic products, and that is this way. But the banks can not give all the necessary assistance. The banks will have all they can do to finance the Government and the people in their domestic trade during the period of our readjustment. They must loan the Government from time to time during the year $8,000,000,000 to $10,000,000,000 on the Treasury certificates. They must in large part help to dispose of the billions of notes we are authorizing by this bill. To take care of those things and the domestic business of the country will be all the burden they can bear. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that this corporation is given the power to issue $3,000,000,000 of bonds, six times its capital stock, to aid our exporters. Why, the gentleman has not read the amendment he wants to strike out. It expressly provides that the outstanding loans of this corporation can never exceed at one time $1,000,000,000. The corporation can make such loans by issuing less than $600,000,000 of its notes or bonds, as it already has $500,000,000 of capital stock. He says that the Government is going to appropriate this money. By the bill the Government can not appropriate a dollar for such purpose. The Finance Corporation, if it has not enough of its capital stock to do it, can issue its bonds backed by its capital stock and all assets and sell them on the market or to investment banks or other investors in order to make the advances under this amendment. The Government, they say, is responsible. The Government is not responsible for one single cent of bonds the Finance Corporation issues nor for one cent it shall advance under this amendment. It is not responsible to the extent of one dollar of any liability that the corporation incurs in any way. Let us read the provisions of the War Finance Corporation acts which the gentlemen seem to forget:

SEC. 17. That the United States shall not be liable for the payment of any bond or other obligation or the interest thereon issued or incurred by the corporation, nor shall it incur any liability in respect to any act or omission of the corporation.

Now, gentlemen, you did not understand that by hearing the speeches of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] did give the only valid objection that can be raised against this amendment, but if he had the confidence in his own party which I have—if Republicans are one-half as good as Democrats—then he need have no fear, because the Republicans—his own party—will control the Senate and the House in the next Congress, when the authority to make advances expires. The gentleman himself is a powerful and leading member of the Republican Party and a Member of the next House; and I agree with him that if his party in the next Congress should go so far wrong as to try to make this corporation permanent I will join hands and try to prevent the Republicans from committing that wrong upon the Government and the people. [Applause.] How can it be permanent unless the Republican Party in the next House and Senate makes it permanent?

By the express terms of the amendment this corporation must cease to make loans—must cease every activity except liquidation—12 months after the termination of the war. The gentleman's party will be in power here and in the Senate. The gentleman fears that there will be petitions and there will be lobbyists and big influences will be brought to bear upon the next Congress when this 12 months expires to extend the life of the corporation and make it permanent. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] is impeaching the integrity and patriotism and manhood of the coming Republican Congress. [Applause.] I have hope that the Republican House and Republican Senate in the Sixty-sixth Congress will be equally as patriotic and equally as courageous as the Democrats and Republicans in this Congress with respect to this corporation. Ah, attempts were made to bring influences to bear on the administration and on this Congress to give longer life to this corporation, but they were vain.

Now, does the gentleman from Ohio seriously believe it when he says that the great danger in this amendment is the probability or possibility of the corporation being made a permanent institution by the next Congress? Does he believe and confess here to-day that his party, of which he is the national congressional chairman, in the Sixty-sixth Congress, in which he will be a conspicuous and distinguished Member, is going to deliberately yield to lobbyists and sinister influences and write into law this great danger? [Applause.] If that is the sort of membership which the gentleman, as campaign chairman, elected in last November, then he has done the poorest job any man has ever done. [Applause on the Democratic side.] No; as I said a while ago, I have confidence in the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] and in the Republican membership of the next Congress, and I feel that your judgment will be as our judgment will be, that the very minute the 12 months expire the power and authority of the corporation, except for liquidation, will cease, and not a minute's time longer than that fixed by the amendment will be granted.

Gentlemen, the proposition is right up to us. Shall we help our export trade in this emergency, in this transition period, at a time when every business man and every intelligent man in this House and in this country knows it should have help? And if you give help for our export trade it is bound to be an indirect help to our domestic trade. It means continuance of domestic production; continuance of domestic export. It means employment of labor. It means the running of the industries of this country. The man that is in favor of idleness of labor, the man that is in favor of curtailment of domestic production, the man that is in favor of stopping the wheels of industry, the man that is in favor of halting our export trade, ought to vote with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], the chairman of the Republican congressional committee. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But if he wants to help our domestic production, if he wants to give employment to our labor, if he wants the wheels of industry to continue to turn under a Republican Congress as they did under a Democratic Congress, then you ought to vote against the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it,

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands a division.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 111, nays 240, answered "present" 9, not voting 68, as follows:

YEAS—111.

Anthony	Fess	Kennedy, R. I.	Rose
Austin	Focht	King	Schall
Bacharach	Fordney	Knutson	Sells
Birch	Frear	Kraus	Sloan
Bland, Ind.	Fuller, Ill.	Kreider	Smith, Idaho
Bowers	Garland	La Follette	Smith, Mich.
Browne	Gillett	Lampert	Snell
Browning	Good	Langley	Stafford
Burroughs	Goodall	Lehlbach	Stiness
Campbell, Kans.	Gould	McCulloch	Strong
Cannon	Graham, Ill.	McFadden	Sweet
Chandler, Okla.	Greene, Mass.	McKinley	Switzer
Clark, Pa.	Griest	McLaughlin, Mich.	Thomas
Classon	Hamilton, Mich.	McLaughlin, Pa.	Tilson
Cooper, W. Va.	Haskell	Madden	Timberlake
Cramton	Haugen	Magee	Towner
Currie, Mich.	Hayes	Mondell	Vare
Curry, Cal.	Heaton	Moore, Pa.	Voigt
Darrow	Hersey	Morin	Ward
Davis	Hollingsworth	Nelson, A. P.	Wason
Denison	Huddleston	Nelson, J. M.	Watson, Pa.
Dillon	Hull, Iowa	Paige	Wheeler
Drukker	Hutchinson	Parker, N. J.	White, Me.
Edmonds	Ireland	Platt	Williams
Elliott	Johnson, Wash.	Porter	Wood, Ind.
Esch	Juul	Powers	Woodyard
Fairchild, B. L.	Kearns	Ramsey	Zihlman
Fairfield	Kelly, Pa.	Reed

NAYS—240.

Alexander	Ellsworth	LaGuardia	Robinson
Almon	Elston	Larsen	Rodenberg
Anderson	Evans	Lazaro	Rogers
Aswell	Fairchild, G. W.	Lea, Cal.	Romjue
Ayres	Farr	Lee, Ga.	Rouse
Baer	Ferris	Lesher	Rowe
Bankhead	Fields	Lever	Rubey
Barnhart	Fisher	Linthicum	Rucker
Beakes	Flood	Lobeck	Sanders, Ind.
Bell	Foss	London	Sanders, La.
Benson	Foster	Lonergan	Sanford
Beshlin	Freeman	Longworth	Saunders, Va.
Black	French	Lufkin	Scott, Iowa
Bland, Va.	Fuller, Mass.	McArthur	Scott, Mich.
Blanton	Gallagher	McClintic	Sherley
Brand	Gallivan	McCormick	Sherwood
Britten	Gandy	McKenzie	Shouse
Brodbeck	Gard	McKeown	Siegel
Buchanan	Garner	McLemore	Sims
Burnett	Garrett, Tenn.	Maher	Sinnott
Byrnes, S. C.	Garrett, Tex.	Mann	Sisson
Byrns, Tenn.	Glynn	Mansfield	Slayden
Caldwell	Godwin, N. C.	Mapes	Slemp
Campbell, Pa.	Goodwin, Ark.	Martin	Small
Candler, Miss.	Gordon	Mays	Smith, T. F.
Cantrill	Gray, Ala.	Merritt	Snook
Caraway	Green, Iowa	Miller, Wash.	Snyder
Carew	Greene, Vt.	Montague	Steagall
Carter, Mass.	Griffin	Moon	Stedman
Carter, Okla.	Hadley	Moores, Ind.	Steenerson
Church	Hamlin	Morgan	Stephens, Miss.
Clark, Fla.	Hardy	Mott	Stephens, Nebr.
Claypool	Harrison, Miss.	Neely	Sterling
Cleary	Harrison, Va.	Nicholls, S. C.	Sumners
Coady	Hastings	Nichols, Mich.	Taylor, Colo.
Collier	Hawley	Nolan	Temple
Connally, Tex.	Hayden	Oldfield	Thompson
Connelly, Kans.	Heflin	Oliver, Ala.	Tillman
Cooper, Ohio	Helvering	Oliver, N. Y.	Tinkham
Cooper, Wis.	Hicks	Osborne	Treadway
Copley	Hilliard	O'Shaunessy	Van Dyke
Crisp	Holland	Overmyer	Vinson
Crosser	Hood	Overstreet	Volstead
Dale	Houston	Padgett	Walsh
Dallinger	Hull, Tenn.	Parker, N. Y.	Walton
Decker	Humphreys	Peters	Watkins
Delaney	Husted	Phelan	Watson, Va.
Dempsey	Igoe	Polk	Weaver
Dewalt	Jacoway	Pou	Webb
Dickinson	James	Quin	Welling
Dixon	Johnson, Ky.	Ragsdale	Welty
Dominick	Jones	Rainey, H. T.	Whaley
Donovan	Keating	Rainey, J. W.	Wilson, La.
Doolittle	Kehoe	Raker	Wilson, Tex.
Doremus	Kelley, Mich.	Ramseyer	Wingo
Doughton	Kettner	Randall	Winslow
Drane	Key, Ohio.	Rankin	Wise
Dupré	Kiess, Pa.	Rayburn	Wright
Dyer	Kincheloe	Reavis	Young, N. Dak.
Eagan	Kitchin	Riordan	Young, Tex.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—9.

Ashbrook	Denton	Essen	Norton
Blackmon	Dill	Lundeen	Purnell
Butler

NOT VOTING—68.

Barkley	Estopinal	Littlepage	Shackleford
Booher	Flynn	Lunn	Shallenberger
Brumbaugh	Francis	McAndrews	Smith, C. B.
Carlin	Graham, Pa.	Mason	Steele
Cary	Gray, N. J.	Miller, Minn.	Stevenson
Chandler, N. Y.	Gregg	Mudd	Sullivan
Costello	Hamill	Olney	Swift
Cox	Hamilton, N. Y.	Park	Tague
Crago	Heintz	Pratt	Taylor, Ark.
Davey	Helm	Price	Templeton
Dent	Hensley	Roberts	Venable
Dies	Howard	Rowland	Vestal
Dooling	Johnson, S. Dak.	Russell	Waldow
Dowell	Kahn	Sabath	Walker
Dunn	Kennedy, Iowa	Sanders, N. Y.	White, Ohio
Eagle	Kinkaid	Scully	Wilson, Ill.
Emerson	Little	Sears	Woods, Iowa

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On the vote:

Mr. BUTLER (for) with Mr. STEELE (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas with Mr. WILSON of Illinois.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH with Mr. COSTELLO.

Mr. ESTOPINAL with Mr. EMERSON.

Mr. BARKLEY with Mr. CRAGO.

Mr. SCULLY with Mr. DOWELL.

Mr. HAMILL with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. STEVENSON with Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania.

Mr. DILL with Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota.

Mr. BOOHER with Mr. KINKAID.

Mr. CARLIN with Mr. LITTLE.

Mr. DENT with Mr. KAHN.

Mr. EAGLE with Mr. MASON.

Mr. HELM with Mr. MUDD.

Mr. HOWARD with Mr. PRATT.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE with Mr. ROWLAND.

Mr. LUNN with Mr. SANDERS of New York.

Mr. MCANDREWS with Mr. SWIFT.

Mr. OLNEY with Mr. VESTAL.

Mr. PARK with Mr. WALDOW.

Mr. SABATH with Mr. TEMPLETON.

Mr. SEARS with Mr. ROBERTS.

Mr. SULLIVAN with Mr. CHANDLER of New York.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER with Mr. CAREY.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "yea."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall, listening?

Mr. NORTON. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman can not vote. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. NORTON, and he answered "Present."

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "yea."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall, listening?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I was in here, but I was called out by a constituent.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman can not vote. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. LUNDEEN, and he answered "Present."

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "nay."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall, listening?

Mr. BLACKMON. I was not in the Hall, but I was near it.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman does not come within the rule. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. BLACKMON, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, let us have the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 348, nays 3, answered "present" 3, not voting 74, as follows:

YEAS—348.

Alexander	Dale	Gould	Little
Almon	Dallinger	Graham, Ill.	Littlepage
Anderson	Darrow	Gray, Ala.	Lobeck
Anthony	Davey	Green, Iowa	Lonergan
Ashbrook	Davis	Greene, Mass.	Longworth
Aswell	Decker	Greene, Vt.	Lufkin
Austin	Delaney	Griest	Lundeen
Ayres	Dempsey	Griffin	McArthur
Bacharach	Denison	Hadley	McClintic
Baer	Dent	Hamilton, Mich.	McCormick
Bankhead	Denton	Hamlin	McCulloch
Barnhart	Dewalt	Hardy	McKenzie
Beakes	Dickinson	Harrison, Miss.	McKeown
Bell	Dill	Harrison, Va.	McKinley
Benson	Dillon	Haskell	McLaughlin, Mich.
Beshlin	Dixon	Hastings	McLaughlin, Pa.
Birch	Dominick	Haugen	McLemore
Black	Donovan	Hawley	Madden
Blackmon	Doolittle	Hayden	Magee
Bland, Ind.	Doremus	Heaton	Maher
Bland, Va.	Doughton	Heflin	Mann
Blanton	Drukker	Hersey	Mansfield
Bowers	Dupré	Hicks	Mapes
Brand	Dyer	Hilliard	Martin
Britten	Eagan	Holland	Mays
Brodbeck	Eagle	Hollingsworth	Miller, Minn.
Browne	Edmonds	Hood	Miller, Wash.
Browning	Elliott	Houston	Mondell
Buchanan	Elston	Huddleston	Montague
Burnett	Esch	Hull, Iowa	Moon
Burroughs	Essen	Hull, Tenn.	Moore, Pa.
Butler	Evans	Humphreys	Moores, Ind.
Byrnes, S. C.	Fairchild, B. L.	Hutchinson	Morgan
Byrns, Tenn.	Fairfield	Igoe	Morin
Caldwell	Farr	Ireland	Mott
Campbell, Kans.	Ferris	Jacoway	Neely
Campbell, Pa.	Fess	James	Nelson, A. P.
Candler, Miss.	Fields	Johnson, Ky.	Nelson, J. M.
Cannon	Fisher	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nolan
Cantrill	Flood	Juul	Norton
Carew	Focht	Kearns	Oldfield
Carter, Mass.	Fordney	Keating	Oliver, Ala.
Carter, Okla.	Foss	Kehoe	Oliver, N. Y.
Chandler, Okla.	Foster	Kelley, Mich.	Olney
Church	Frear	Kelly, Pa.	Osborne
Clark, Fla.	Freeman	Kennedy, R. I.	O'Shaunessy
Clark, Pa.	French	Kettner	Overmyer
Classon	Fuller, Ill.	Key, Ohio	Overstreet
Claypool	Fuller, Mass.	Kincheloe	Padgett
Cleary	Gallagher	King	Paige
Coady	Gallivan	Kinkaid	Parker, N. J.
Collier	Gandy	Kitchin	Parker, N. Y.
Connally, Tex.	Gard	Knutson	Peters
Connelly, Kans.	Garner	Kraus	Phelan
Cooper, Ohio	Garrett, Tenn.	Kreider	Platt
Cooper, W. Va.	Gillett	LaGuardia	Polk
Cooper, Wis.	Glynn	Lampert	Porter
Copley	Godwin, N. C.	Larsen	Pou
Cramton	Good	Lea, Cal.	Powers
Crisp	Goodall	Lehlbach	Purnell
Crosser	Goodwin, Ark.	Lesher	Quin
Currie, Mich.	Gordon	Linthicum	Rainey, H. T.

Rainey, J. W.	Scott, Mich.	Strong	Ward
Raker	Sells	Sumners	Wason
Ramsey	Shallenberger	Sweet	Watkins
Ramseyer	Sherley	Switzer	Watson, Pa.
Randall	Sherwood	Taylor, Colo.	Watson, Va.
Rayburn	Shouse	Temple	Weaver
Reavis	Siegel	Thomas	Webb
Reed	Sims	Thompson	Welling
Riordan	Sinnott	Tillman	Welty
Robinson	Slemp	Tilson	Whaley
Rodenberg	Small	Timberlake	Wheeler
Rogers	Smith, Idaho	Tinkham	White, Me.
Romjue	Smith, Mich.	Towner	Williams
Rose	Smith, T. F.	Treadway	Wilson, Ill.
Rouse	Snell	Van Dyke	Wilson, La.
Rowe	Snook	Vare	Wilson, Tex.
Rubey	Snyder	Venable	Wingo
Rucker	Stafford	Vestal	Winslow
Sanders, Ind.	Steagall	Vinson	Wise
Sanders, La.	Stedman	Voigt	Wood, Ind.
Sanders, N. Y.	Steenerson	Volstead	Woodyard
Sanford	Stephens, Miss.	Waldow	Wright
Saunders, Va.	Stephens, Nebr.	Walker	Young, N. Dak.
Schall	Sterling	Walsh	Young, Tex.
Scott, Iowa	Stiness	Walton	Zihlman

NAYS—3.

Curry, Cal.	La Follette	London

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—3.

Hayes	Johnson, Wash.	Langley

NOT VOTING—74.

Barkley	Flynn	Lazaro	Sabath
Booher	Francis	Lee, Ga.	Scully
Brumbaugh	Garland	Lever	Sears
Caraway	Garrett, Tex.	Lunn	Shackleford
Carlin	Graham, Pa.	McAndrews	Sisson
Cary	Gray, N. J.	McFadden	Slayden
Chandler, N. Y.	Gregg	Mason	Sloan
Costello	Hamill	Merritt	Smith, C. B.
Cox	Hamilton, N. Y.	Mudd	Steele
Crago	Heintz	Nicholls, S. C.	Stevenson
Dies	Helm	Nichols, Mich.	Sullivan
Dooling	Helvering	Park	Swift
Dowell	Hensley	Pratt	Tague
Drane	Howard	Price	Taylor, Ark.
Dunn	Husted	Ragsdale	Templeton
Ellsworth	Jones	Rankin	White, Ohio
Emerson	Kahn	Roberts	Woods, Iowa
Estopinal	Kennedy, Iowa	Rowland
Fairchild, G. W.	Kiess, Pa.	Russell

So the bill was passed.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs.

Until further notice:

Mr. RUSSELL with Mr. HAYES.

Mr. STEELE with Mr. LANGLEY.

Mr. HENSLEY with Mr. FRANCIS.

Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas with Mr. ELLSWORTH.

Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina with Mr. MASON.

Mr. BOOHER with Mr. GARLAND.

Mr. CARLIN with Mr. ROWLAND.

Mr. SLAYDEN with Mr. KAHN.

Mr. LUNN with Mr. CARY.

Mr. PARK with Mr. GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD.

Mr. CARAWAY with Mr. HUSTED.

Mr. DOOLING with Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa.

Mr. DRANE with Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania.

Mr. LAZARO with Mr. MCFADDEN.

Mr. LEE of Georgia with Mr. MERRITT.

Mr. LEVER with Mr. NICHOLS of Michigan.

Mr. RAGSDALE with Miss RANKIN.

Mr. SISSON with Mr. HAMILTON of New York.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio with Mr. HEINTZ.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. KITCHIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1146).

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report upon the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, H. R. 14078, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents a conference report and asks for its immediate consideration.

Mr. WALSH. Has it been printed?

The SPEAKER. The printing rule does not apply to the last six days of the session.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I ask that the statement of the House conferees be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I have a conference report, which I think can be disposed of in a very few minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have no objection to yielding to the gentleman from Massachusetts, although I do not want to lose my rights. I think this report will take only a few minutes.

Mr. PHELAN. I am perfectly willing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the House conferees.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14078) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 24, 25, 30, 36, 53, 60, 63, 64, 69, 70, 71, 94, and 95.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 28, 29, 32, 33, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 51, 52, 54, 55, 56, 57, 59, 65, 67, 68, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 91, 92, 93, 97, 100, and 101; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 2 of the bill, in line 9, strike out "$7,540" and insert in lieu thereof "$7,700"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 14: That the House recede from its disagreement of the Senate numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"Clerical assistance to Senators: For clerical assistance to Senators who are not chairmen of the committees specifically provided for herein: Seventy-nine clerks at $2,500 each; 79 assistant clerks at $1,600 each; 79 assistant clerks at $1,500 each; $442,400: Provided, That such clerks and assistant clerks shall be ex officio clerks and assistant clerks of any committee of which their Senator is chairman.

"Ninety-four additional clerks at $1,200 each, one for each Senator having no more than one clerk and two assistant clerks for himself or for the committee of which he is chairman, $112,800; in all, $555,200."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,400"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 27: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 27, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "15"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$564,840"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 34 and 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 34 and 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter stricken out by said amendments, and on page 33 of the bill omit all after the words "per annum," in line 9, down to and including line 16; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 36 of the bill, in line 24, strike out "$215,720" and insert in lieu thereof "$217,820"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 50: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 50, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That of this amount not to exceed $184,160 shall be available for the expenses authorized to be incurred by the Secretary of Labor upon request of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in accordance with the act 'to provide revenue, and for other purposes,' approved February 24, 1919: Provided further, That no salary shall be paid out of the said sum of $184,160 at a rate exceeding $3,000 per annum."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 58: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 58, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$7,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 61: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,059,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 62: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "forty-nine" and insert in lieu thereof "thirty-five"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 66: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 66, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 96 of the bill, in line 2, strike out "$672,790" and insert in lieu thereof "$672,470"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 90: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 90, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out line 51 of the matter inserted by said amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following: "January 7, 1919: Provided, That payment to any employee for leave of absence not earned in proportion to the term of employment shall be deducted from the refund authorized in this section and the provision made in this act for the transportation of employees shall not be supplemented in any manner by the various services in which they are employed"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 96: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 96, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 6 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "compensation," insert the word "only"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 98: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 98, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the matter inserted by said amendment all of lines 1 to 17, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 9. That a joint commission is created to be known as the 'Joint commission on reclassification of salaries,' which shall consist of three Senators, who are now Members of the Congress, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Representatives, who are now Members of the Congress, to be appointed by the Speaker. Said commission shall submit its report and recommendations as early as possible, and in any event by the second Monday in January, 1920, and the members of such commission shall receive a compensation at the rate of $625 per month, unless they are receiving other compensation from the Government. Vacancies occurring in the membership of the commission shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 99: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 99, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out of the matter inserted by said amendment all after the word "of," in line 4, down to and including the word "whom," in line 15, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "two Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate and two Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker, who"; and the Senate agree to the same.

JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
JOHN M. EVANS,
WILLIAM H. STAFFORD,
Managers on the part of the House.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
O. W. UNDERWOOD,
REED SMOOT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14078) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of said amendments, namely:

On Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22, relating to the Senate: Appropriates for officers, employees, and for expenses of the Senate in the manner proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 23, 24, and 25, relating to the Library of Congress: Appropriates $45,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $30,000 as proposed by the House, for the Legislative Reference Bureau; strikes out the authority proposed by the Senate for the employment of one person in excess of $3,000 per annum; and strikes out the appropriation of $500 proposed by the Senate for temporary employees under the Superintendent of Library Buildings and Grounds.

On No. 26: Appropriates $2,400 for the salary of the superintendent of the Botanic Garden, instead of $2,250, as proposed by the House, and $3,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 27: Provides that not more than 15 persons shall be employed in the Bureau of Efficiency at rates of pay in excess of $3,000, instead of 9 persons, as proposed by the House, and 18 persons, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 28: Inserts the paragraph proposed by the Senate providing that the civil-service status of soldiers, sailors, and marines shall be the same at the time of their demobilization as it was when they entered the service.

On Nos. 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36, relating to the Department of State: Provides for 10 additional drafting officers at $3,500 each, as proposed by the Senate; strikes out the increase of $500 proposed by the Senate in the pay of the private secretary to the undersecretary; increases the amount for temporary employees from $125,000 to $200,000, as proposed by the Senate; strikes out the paragraph inserted by the House providing for the reinstatement to their former positions of Government employees who entered the military service, the same having been previously enacted upon the second deficiency bill; strikes out the authority, proposed by the Senate, permitting the Diplomatic and Consular emergency fund to be used for personal services in the District of Columbia.

On Nos. 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, and 49, relating to the Treasury Department: Appropriates for the care and rental of the Cox Building, as proposed by the Senate; strikes out the paragraph proposed by the House assigning the Arlington Building for the use of the War Risk Insurance; strikes out the appropriation of $5,000 for expenses of the section of surety bonds when instituting inquiries into the solvency of bonding companies doing business with the Government; increases the compensation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and three deputy commissioners and provides for an assistant to the commissioner and two additional deputy commissioners, in accordance with the revenue act of 1918; provides for five additional watchmen at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, as proposed by the Senate; increases the compensation of the private secretary to the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service from $1,800 to $2,000, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $1,200, as proposed by the Senate, for rent of stables for the Treasury Department.

On Nos. 50 and 51: Provides that not to exceed $184,160 of the sum appropriated for expenses of collecting internal-revenue taxes shall be available for expenses in connection with the investigations undertaken by the Department of Labor upon the request of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the enforcement of the law providing for a tax on child labor, with a limitation that no person shall be employed thereunder at a rate of pay exceeding $3,000 per annum.

On No. 52: Appropriates for the Subtreasuries, as proposed by the Senate, and strikes out the paragraph proposed by the House providing for their discontinuance.

On No. 53: Strikes out the increase of $200 proposed by the Senate in the pay of the assayer in charge at the Carson, Nev., mint.

On Nos. 54, 55, and 56, relating to the office of the Quartermaster General of the War Department: Strikes out the advisory architect at $4,000 per annum and the supervising engineer at $2,750 per annum, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, and 65, relating to the Navy Department: Appropriates $7,500 instead of $10,200, as proposed by the Senate, for temporary employees in the solicitor's office; appropriates $6,000, as proposed by the Senate for temporary employees in the office of the Judge Advocate General; strikes out the appropriation of $2,250, proposed by the Senate, for temporary employees in the Naval Observatory; provides that 35 persons instead of 49 persons, as proposed by the Senate, and 20 persons, as proposed by the House, shall be employed at rates of compensation in excess of $2,000 per annum out of the appropriation for temporary employees; strikes out an expert historian at $4,000 per annum and two assistants at $3,000 each per annum for the collection and classification of the naval records of the war with the central powers of Europe; strikes out the appropriation of $15,000, proposed by the House, for rental of additional quarters for the Navy Department in the District of Columbia.

On No. 66: Readjusts the classification of employees in the General Land Office having rates of pay from $1,200 to $720, with a net reduction of $320.

On Nos. 67 and 68: Increases the compensation of the Chief of the Division of Accounts in the Department of Justice from $2,750 to $3,000, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 69: Strikes out the authority proposed by the Senate for the issuance of certificates by the Bureau of Standards describing the quality of sample goods submitted for tests.

On Nos. 70 and 71: Strikes out the appropriation inserted by the Senate for 9 laws clerks at $3,600 each for the justices of the Supreme Court.

On Nos. 72 to 89, inclusive: Provides for the period from March 1, 1919, to June 30, 1920, for the increased compensation recently authorized in the salaries of judges of circuit courts of appeals, district courts, Court of Appeals and Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, Court of Customs Appeals, and the Court of Claims.

On No. 90: Inserts the section proposed by the Senate extending from February 20 to March 31, 1919, the act authorizing transportation from the District of Columbia to their homes of certain Government employees.

On Nos. 91 and 92: Corrects section numbers in the bill.

On Nos. 93, 94, 95, and 96, relating to increased compensation for certain Government employees: Includes within the provisions of the section the employees of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance at one-half the rate allowed for other employees with the exception of those who receive rates less than $400 per annum, who may receive the additional compensation at the increased rate of 60 per cent per annum.

On No. 97: Corrects a section number in the bill.

On No. 98: Inserts the section proposed by the Senate creating a joint commission on the reclassification of salaries, modified so as to provide that the commission shall consist of persons who are now Members of Congress, and that such members of the commission who are not otherwise compensated by the Government shall be paid at the rate of $625 per month, and provides further that the commission shall report to Congress by the second Monday in January, 1920.

On No. 99: Inserts the section proposed by the Senate for a public buildings commission to control and allot space in the various Government buildings in the District of Columbia, modified so that the commission shall consist of two Members of the Senate, two Members of the House, together with the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, the officer in charge of public buildings and grounds, and the Supervising Architect or the Acting Supervising Architect of the Treasury during any vacancy in said office.

On No. 100: Inserts the section proposed by the Senate giving the Joint Committee on Printing additional authority to control public printing and binding and distribution of Government publications.

On No. 101: Inserts the section proposed by the Senate extending the provisions and limitations respecting the George Washington Memorial to March 4, 1920.

JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
JOHN M. EVANS,
WILLIAM H. STAFFORD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for the immediate consideration of this report for the reason that the Senator who is in charge of it in the Senate suggested this morning that it was exceedingly important that the report be adopted by the House, so that it could be acted upon by the Senate to-day, for the reason that he would not be responsible for its passage unless it got over there to-day, since he did not know what the situation may be in the Senate during the few remaining days of the session.

There were 101 amendments placed on this bill by the Senate. A great number of those amendments relate to increases of salaries of certain officials, carried and provided for in bills which have heretofore passed Congress, and a number relate to increases for Senate employees. For instance, the increase in the salary of the internal-revenue commissioner and certain assistant commissioners, was provided in the revenue bill, which has recently become a law. There were also increases in the salaries of the various United States judges, carried in a bill which recently passed both Houses.

Practically the only legislative provisions are found in the latter part of the bill. There is a provision, which was agreed to in conference, extending the time within which transportation may be furnished to employees of the Government who came here to work during the war and who resign or who cease to have any further connection with the Government in a clerical capacity here in the District of Columbia.

Gentlemen will remember that the House adopted a joint resolution some time ago allowing pay for the transportation of such employees who severed their connection with the Government between November 11 and February 20. It so happens that that resolution was construed by heads of various bureaus not to apply to employees who voluntarily resigned from the service. I understand there were quite a number of employees who, after the signing of the armistice, decided to resign from the service and go back to their homes into private employment. Heads of bureaus construed that resolution as not giving them transportation. This provision is inserted in this bill so as to allow all who either resign or whose services are dispensed with by the Government between November 11 and March 31 to receive their transportation back home.

Another provision relates to the creation of a joint commission to reclassify and readjust salaries here in the District of Columbia. The House will remember that the Committee on Appropriations reported such a provision in this bill, but it was stricken out upon a point of order. The Senate has inserted that provision in the bill, and the conferees have agreed upon it with an amendment.

The Senate passed the provision so as to provide that the Speaker and the Vice President should appoint as members of that commission, which was to consist of three Senators and three Representatives, retiring Members of the Sixty-fifth Congress in the event that any could be found who would agree to serve. The conferees report a provision providing that there shall be a commission of three Senators and three Representatives to be appointed by the presiding officers of the respective bodies, who are now Members of the Congress, leaving it to the Vice President and to the Speaker to determine whether or not they will appoint Members of this Congress, or confine the appointment exclusively to Members of the Sixty-sixth Congress.

Then this bill carries a provision for a public-building commission. That provision was also reported by the House Committee on Appropriations, but went out on a point of order when the bill was under consideration in the House.

The House Committee on Appropriations reported a provision giving the President the authority to allot necessary space for the various activities of the Government here in Washington. The conferees have agreed upon a provision creating a commission consisting of 2 Senators to be appointed by the Vice President, 2 Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House, the Superintendent of the Capitol Buildings and Grounds, the officer in charge of buildings and grounds, and the Acting Supervising Architect of the Treasury, the commission consisting of 7. The Senate proposed a commission consisting of 3 members each of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and the House, 3 members each of the two Committees on Public Grounds, and the 3 officials referred to, making a commission of 15. The conferees felt that a commission as large as that could not effectively function, and therefore recommend a commission of 7, as I have stated.

In addition to that the Senate inserted a provision giving to the joint Committee on Printing the power to adopt and employ measures which in its opinion are necessary to control the amount of public printing and binding and the distribution of certain Government publications. The conferees felt that it was high time that Congress should begin taking charge of the publications that are being made and have some authority and discretion as to the various journals and magazines that are being made and distributed over the country. The House conferees agreed to that Senate amendment. The next Senate amendment I wish to call attention to is 101, which extends one year, or until March 4, 1920, the provision respecting the building of the George Washington Memorial on the Mall. You gentlemen are familiar with that law which gives authority to construct such a building not to exceed the cost of $2,000,000, the same to be raised by the George Washington Memorial Commission. This is not to be built at the expense of the Government and the House conferees agreed to that amendment.

I take it, gentlemen, that this is a fair statement of the main provisions of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I want to ask the gentleman a question with reference to the item that was put in the bill by way of amendment increasing the amount for Members' clerk hire. Was any change made of that in the Senate?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No change was made by the Senate, and it was therefore not in conference.

Mr. WALSH. As at present in the bill, Members elect who are not Members of the present Congress, if there were to be no extra session until after July 1, would not have any clerk hire until after they were sworn in.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That depends upon the construction of the provision. I am inclined to think the gentleman's construction of the provision is correct.

Mr. WALSH. It refers to "Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners."

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think the gentleman is correct in his construction.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask the gentleman's construction under the proviso which requires that it shall not be paid to a Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, if his construction is the same as it was before the bill went to conference?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is.

Mr. WALSH. That, in effect, requires these employees to be carried upon the rolls, and the compensation to be paid directly to them.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is, I think, clearly the proper construction of it. The provision as it appears in this bill is rather ambiguous. It is unfortunate that it could not have been corrected. It provides for clerk hire for each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner of $3,200, providing that no part of said sum shall be paid to the Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner. Now, how the next Clerk of the House of Representatives will construe it, or how the Comptroller of the Treasury will construe it—and I think the Clerk will ask for a construction of the provision by the Comptroller—I do not know. My own opinion is that all that will be required is that the Member shall certify to the Clerk of the House whom he wants the sum paid to and how he desires it paid. He will give the names of the person or persons employed by him in his representative capacity, and the Clerk will so pay it. But that is a matter to be decided by those who are in control of the fund and who are charged with the responsibility of disbursing it.

Mr. WALSH. This provision does not increase the amount available between the signing of the bill and July 1.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; it goes into effect July 1. Mr. Speaker, if there are no further questions, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALEXANDER). The question now is on the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

AMENDING FEDERAL RESERVE ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1129).

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I call up conference report on the bill (S. 5236) amending the Federal reserve act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 5236. An act amending sections 10 and 11 of the Federal reserve act, and section 5172 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman—I have not examined this report—whether there is anything in it which has been added by the conferees to what was inserted by the House.

Mr. PHELAN. No; there has been nothing added that was not either in the bill as it went through the House or in the Senate bill, with one explanation. In the section that passed the House, providing that members of the Federal Reserve Board shall be ineligible for two years after they cease to be members, the committee struck out the words "Assistant Secretary of the Treasury." So that they will come under the same provision. That is not an addition, it is something that has been stricken out from the bill as it was when it was passed through the House.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, before that is done, I do not want, even inadvertently, not to call something to the gentleman's attention. There is one word put in which I think was in neither bill, but the gentleman will see the necessity for it, and I hope he will waive any point he might want to raise in respect to it.

Mr. MANN. I am not going to make the point of order. I have waived the objection.

Mr. PHELAN. We put in the word "note" so as to take care of the bill which the Ways and Means Committee has just passed through the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the statement.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 5236) to amend sections 7, 10, and 11 of the Federal reserve act, and section 5172, Revised Statutes of the United States, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the amendment proposed by the House insert the following:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That that part of the first paragraph of section 7 of the Federal reserve act which reads as follows: 'After the aforesaid dividend claims have been fully met, all the net earnings shall be paid to the United States as a franchise tax, except that one-half of such net earnings shall be paid into a surplus fund until it shall amount to 40 per cent of the paid-in capital stock of such bank,' be amended to read as follows:

"'After the aforesaid dividend claims have been fully met, the net earnings shall be paid to the United States as a franchise tax, except that the whole of such net earnings, including those for the year ending December 31, 1918, shall be paid into a surplus fund until it shall amount to 100 per cent of the subscribed capital stock of such bank, and that thereafter 10 per cent of such net earnings shall be paid into the surplus.'

"SEC. 2. That that part of section 10 of the Federal reserve act which reads as follows: 'The members of said board, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, and the Comptroller of the Currency, shall be ineligible during the time they are in office and for two years thereafter to hold any office, position, or employment in any member bank,' be amended to read as follows:

"The Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency shall be ineligible during the time they are in office and for two years thereafter to hold any office, position, or employment in any member bank. The appointive members of the Federal Reserve Board shall be ineligible during the time they are in office and for two years thereafter to hold any office, position, or employment in any member bank, except that this restriction shall not apply to a member who has served the full term for which he was appointed."

"SEC. 3. That section 11 of the Federal reserve act, as amended by the act of September 7, 1916, be further amended by striking out the whole of subsection (m) and by substituting therefor a subsection to read as follows:

"'(m) Upon the affirmative vote of not less than five of its members, the Federal Reserve Board shall have power to permit Federal reserve banks to discount for any member bank notes, drafts, or bills of exchange bearing the signature or indorsement of any one borrower in excess of the amount permitted by section 9 and section 13 of this act, but in no case to exceed 20 per cent of the member bank's capital and surplus: Provided, however, That all such notes, drafts, or bills of exchange discounted for any member bank in excess of the amount permitted under such sections shall be secured by not less than a like face amount of bonds or notes of the United States issued since April 24, 1917, or certificates of indebtedness of the United States: Provided further, That the provisions of this subsection (m) shall not be operative after December 31, 1920.'

"SEC. 4. That section 5172, Revised Statutes of the United States, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5172. That in order to furnish suitable notes for circulation the Comptroller of the Currency shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, cause plates and dies to be engraved in the best manner to guard against counterfeiting and fraudulent alterations, and shall have printed therefrom and numbered such quantity of circulating notes in blank, or bearing engraved signatures of officers as herein provided, of the denominations of $1, $2, $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, and $1,000, as may be required to supply the associations entitled to receive the same. Such notes shall express upon their face that they are secured by United States bonds deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, by the written or engraved signatures of the Treasurer and Register, and by the imprint of the seal of the Treasury; and shall also express upon their face the promise of the association receiving the same to pay on demand, attested by the written or engraved signatures of the President or Vice President and cashier; and shall bear such devices and such other statements and shall be in such form as the Secretary of the Treasury shall, by regulation, direct."

MICHAEL F. PHELAN,
JOE H. EAGLE,
E. A. HAYES,
Managers on the part of the House.
ROBERT L. OWEN,
GEO. P. MCLEAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The bill as agreed to and reported from the committee of conference differs from the text of S. 5236 as amended and passed by the House in the following respects:

In section 1, page 4, line 18, after the word "earnings," the following words are inserted: "including those for the year ending December 31, 1918."

Section 2, on page 5, lines 5 and 6, the words "the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury" are stricken out.

Section 2, page 5, line 9, the word "appointed" is struck out and the word "appointive" substituted therefor.

Section 3, on page 5, line 23, after the word "notes," the following words are inserted: "drafts or bills of exchange bearing the signature or indorsement."

Section 3, on page 5, line 24, after the word "act," the following words are inserted: "but in no case to exceed 20 per cent of the member bank's capital and surplus."

Section 3, on page 5, line 25, after the word "notes," the following words are inserted: "drafts or bills of exchange."

Section 3, page 6, line 2, after the word "bonds," the following words are inserted: "or notes."

Section 3, page 6, line 4, after the words "United States," the following words are inserted: "Provided further, That the provisions of this subsection (m) shall not be operative after December 31, 1920."

Attention is called to the fact that in making reference by page and line the text of the bill (S. 5236) was used as it was reported to the House on February 3, 1919.

MICHAEL F. PHELAN,
E. A. HAYES,
JOE H. EAGLE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, if no one desires to be heard or to ask any questions, I shall move the previous question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, is the purpose of this bill to enable a bank to establish branch banks?

Mr. PHELAN. There is nothing in this bill relative to that at all. That was stricken out when the bill went through the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have just looked at it hurriedly, and on page 6——

Mr. PHELAN. That section was stricken out in the House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am opposed to permission being granted to a bank to establish branch banks. I know that it is a mooted question, but is one that has been discussed in our State for a long time, and something, I think, that was prohibited at one time by the State legislature, so far as State banks are concerned. It is a debatable question, and if that is in the bill we ought to have some discussion of it.

Mr. PHELAN. It is not in the bill, Mr. Speaker; I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PHELAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Speaker, I renew the request I made this morning for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 15551) to authorize aids to navigation and for other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I suppose this will be followed by a motion to suspend the rules if objection is heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not recognize anyone to suspend the rules to-day.

Mr. MANN. If gentlemen are going to ask unanimous consent to consider bills, I think it is fair that at least the minority leader be notified of the request in order that he may call it to the attention of Members who are interested in the subject. I am not willing to permit any bill that I do not happen to have upon my table to come up without any notice at all by unanimous consent. In a way I can protect myself on suspension of the rules, but I hope that the gentleman will not make his request at this particular time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman forces me to object now I shall object to the end of the session.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I decided to make this request this morning after conference with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], the ranking Republican minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. There is no intention upon my part to overlook the minority leader at all.

Mr. MANN. I understand that.

Mr. DOREMUS. And I assumed, of course, that Mr. ESCH would consult him. If he did not, it was undoubtedly an inadvertence on his part. I withdraw the request for the present.

CHARGES AGAINST CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS BY E. L. RICE.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move to discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from further consideration of H. Res. 541, now privileged, which I send to the desk and ask to have read, and that the same be passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 541.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the House with a copy of the report of the Inspector General of the Army, made on or about the 1st day of October, 1918, as the result of an investigation of charges of malfeasance against certain Army officers brought by E. L. Rice, which investigation was ordered to be made by the President on or about August 15, 1918, together with copies of all orders relating thereto, and copies of all testimony, correspondence, and documents in connection therewith.

The SPEAKER. Has this been referred to a committee?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. When?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think on the last day of January, or approximately at that date.

The SPEAKER. The question is on discharging the Committee on Military Affairs from further consideration of the resolution and passing the same.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, may I have the resolution again reported?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the resolution.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I do not seem to be able to learn anything about this from any member of the Committee on Military Affairs. Just what is it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is a very simple matter. The resolution covers the subject matter, and I do not care to go into any of the charges which are made. These papers which are asked for are all the result of an investigation made by an inspector or inspectors of the Army.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What is the purpose of having them sent here?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. To see the papers.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What is the object to be accomplished?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If inspectors of the United States Army make charges against any two or three officers of the Army in connection with the matter mentioned in this resolution, and I can not otherwise find out about it, I think that Congress has the right to ask to see the papers.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What are we going to accomplish by it; what are we going to do with them when we get them?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is not this a case where an officer of the Army was sent by his superiors, after making charges, to California or some other remote point; and is it not a fact that after all that was done charges were made and brought up to the Secretary of War and the public denied all information in respect to it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think there is something to that. If the gentleman will permit—and the gentleman from Tennessee also—I do not care to make a public statement that might be misunderstood. I make neither charges nor innuendo. If these papers come down, the Committee on Military Affairs can do what I think it wants to do—take a look at them. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, now let me say this: I do not wish to interpose an objection to obtaining any information that will be useful in any way to the House in the performance of its duties, and if this is to involve legislation in any way——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think it will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then, all right. The gentleman has the right to ask for it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. My impression is, if the gentleman will permit, that if these papers had come down in time it would have affected the pending Army appropriation bill; may do it yet, as that bill has not yet passed. I do not care to make a charge or a statement on the floor at this time, and I will not do it. The resolution speaks for itself.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I am not at all satisfied with the statement the gentleman makes, with all possible respect to him——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Of course, I can make quite a full statement; but is it necessary?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is a question of discharging the committee; has that been disposed of?

The SPEAKER. The question is not on the resolution, it is on the motion to discharge the committee. The question is on discharging the committee.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee) there were—ayes 58, noes 55.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. If the gentleman wants tellers, if he wants to vote on it, let us have it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am willing to let it go with the teller vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 167, nays 152, answered "present" 1, not voting 108, as follows:

YEAS—167.

Anderson	French	Lea, Cal.	Rowe
Anthony	Fuller, Ill.	Lehlbach	Rowland
Austin	Fuller, Mass.	Little	Sanders, Ind.
Bacharach	Garland	London	Sanders, N. Y.
Baer	Gillett	Longworth	Sanford
Birch	Glynn	Lufkin	Schall
Bland, Ind.	Good	Lundeen	Scott, Iowa
Bowers	Gould	McArthur	Scott, Mich.
Britten	Graham, Ill.	McCormick	Siegel
Browne	Green, Iowa	McCulloch	Sinnott
Browning	Greene, Mass.	McFadden	Slemp
Burroughs	Greene, Vt.	McKenzie	Sloan
Cannon	Griest	McKinley	Smith, Idaho
Chandler, Okla.	Hadley	McLaughlin, Mich.	Smith, Mich.
Clark, Pa.	Hamilton, Mich.	McLaughlin, Pa.	Snell
Classon	Haskell	Madden	Stafford
Cooper, Ohio	Haugen	Magee	Steenerson
Cooper, W. Va.	Hawley	Mann	Strong
Copley	Hayes	Mapes	Sweet
Cramton	Hersey	Miller, Wash.	Switzer
Currie, Mich.	Hicks	Mondell	Temple
Curry, Cal.	Hollingsworth	Moore, Pa.	Tilson
Dale	Hull, Iowa	Moores, Ind.	Timberlake
Dallinger	Husted	Morgan	Tinkham
Darrow	Ireland	Morin	Towner
Denison	James	Nelson, A. P.	Treadway
Dill	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nichols, Mich.	Vare
Dillon	Johnson, Wash.	Paige	Vestal
Drukker	Juul	Parker, N. J.	Volstead
Dyer	Kearns	Parker, N. Y.	Waldow
Edmonds	Kelley, Mich.	Peters	Walsh
Ellsworth	Kelly, Pa.	Platt	Wason
Elston	Kennedy, R. I.	Porter	Watson, Pa.
Esch	Kiess, Pa.	Pratt	Wheeler
Essen	King	Raker	White, Me.
Fairchild, B. L.	Kinkaid	Ramsey	Williams
Fairfield	Knutson	Ramseyer	Winslow
Farr	Kraus	Randall	Woods, Iowa
Fess	Kreider	Rankin	Woodyard
Fordney	LaGuardia	Reed	Young, N. Dak.
Foss	Lampert	Rogers	Zihlman
Frear	Langley	Rose

NAYS—152.

Alexander	Denton	Houston	Rainey, H. T.
Almon	Dewalt	Howard	Rainey, J. W.
Ashbrook	Dickinson	Huddleston	Rayburn
Aswell	Dixon.	Humphreys	Riordan
Ayres	Dominick	Igoe	Robinson
Bankhead	Donovan	Jones	Romjue
Barnhart	Doolittle	Kettner	Rouse
Beakes	Doughton	Kincheloe	Rubey
Benson	Drane	Larsen	Sanders, La.
Beshlin	Dupré	Lazaro	Saunders, Va.
Black	Eagan	Lee, Ga.	Sherwood
Blackmon	Evans	Lesher	Shouse
Bland, Va.	Ferris	Lever	Sims
Blanton	Fisher	Littlepage	Slayden
Brand	Flood	Lobeck	Smith, T. F.
Brodbeck	Foster	Lonergan	Snook
Burnett	Gallagher	Lunn	Steagall
Byrnes, S. C.	Gallivan	McClintic	Stedman
Byrns, Tenn.	Gandy	McKeown	Stephens, Miss.
Caldwell	Gard	McLemore	Sterling
Campbell, Pa.	Garner	Maher	Thomas
Candler, Miss.	Garrett, Tenn.	Mansfield	Thompson
Cantrill	Garrett, Tex.	Martin	Tillman
Caraway	Godwin, N. C.	Mays	Van Dyke
Carew	Goodwin, Ark.	Montague	Venable
Carlin	Gordon	Moon	Vinson
Carter, Okla.	Gray, Ala.	Nicholls, S. C.	Walker
Clark, Fla.	Griffin	Oldfield	Walton
Claypool	Hamlin	Oliver, N. Y.	Watkins
Coady	Hardy	Olney	Welling
Collier	Harrison, Va.	O'Shaunessy	Welty
Connally, Tex.	Hastings	Overstreet	Whaley
Connelly, Kans.	Hayden	Padgett	White, Ohio
Crisp	Heflin	Phelan	Wilson, La.
Crosser	Helvering	Polk	Wilson, Tex.
Davey	Hilliard	Pou	Wingo
Decker	Holland	Quin	Wright
Dent	Hood	Ragsdale	Young, Tex.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1.

Butler

NOT VOTING—108.

Barkley	Fairchild, G. W.	La Follette	Sells
Bell	Fields	Linthicum	Shackleford
Booher	Flynn	McAndrews	Shallenberger
Brumbaugh	Focht	Mason	Sherley
Buchanan	Francis	Merritt	Sisson
Campbell, Kans.	Freeman	Miller, Minn.	Small
Carter, Mass.	Goodall	Mott	Smith, C. B.
Cary	Graham, Pa.	Mudd	Snyder
Chandler, N. Y.	Gray, N. J.	Neely	Steele
Church	Gregg	Nelson, J. M.	Stephens, Nebr.
Cleary	Hamill	Nolan	Stevenson
Cooper, Wis.	Hamilton, N. Y.	Norton	Stiness
Costello	Harrison, Miss.	Oliver, Ala.	Sullivan
Cox	Heaton	Osborne	Sumners
Crago	Heintz	Overmyer	Swift
Davis	Helm	Park	Tague
Delaney	Hensley	Powers	Taylor, Ark.
Dempsey	Hull, Tenn.	Price	Taylor, Colo.
Dies	Hutchinson	Purnell	Templeton
Dooling	Jacoway	Reavis	Voigt
Doremus	Johnson, Ky.	Roberts	Ward
Dowell	Kahn	Rodenberg	Watson, Va.
Dunn	Keating	Rucker	Weaver
Eagle	Kehoe	Russell	Webb
Elliott	Kennedy, Iowa	Sabath	Wilson, Ill.
Emerson	Key, Ohio	Scully	Wise
Estopinal	Kitchin	Sears	Wood, Ind.

So the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. HULL of Tennessee with Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas.

Mr. KEHOE with Mr. CARTER of Massachusetts.

Mr. BELL with Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin.

Mr. CHURCH with Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. DOREMUS with Mr. DEMPSEY.

Mr. EAGLE with Mr. FREEMAN.

Mr. FIELDS with Mr. GRAY of New Jersey.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi with Mr. HEATON.

Mr. JACOWAY with Mr. HUTCHINSON.

Mr. KEATING with Mr. LA FOLLETTE.

Mr. LINTHICUM with Mr. MILLER of Minnesota.

Mr. NEELY with Mr. MOTT.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama with Mr. NOLAN.

Mr. OVERMYER with Mr. OSBORNE.

Mr. STEPHENS of Nebraska with Mr. STINESS.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado with Mr. PURNELL.

Mr. PRICE with Mr. REAVIS.

Mr. RAKER with Mr. SELLS.

Mr. SMALL with Mr. KAHN.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH with Mr. SNYDER.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia with Mr. WARD.

Mr. WEBB with Mr. WILSON of Illinois.

——— ——— with Mr. WOOD of Indiana.

Mr. STEELE with Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with Mr. STEELE, of Pennsylvania. I do not know exactly how he would vote on this. I assume that he would vote "nay" if he were here. I withdraw my vote of "yea" and answer "present."

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, discussion is now in order, is it not?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has an hour, if he wants it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take a moment or two and then move the previous question. However, I think I will move the previous question now.

Mr. DENT. I hope the gentleman will not move the previous question until I can make a statement. I hope the gentleman will yield to me at least three minutes.,

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, let me ask as to my rights. I do not wish to lose the floor, but am willing to answer inquiries.

The SPEAKER. You have a right to talk for an hour, if you desire to do so.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Then, Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing that this shall be discussed as long as the House pleases. However, I have placed myself under a pledge not to go into the actual charges which it is presumed are stated in the reports and papers which we ask to have sent to the House. Therefore I can not make an entire statement to the House. This, in my opinion, is a necessary investigation——

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. You will not object to anybody on the other side discussing it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I said that. I started first to move the previous question. I am now opening the subject for discussion.

Mr. GORDON. Will you give our side half the time?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will give you all the time.

Mr. GORDON. We do not want all the time. We would like to have time for the chairman to make a statement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I ask on behalf of a resident of the State of Washington to see certain reports and other papers that were made during a military investigation into a certain war matter, which investigation was ordered by the President of the United States. Where are those papers?

Mr. GORDON. They are not in my custody. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. They will be here if we can get them down here before the Congress adjourns.

Mr. GORDON. Did not the chairman of the committee make a statement to the gentleman from Washington in regard to this matter that the gentleman said was entirely satisfactory?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That statement was nearly a month ago.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Washington will observe that the gentlemen over on the other side of the Hall, having but six days longer, can prevent the House getting information which it is entitled to from the executive branches of the Government. But they will not have that power much longer.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I agree with the gentleman. But in my opinion this is not a partisan matter at all.

Mr. GORDON. There is no indication that the House is trying to suppress any information.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT].

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I was not present when this motion was made, because I was engaged in preparing some conference reports.

The facts in regard to this matter are these—and I am sure that the gentleman will subscribe to every statement that I make. The gentleman introduced this resolution and was given a hearing before the Committee on Military Affairs. At that hearing I suggested to the gentleman that the resolution be referred to the Secretary of War, according to custom, and that I would report to him just as early as I could the result of what the Secretary had to say. The Secretary of War reported in a letter directed to me as chairman that he was perfectly willing to communicate all the facts with reference to this proposition to the Committee on Military Affairs in executive session, but that he thought there were some matters connected with it that ought not to be given to the general public. A few days ago the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] spoke to me about the matter, and I informed him of that letter, and told him that as soon as the committee had an opportunity I would be very glad to fix the time and place for the Secretary to appear, and invited the gentleman from Washington to be present with the committee at the hearing. I understood the gentleman from Washington to say that that was satisfactory. Now, the gentleman from Washington knows that in the closing days of this Congress the Committee on Military Affairs and both the chairman of the committee and the ranking member have been busy with the conference reports and with the appropriation bills, and that we have not had an opportunity to make an appointment for the Secretary to appear. I had thought that the gentleman from Washington, before making his motion, would have given me at least the opportunity to fix a time for him to appear before the committee with the Secretary. Now, those are the facts.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a minute to me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In a moment. The statement made by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs is largely correct, except, as I understood it, my agreement was that this investigation was to be made if possible without publicity. I am prepared if necessary to name three military officers at whom I believe this hits, but I do not think it is necessary for the purposes of this request on the part of Congress for me to make any direct charge. I realize that the distinguished chairman and the entire membership of the Committee on Military Affairs have been extremely busy. I have sought in every way I could to look at these papers, and now in the closing days of Congress I have undertaken to take a few minutes of time to ask Congress to pass this resolution which will cause these papers to come down here—they are in one bundle—where they can be looked at. Then we may see if charges against certain military officers stand or not. We will see then if a certain gun was accepted and called in the Army "the Rice gun," and then changed to "the Rice-Webster gun," Mr. Webster being in the Army; first "the Rice gun," and then "the Rice-Webster gun," and then finally "the Webster gun," Mr. Rice's name disappearing, and Mr. Rice himself being called upon to go out to San Francisco on a furlough and enjoy himself.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will yield for a moment.

Mr. BLACKMON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BLACKMON. Does the gentleman propose to take up the time of the Congress to determine the question of whose name a gun bears?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; that is a very small part of it. We do not need to take up the time of Congress and have these roll calls. This could be quickly passed. Congress has some rights. I shall not use the hour.

Mr. CALDWELL. I will say to the gentleman from Washington that Mr. Rice called at my office and talked with me for about 20 minutes, and I formed the opinion that the gentleman was unbalanced. I asked him a dozen times for a statement of one single fact on which he made his charges, and he was unable to give me a single fact. And I will ask the gentleman from Washington now whether——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not think he is unbalanced, but I will say this, that he seems to have had enough bad treatment from certain officers of the Army to unbalance any man.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Would the gentleman object to the insertion of an amendment, "if not incompatible with the public interest"?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Well, I am afraid that that would result in just what has happened. The Secretary has offered to come to an executive session, but he has not come.

Mr. GORDON. He has not been notified to come.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think he has. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, the resolution itself has not been passed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows. It will be voted on shortly. There are so many of these things that the Chair tries to expedite them by promptly sending them over to the Senate.

PRIVILEGED MOTIONS AND UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. Before a roll call is had I desire to make two suggestions to the House. One of them is that if there are any more of these privileged motions, or motions supposed to be privileged, floating around in committees, I wish the committees would relieve themselves of them. I have asked that twice. The man who has a resolution that is privileged had better bring it to the Speaker so that he can have a fair chance to study and pass upon it. In the second place, gentlemen who want to have unanimous consent to get bills passed ought to notify both the Speaker and the minority leader especially, and the majority leader, for that matter, to expedite business. That gives the Chair a fair chance.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, does that apply to bills on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. If there is no way to get them out except by unanimous consent, of course it would apply to them. The House ought to have a fair show.

CHARGES AGAINST CERTAIN ARMY OFFICERS BY E. L. RICE.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 96, noes 84.

So the resolution was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 16104, the sundry civil appropriation bill.

PRINTING HEARINGS ON THE IRISH QUESTION.

Mr. FLOOD rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia rise?

Mr. FLOOD. I want to submit a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Let us know what the request is.

Mr. FLOOD. I want to ask unanimous consent that there be printed 5,000 copies of the hearings on House joint resolution 357, the Gallagher resolution on the Irish question. There has been a great demand for it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report on the Military Academy bill for printing under the rule.

The SPEAKER. You do not have to have it printed in the last six days unless you want to.

Mr. MANN. Let it be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the conference report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Conference report on the bill (H. R. 15462) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule.

VALIDATION OF INFORMAL WAR CONTRACTS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I submit conference report on the war-contract bill.

The SPEAKER. Is this a complete report?

Mr. DENT. This is a complete report on the war-contract bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the conference report, hoping that we may be able to put the matter in proper shape. The so-called conferees have not had possession of the papers, which have not left the possession of the Clerk. The Senate was not notified that the House had agreed to a conference, and the House did not agree to a conference. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Was everything else regular?

Mr. MANN. It seems to me that in the last six days of the session, when conference reports can be acted upon without being printed first, which is highly proper and sometimes desirable, gentlemen ought not to undertake to bring in conference reports when there has been no conference, when they have not had possession of the papers, and when the Senate has not been notified of the action of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is partly right and partly wrong. The gentleman from Alabama did ask that the House insist on its disagreement and that there be a further conference.

Mr. MANN. Neither the RECORD nor the Journal shows that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows that.

Mr. MANN. Then I assume that was not done.

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD and Journal be corrected so as to show the real facts.

Mr. MANN. Those are the real facts.

Mr. DENT. As a matter of fact, I made the motion that the House further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments and ask for a further conference. The RECORD seems not to have disclosed the latter part of the motion, but as a matter of fact that was the motion that was made and carried.

The SPEAKER. The House wrangled over that thing for about two hours.

Mr. MANN. The Speaker forgot to appoint the conferees.

The SPEAKER. No; the Speaker did not forget.

Mr. MANN. The Speaker let other business intervene. The reason was that there were no conferees ordered.

The SPEAKER. Well, the Speaker appointed them anyhow.

Mr. MANN. I know the Speaker did, later in the day, but there were no conferees authorized; and whether there were or not, when the House agrees to a conference, under the parliamentary practice, it must send the papers and a message to the Senate stating the fact. That is the authority for the conferees to act. Three estimable gentlemen walk over there, knowing that they will be the conferees, and meet three other distinguished gentlemen from the Senate, and sit down and sign a conference report, when neither knows that the other has been appointed. There has been no authorization.

The SPEAKER. In order to get this thing straight——

Mr. MANN. Why not straighten it out now.

Mr. DENT. I will ask to straighten it out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois one question: If the gentleman from Alabama did not ask for conferees, what was the two hours' wrangle about, the most complicated one that has come up in a month?

Mr. MANN. The two hours' wrangle was over instructing the conferees and determining what was to be done. But here is the proof of the pudding: There at the desk is the gentleman who keeps the Journal of the House, who still has possession of the papers.

The SPEAKER. No; the gentleman from Illinois is mistaken about that. The papers were sent over about 12 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. To-day?

The SPEAKER. Yes. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I did suggest to a gentleman connected with the House that they must be sent, but there was no authority in the Journal for it, no authority in the RECORD to put it in the Journal, and I doubted whether anybody would assume authority to do it; but certainly if the papers were sent over at 12 o'clock to-day this conference report was agreed upon long before that. I think we ought to be careful about these formalities, especially during the last six days of the session; but if the message has now been sent to the Senate I have no special objection.

Mr. DENT. Of course, the gentleman from Illinois knows that very often before the papers come over the conferees meet informally before they reach any formal agreement. I now renew my request.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to that course.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to make the Journal and the RECORD both conform to the fact that the conferees were asked for and appointed.

Mr. MANN. Of course, I do not think that was the fact, but I have no objection to the Journal showing it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The conference report will be printed under the rule.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 16104) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, with Mr. GARNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC LANDS SERVICE.

Registers and receivers: For salaries and commissions of registers of district land offices and receivers of public moneys at district land offices, at not exceeding $3,000 per annum each, $475,000: Provided, That the President is authorized to consolidate the offices of register and receiver at Juneau, Alaska, and to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register for said office. All the powers, duties, obligations, and penalties imposed by law upon both the register and receiver of said office shall be exercised by and imposed upon the register, whose compensation shall be a salary of $3,000 per annum; and all fees and commissions collected by said register, when earned, shall be paid into the Treasury without abatement or deduction.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. What is the idea of this consolidation of the offices of register and receiver of the public land office at Juneau, Alaska?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They now have two offices there, that of register and that of receiver. The salary of each is $1,500. The office is an important one and they ought to have some one there, but they can not get anyone to take the position of receiver for that salary, and the office of receiver is now vacant. This proposes no increase of compensation. The combined salary of the two offices is $3,000, and by consolidating them they hope to be able to get a man to stick to the job. They can not get a competent man to hold the office in Alaska for $1,500 a year.

Mr. WALSH. They can not find an applicant for one of these offices?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No.

Mr. WALSH. Which is that?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The receiver, and the register will leave unless there is some change. There is no excuse for having two men, because one man can do the work.

Mr. WALSH. Why not make that apply to all these offices?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That question has been discussed for years. For some reason Congress has not taken that action. Probably it can be done, and in the opinion of the gentleman from South Carolina it should be done, but this is a starter in that direction.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Depredations on public timber, protecting public lands, and settlement of claims for swamp land and swamp-land indemnity: For protecting timber on the public lands, and for the more efficient execution of the law and rules relating to the cutting thereof; of protecting public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, and of adjusting claims for swamp lands, and indemnity for swamp lands, including not exceeding $15,000 for clerical services in bringing up and making current the work of the General Land Office, $500,000, including not exceeding $15,000 for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and for the purchase of motorcycles for the use of agents and others employed in the field service, and for operation, maintenance, and exchange of same, and for operation and maintenance of a motor boat: Provided, That the compensation of the chief of field service employed hereunder, including his services in the District of Columbia, shall not exceed $3,500 per annum, and the compensation of all others employed hereunder shall not exceed $2,700 per annum each, except in Alaska, where a compensation not to exceed $3,000 per annum may be allowed: Provided further, That agents and others employed under this appropriation may be allowed per diem in lieu of subsistence, pursuant to section 13 of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 1, 1914, at a rate not exceeding $3.50 each and actual necessary expenses for transportation, including necessary sleeping-car fares, except when agents are employed in Alaska they may be allowed not exceeding $5 per day each in lieu of subsistence.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. I want to direct the gentleman's attention to line 23, page 81. What is the idea of authorizing the purchase of motor boats to navigate the swamps, and also motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, particularly in view of the sentiment of the House expressed the other day?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. There is no authorization for the purchase of motor boats. There is for a motor boat operated in Alaska, and there is an authorization for motor-propelled vehicles. There is an authorization heretofore of $5,000, and it has been increased to $15,000. The reason is that the director of the service presented to the committee facts showing that in July, August, and September the amount spent for automobile hire was $18,000; that the economical thing to do was to purchase rather than to have this amount spent for hire of automobiles which was in excess of the value. It is absolutely essential that some method of transportation for this service be had. For the field service it is the economical thing for them to own their own machines instead of paying hire.

Mr. WALSH. Where was the $18,000 expended?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Throughout the West for surveying public lands owned by the Government.

Mr. WALSH. Where are they going to keep the automobiles they purchased?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I presume they have field parties in camps, and when they go to camp they keep it at the camp in the field. It would be impossible to tell; as the work progresses, they change. It is a field service, and the sole question is whether we should continue to authorize them to hire, because they must have the authorization, as they have had in the past, or allow them to purchase. I think this is a much cheaper way for them to do the business. If we did not authorize this, they would hire horses, and that would be a slower way and more expensive.

Mr. WALSH. They will be slow enough in automobiles. It is not going to facilitate the work very much because they can ride a little faster over a good road with automobiles. They work in timber and swamp lands, and the work will not be facilitated, I imagine, very much. But this sum of $15,000 will probably let them buy two or three automobiles, and the rest of it would be required for maintenance.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman knows that they now have an authorization of $5,000.

Mr. WALSH. Not for purchase.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; it is for maintenance. The director, who is more familiar with the lands over which the vehicles travel than I am, is certain that instead of paying 23 cents a mile the cost would not be over 10 cents a mile.

Mr. WALSH. That is exclusive of the amount for the purchase of the machines, and probably it would be; but, in view of the cost of the machine, it is not going to make much reduction.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. He said—and I am satisfied it is true—that in some cases, in some sections of the public lands, it has been difficult at times even to hire a machine to perform this service.

Mr. WALSH. Can the gentleman tell us whether it has ever occurred to the director to try to get an exchange of some of these machines with the Army that they have been using?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Whether it occurred to him before, the committee suggested it to him, as it did to everyone else urging it; and we have a provision in this bill, as in the legislative bill, that they shall be required to purchase of Government supplies on hand.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the jitney has revolutionized travel the country around. We are much more conservative in our legislation than we are in our practice as individuals. Everybody that can afford an automobile—and most everyone can except a Member of Congress—has an automobile of some sort. If a man has been in Congress very long, unless he comes here as a millionaire, he has to walk. Most everybody else owns a jitney or an automobile of some more expensive character. We have been very slow about adopting the automobile in the public service; altogether too conservative about it, in my opinion.

The particular service under consideration is the field service, as wide as the territory of our public-land States. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will give me his attention——

Mr. WALSH. I am drinking in every word the gentleman says.

Mr. MONDELL. It covers an enormous area—prairie, upland, and timberland—over which there are roads of a certain character that can be navigated by a cheap automobile of a popular pattern. It has developed that the work of this field service can be greatly expedited by the use of automobiles. In this particular service they must send men out to examine land applied for or claimed as homesteads or under other land laws. They require examination in the field. That means traveling about over the country in these various areas. It is a very slow process if you use the ordinary horse-drawn vehicle. It is done with much greater rapidity if automobiles are used, and the cheap automobile is the machine used exclusively. The public-land service has been too slow taking up the automobile. Within a year or two they have been using them to a considerable extent.

Whatever automobiles they secure, if they secure new machines under this appropriation, they will secure from the War Department. The matter was discussed with the commissioner when he was before the committee, and I have a letter from the commissioner since that time telling me of an interview he had with the officers of the War Department, and his expectation with regard to getting a few of the second-hand machines which the War Department now has. Any machines they receive they will secure from that source. I am thoroughly persuaded, perhaps I should say converted, because I had some doubts about it at the beginning, in respect to the great economies that can be effected by putting these men in these field services in automobiles.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I have been informed of the facts in this case sufficiently to convince me that the point of order ought to be withdrawn, and I therefore withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For topographic surveys in various portions of the United States, $289,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina: Page 87, line 21, after the word "States," insert "including lands in national forests."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the reason for that amendment is that heretofore the authority for these surveys has been covered in two separate paragraphs. They are combined in this bill, and in combining them there is some doubt as to whether or not the language as contained in the bill would give them the authority to continue the work heretofore carried on under the authority of another paragraph in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the House as to the amount of the appropriation carried last year in the item that has been left out?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Seventy-four thousand dollars.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the item under consideration we appropriated $142,000, and this year it is proposed to appropriate for the combined service $289,000. What is the reason for the increase of more than $75,000 in this service?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Every year prior to the war—1915, 1916, 1917, 1918, and even back of 1915—the appropriation was $350,000, and for the national forests $75,000, making $425,000 in all. During the war that appropriation was cut down, as the gentleman knows, and while this does not bring it back anywhere near its prewar conditions it is one of the few appropriations which during the war were reduced instead of increased, and while, as I say, this does not do all that should be done, yet it is reverting, in a measure, back to prewar conditions.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the real value of these topographic surveys for which the Government proposes to spend more than a quarter of a million dollars?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do not profess to be as well informed of the value of them as the gentlemen who live possibly in the section of the country the gentleman comes from. The policy of continuing them has been the policy of the Government for years, and whether they be of great value or not, I am satisfied that the gentleman at this time does not want to advocate a discontinuance of them, and I know that during the war the War Department thought they were of such military value that out of the appropriations provided for the War Department they spent seven or eight hundred thousand dollars, and now the intention of the department is to return to its work in the public lands of the West. They have been diverted for the last year and a half, working at the request of the War Department.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, my attention in times past has been called to surveys which have been made by officials connected with the Geological Survey in the preparation of topographic maps, and while they are of some local advantage in the location of roads and give an idea of the topography of the country, I question whether the work is of any value to the country generally.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. One of the great values of this topographic and geological survey is in the production of oil and minerals. They furnish maps and plats and bulletins in connection therewith for wildcat territory, as it is usually known, and at present the geological division is getting out a large number of maps and plats of the Central West and furnishing them to the public free.

Mr. STAFFORD. I recognize that this work has its value in certain locations and among others are those referred to by the gentleman from Oklahoma, but I had in mind the use of this fund in the territory tributary to my home district. There we have had surveys where there are no minerals of any kind, just merely a survey of the topography, giving the elevations, furnishing a convenient summer vacation for some of the employees in times past. If it was limited to the country where there are real mineral resources, as in the country from which the gentleman from Oklahoma hails, I would have no objection, but I am pointing out the extravagant uses to which it is put in other portions of the country where it has no direct value so far as geology is concerned.

Mr. PLATT. Is it not a fact that these maps are sold and that there is a considerable return from them? They used to be purchased by the hundreds up in my neighborhood.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes; they are sold, and yet the returns from the sale of them do not in any way equal the appropriation carried in these annual appropriation bills.

Mr. PLATT. Probably for some neighborhoods the returns would be very good.

Mr. STAFFORD. As to the national forests, I know that they are valuable for forests, but for the country generally they have not the value, so far as I have been able to discover.

Mr. TILSON. Does not the gentleman think there ought to be a thorough mapping, including topographical details, of our entire country, so that we might have an opportunity to know more about our own country?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is not necessary for us to know the elevation of every square rod of territory throughout the United States. That is going to the extreme, that is carrying this topographical survey to a ridiculous extreme.

Mr. TILSON. A 20-foot contour topographical map is the largest scale map that is made by the Geological Survey, and then down to 100-foot contours; but even the 100-foot contour map is of great assistance. Anybody who understands the reading of maps can get a great deal of information about the country by looking at these maps. Anyone with a good topographical map, knowing and understanding how to use it, can readily learn a great many interesting and useful facts by simply looking at the map giving the topographical details, because to him the topographical details and contour lines tell the story.

Mr. STAFFORD. I agree with the gentleman, but I do not think we should go into wholesale topographic survey of the country, especially where there are no mineral deposits. Let the work be confined to where there are mineral deposits and our national forests and monuments——

Mr. PLATT. The mineral part of the survey is an entirely different thing from the topographic.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. Well, in the mineral and topographic survey it is used——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, it sometimes becomes necessary, even when one is anxious to expedite the passage of a bill, to dissipate some misinformation that filters in on the House in connection with the discussion. There is no more important work being carried on by the Government than the work of the Geological Survey and no part of their work is more important than the topographic maps of the United States. The topographical maps, I will say for the information of the gentlemen who do not know what they are, as evidenced by some statements which have been made, are maps that lay down contours——

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will yield——

Mr. MONDELL. I have not mentioned anyone.

Mr. STAFFORD. It comes pretty near a close application, and I wish to say to the gentleman that I have examined these maps quite frequently and think I understand their details, so far as the territory in the particular neighborhood of my district is concerned.

Mr. MONDELL. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin is eminently right in this. The Geological Survey does some work in cooperation with communities on the 50–50 basis. I think that kind of work is often questionable, because it is often so very detailed that it is hardly the sort of work that is contemplated under this appropriation. It comes down to the fine detail necessary for engineering work, and that is not what is contemplated by this appropriation. I think it is quite right that the gentleman should call attention there. I think the Geological Survey is doing very little of that kind of work, and I think, in the main, they are adhering to the geological maps and the standard basis, and that is what they should do. The contour intervals are quite close in the prairie sections of the West and, of course, they are generally wider in the mountainous sections and in the mining sections. As they have gone so far in the work, it is important they should have finished the maps showing the topography practically of all the country. At the beginning of the war this topographic work was all transferred to the coasts, particularly to the South Atlantic coast, where our Army operations were; all of the $142,000 appropriation for the current year was used down there in addition to several hundred thousand dollars appropriated by the Army bill. We are now hoping to get back to the ordinary field of topographic mapping. After the committee had determined as to the amount that they thought the Geological Survey should have for topographic mapping it came to our attention that the military bill carried an item of $200,000 for topographic work. The military bill should not carry items of that kind, in my opinion. It should not be attempting to build up in the Army and elsewhere surveys of this kind, and in view of that appropriation of $200,000 in the military bill, the committee reduced this item $100,000 below what it had expected to recommend for that service.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. And if that item should go out of the military bill or be reduced, then this item ought to be increased. I think it is a great mistake to build up this kind of service in the Army. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TILSON. As I recall, in the military bill the purpose of that appropriation is for putting on the geological survey map additional details of a military character not carried in the ordinary topographical map and which would be very important in case of military operations conducted in that locality.

Mr. MONDELL. The trouble is that the appropriation that the committee gave them is not only used for that purpose but it is used for the ordinary basic work of topographic mapping. It is true that wherever the surveys are made in areas that are likely to be important for military purposes those military data are now placed on the map by the survey.

Mr. TILSON. Because it can be done better in cooperation in that way.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope my friend from Wisconsin, who is always useful and helpful and whose services here are so valuable, will realize that I was facetious in my remarks in regard to his acquaintance with topographical surveys. He has touched on the one criticism that may properly be made of this service, and that is that at times we have in cooperation with communities entered upon detail work which should be left to the local engineers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

For chemical and physical researches relating to the geology of the United States, including researches with a view of determining geological conditions favorable to the presence of deposits of potash salts, $40,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, just for the purpose of inquiring, if I may, what if any progress is being made by the Geological Survey in finding potash salts.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The report of the director was that they had continued their investigations in Nebraska and California and Texas, where they were drilling for oil, having a representative of the department along wherever individuals were drilling, in order to analyze the brines, and they were following up their investigation of the cement industry. They made a statement that the amount produced in this country during the past year amounted to about 25 per cent of our prewar consumption.

Mr. MANN. That was not all on account of the Geological Survey?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No.

Mr. MANN. Is this money all expended purely for the purpose of search in some way, or is it expended in working——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In research work, and possibly in some cases in actual drilling. They are making an investigation in New Jersey of certain greensands which have a high potash content.

Mr. MANN. That is experimental work?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I mean investigation work?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Research and investigation work.

Mr. MANN. How much of it is spent, if any, in physical researches concerning potash to be extracted from cement?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They do not spend anything under this item for that.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, this is a rather important matter, though I will take up the time of the committee but a moment. The committee recommended this appropriation because it is important that we shall develop potash salts in the country. We have not been very successful in the past. The appropriation of the past year has been spent in analyzing brines that have been sent in from all over the country. It has been used in doing a certain amount of trenching in certain localities in order to develop the percentage of potash salts in certain areas. Some of it has been spent in encouraging those who are prospecting here and there for potash in various parts of the country. I can not say that the money we have spent has brought very large results of a practical sort, but it is so tremendously important that we should develop potash in considerable quantities that the committee felt the work ought to be carried on. At one time there was some drilling done under this appropriation. That is no longer being carried on; but the work of sampling brine, of encouraging prospecting, of analyzing deposits, the general looking up of likely locations, is being carried on and will be continued to be carried on under this appropriation. We have been getting a good deal of potash in western Nebraska the past year. Whether or not we shall be able to continue to develop those potash deposits is a question. It has been possible to produce potash there in considerable quantities during the high prices of the war, but it is some question as a peace activity. There are in western Wyoming large lucite deposits, and capital is now interesting itself, and a large amount of money is being spent there with a view of producing potash from volcanic lucite. That is a very hopeful source of development. There are some possible sources of potash in Utah. There is the seaweed production, which is still a somewhat hopeful field. The committee felt we were justified in continuing these general investigations in the hope that eventually we shall establish a considerable potash industry in the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuation of the investigation of the mineral resources of Alaska, $75,000, to be available immediately.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment to this last item, in line 9, by striking out "$75,000" and making it "$100,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alaska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WICKERSHAM: Page 84, line 8, strike out "$75,000" and insert "$100,000."

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, prior to the war this item was carried, I am informed, at $100,000 as a minimum. For the last two years it has been carried at $75,000 only, because the men who were engaged in this class of work in Alaska were engaged in war work. The director of this activity in Alaska is Col. Alfred H. Brooks, who is now on the staff of Gen. Pershing, in France, where he has been for more than a year. Other members of this party engaged in doing geological work in Alaska were enlisted in various war activities, several of them in France and others of them engaged in war activities in Washington and other parts of the United States, having been taken away from the Alaskan work on account of the war. The war is now over, we hope. Col. Brooks will be home within a month, and will be ready to take up his activities in this Alaskan geological work, which have been of the very greatest advantage to the people of Alaska.

This one little bureau with its $100,000 appropriation has, in my judgment, been of more value to the development of Alaska than almost any other Government bureau in connection with that great Territory. It has given us much valuable information, has extended our mining resources, and is of the very greatest advantage to us. And I hope the chairman and the members of the committee will now let us have this increase, so that when Col. Brooks gets home next month he and the other members of this geological work can renew their activities in the Alaskan work and assist us in getting it back to the condition of the days before the war.

Now, this work ought to be done, Mr. Chairman, along the line of the Government railroad. There is a vast field there where the Geological Survey desires to work. It is necessary for the opening up of that country, and $100,000 is the amount which they had prior to the war. And I hope the chairman will now consent to put it back on the basis where it was when the war took these men away, and let them go back to their work with an assurance of enough funds to carry on the work in a proper way.

Of all the bureaus in Alaska, this geological bureau under Dr. Brooks has been, I think, one of the most economical and best. The money given to them by Congress has always been well spent. It has never been wasted. It has secured the very best possible results to the country; and if there is any Government activity in Alaska which deserves the hearty support of this House it is the work of the Alaska geological survey; and I hope the committee will let us have the funds sufficient to carry it on. Take it away from some other bureau if you want to, but let this bureau go ahead with its development work in Alaska.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, of the appropriation of $75,000 for the last year, according to the statement made by Mr. Smith, the Director of the Geological Survey, there was an unexpended balance amounting to $12,454, and of the appropriation of this year of $75,000 there is a balance of $17,034, so that the unencumbered balance altogether now is $54,000. Now, with that unexpended balance of $17,034 and the $75,000 carried in this bill, which is made immediately available, there will be $92,000 in all available for this work. There is no assurance in the statement to the committee that the men who do this work will be able to return. The $92,000 will certainly give them a sufficient amount of money to carry on this work, and if any great occasion arises whereby they need additional funds, I suppose the gentleman from Alaska will not fail to make it known to the committee. I do not think it wise to increase the appropriation.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I am informed by the Geological Survey that Dr. Brooks will be home within a month, ready to take charge of this activity again, and that others who have been taken away from this work and put into war work at other places will also return in a very short time, and that it is necessary to have this additional fund, notwithstanding the fact that there was a fund left over in the last two years. And I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that it is rather remarkable that one of these bureaus should have a fund left over. It speaks well for them. It is some proof, I think, of what I said before, that the money is well expended, and they do not ask for money when they do not need it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It may speak badly for the committee, in showing that the committee has given them more money than they could wisely spend, and therefore they have turned back the amount I have named. The total of $92,000 is made immediately available.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The $75,000 covers the fiscal year, and the balance that the gentleman speaks of only covers the period from now to June 1.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is because they do this work in the spring that we make it immediately available.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alaska.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The unexpended balance of appropriations heretofore made for the enforcement of the act entitled "An act to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, shall be covered into the Treasury immediately upon the approval of this act, with the exception of the sum of $15,000, which may be used for expenses incident to concluding the work under said act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, how much of this unexpended balance was there? How much of the appropriation was there unexpended?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. One hundred and forty-three thousand dollars. And I will say that the reason why the $15,000 is left is that the salaries of the employees from March 1 to March 4 will have to be paid, presuming that this bill is passed and becomes a law. We will have to pay those salaries.

Mr. WALSH. What was the total appropriation?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Three hundred thousand dollars originally.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; originally; but was there not an additional or supplementary appropriation?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Not a bit. The original act carried $300,000 for the fiscal year 1918. There was left $143,000, and we have now left them barely enough money to pay their outstanding obligations and to close up business immediately.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the employment of personal services and all other expenses in connection with the establishment, maintenance, and operation of mining experiment stations, authorized by the act approved March 3, 1915, $150,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, to come in after the figures "$150,000," on line 25.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FOSTER: Page 91, line 25, insert the following:

"For lease of the grounds, including buildings, of the American University in the District of Columbia (known as the American University Experiment Station), as headquarters for experimental work of the Bureau of Mines authorized by the acts of May 16, 1910, and February 25, 1913, and as one of the experiment stations authorized by the act of March 3, 1915; for the removal of the laboratories of the Bureau of Mines in the Interior Department and their installation at the American University Experiment Station; for the purchase of equipment and supplies; for the maintenance and repair of equipment, buildings, and grounds; for maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; and for every other necessary expense incident to the establishment and operation of said experiment station, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses, $200,000, to be immediately available. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized and directed to turn over to the Secretary of the Interior for the use of the Bureau of Mines all of the machinery, equipment, appliances, apparatus, supplies, buildings, and other property of the United States of America at the American University Experiment Station on June 24, 1918. A board consisting of three members, one to be selected by the Secretary of the Treasury, one by the Secretary of the Interior, and one by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, shall confer with the owner of the American University property with a view to purchasing same, and shall report to Congress its recommendations at the beginning of the next regular session thereof."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make it?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will make it unless the gentleman from Illinois withdraws his amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. I will make it if the gentleman does not make it.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not care to talk much about this if the point of order is going to be made.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina reserve the point of order?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I reserve it for a moment.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, of course I realize that this amendment is subject to the point of order, but I hope the gentleman will be willing to withdraw his point of order. This is to establish out here in the American University the home of the Bureau of Mines, where it would be a real experiment station, and where it could do the work much better than it is being done now.

We all know that that was the station during the time of the war for the gas experiments, and the Government has a good deal of property out there now, and I think everyone will realize that the Bureau of Mines did not fail in its work in its gas service for the Government.

No more important service was performed. When the war broke out the Bureau of Mines was ready to take hold of this great work. It had assembled, in a way, all the chemists of the United States, and knew where they were and what they could do, and it early became one of the most important services of the Government. This is simply to establish there an experiment station, where work of this kind and other important experiments may be still carried on.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Is it true that there has been quite a radical change of opinion in regard to gas warfare, and that it is regarded as the most humane instead of the most brutal of all forms of warfare?

Mr. FOSTER. I can not say as to that.

Mr. PLATT. I heard an officer say that men who were gassed, if they recovered, recovered fully; that while some of them had a tendency to pneumonia, they still recovered; whereas if a man was hit with shrapnel he was very likely to lose an arm or a leg.

Mr. FOSTER. I can see how that might be.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I regret to be compelled to make the point of order, but I feel it is my duty to make it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FOSTER. I offer another amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FOSTER: Insert as a new paragraph after line 25, page 91:

"For lease of the grounds, including buildings, of the American University in the District of Columbia (known as the American University Experiment Station) as headquarters for experimental work of the Bureau of Mines authorized by the acts of May 16, 1910, and February 25, 1913, and as one of the experiment stations authorized by the act of March 3, 1915; for the removal of the laboratories of the Bureau of Mines in the Interior Department and their installation at the American University Experiment Station; for the purchase of equipment and supplies; for the maintenance and repair of equipment, buildings, and grounds; for maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; and for every other necessary expense incident to the establishment and operation of said experiment station, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and necessary traveling and subsistence expenses, $25,000."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman reserve it? I do not know whether it is subject to a point of order. That is to be decided by the chairman.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina reserves the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is not going to contend that Washington is one of the principal mining centers of the country, is he?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not said anything about that; although the gentleman probably may not know anything about it, I call his attention to the fact that there is a gold mine close to Washington.

Mr. MONDELL. I called the attention of the director to that when he was urging this very point as the basis of an argument.

Mr. FOSTER. And very near here, over near the line between Pennsylvania and Maryland, is one of the greatest chrome mines in the United States; and all along the mountains from here to Georgia gold has been found.

Mr. MANN. The chrome mine has been taken care of in the bill which we had up here yesterday, has it not?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know what development might show. Nobody knew there were any minerals in the State of Wyoming until somebody went out there and investigated.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I make the point of order that there is no authority in law for this.

Mr. FOSTER. Just a moment. We passed a law in 1915 for the establishment of a certain number of mining experiment stations throughout the United States, and the law provided that there should not be established more than three in any one year. There are three yet to be established, and this is to be made one of the stations under that law.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman be good enough to read the provisions of that act?

Mr. FOSTER. I think the chairman will read it if it is necessary. The act is plain. I think there is no misunderstanding about it. It provided that these stations should be established in important mining centers in the United States. But in the East they have some mining and produce a good deal of valuable ore and minerals, and this would be an important experiment station here that might be made available for some of the constituents of the gentleman from Wyoming.

I have here a letter from the Secretary of War to the Secretary of the Interior in reference to the American University. I would like to incorporate that letter in my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the letter. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT.
February 20, 1919.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: It has been called to my attention that in the appropriation bill for your department now pending in Congress there is a provision for the transfer of the machinery, equipment, appliances, apparatus, supplies, buildings, and other property of the United States of America at the American University Experiment Station.

This transfer meets with my approval; but I wish to call your attention to the fact that the new chemical-laboratory building at that place is unfinished and is exposed to a certain extent to the weather. As the activities of the Army are now terminated at that place, it is suggested that you take the necessary steps to care for this building in your department and have it completed in such a manner as to protect it from the elements.

It has been estimated by the Construction Division of the Army that the building could be inclosed and protected for the sum of $47,000; but it is probable that in case the building is turned over to you that you may desire to complete the building rather than to take these temporary measures.

Cordially, yours,

(Signed) NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

To the honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.

Mr. FOSTER. Congress ought to establish some place of this kind here in Washington where this work can be done. We have made out of the Bureau of Standards a great bureau, and it has done valuable work. We ought to make of the Bureau of Mines a greater bureau for the benefit of the people of the United States and for the Government.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MONDELL. I entirely agree with the gentleman that some time, when we shall have selected the proper place, it will be well to establish by law a central plant or station of the Bureau of Mines, possibly somewhere in the vicinity of Washington. Of course, we must have new legislation to do it. We can not do it under the law we now have.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, I will not be here in the next Congress, and the gentleman will, and I hope he will keep this subject in mind.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, the gentleman may be back by the time we get around to it.

Mr. MANN. Or his grandchildren may be here. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER. I hope the gentleman from Wyoming will keep this matter in mind, and that when it comes up again he will use his best efforts to secure its passage.

Mr. MONDELL. I have a very sympathetic feeling in regard to the matter the gentleman has referred to. I think that sometime it will be well to work out the problem along the line he has suggested. Of course, it is a matter that one of the legislative committees of the House, the Committee on Mines and Mining, over which the gentleman from Illinois has so ably presided, should take up, and it is possible that the gentleman may come back again and be chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining before we provide for this.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I make the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know upon what ground the gentleman makes the point of order.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That it is not authorized by law. I have the law and if the Chair has any doubt about it I will read it. It is that the Secretary is hereby authorized to establish these stations "in the important mining regions of the United States." The gentleman would ask the Chair to rule that the city of Washington is one of the important mining regions of the United States.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman make the point of order on the ground that Washington is not an important mining center?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I make the point of order that this is not authorized by law.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I believe it is in order, but I may be in error. We have authorized the establishments of these stations. They are authorized by law. This Congress has authorized them to take the step that is provided for in the amendment. It is for the maintenance and the saving of public property from going to waste. This property is out there and it belongs to the United States Government. We can save $2,000,000 by the adoption of this amendment, and it ought to be done. It is suggested to me that we do not ask the Chair to decide whether it is a mining center or not. That would be a ridiculous point of order. The parliamentary situation is that it is authorized by law. The law has authorized the establishment of these stations, and if it is plainly within the discretion of the Bureau of Mines when they have established certain public works then it certainly is in order for Congress that made the original authorization to exercise some control.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Under the law, who has the jurisdiction of selecting the mining station?

Mr. WINGO. The Bureau of Mines.

Mr. MANN. Congress, under the law, has not the jurisdiction?

Mr. WINGO. It occurs to me that the logic is this.

Mr. MANN. Congress can establish the station.

Mr. WINGO. It has authorized the establishment of a station and the question of location is an incidental one. The very legislation authorizing the Bureau of Mines to locate these stations was bottomed on the original act.

Mr. MANN. The authority to establish these stations at a particular place is in the Department of the Interior, the Secretary of the Interior, or the Chief of the Bureau of Mines. Such a station has not been established. How can Congress say under that authority, under the original authority—how can it say that the Secretary shall establish one at a particular place?

Mr. WINGO. I do not think that Congress lost all authority.

Mr. MONDELL. I imagine the gentleman from Arkansas is not arguing seriously that the amendment is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. WINGO. I regret exceedingly that I have not impressed upon the gentleman that I am serious. The gentleman has never heard of me being humorous.

Mr. MONDELL. Then the gentleman is very serious, which makes it somewhat more of a joke.

Mr. WINGO. A joke on the amendment or the point of order?

Mr. MONDELL. Congress has provided for the establishment of certain experiment stations in the principal mining centers of the United States and left the discretion of determining where the mining centers are with the Secretary of the Interior. Now, in the first place, whenever the appropriating committee seeks to take from the Secretary his discretion in establishing one of these stations it is a change of law on an appropriation bill. Further than that, if the Chair was called upon to decide whether Washington is one of the principal mining centers of the country the gentleman, who comes from a mining country, would hardly hold that Washington was a great mining center.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 91, after line 25, insert the following:

"The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized and directed to turn over to the Secretary of the Interior for the use of the Bureau of Mines all of the machinery, equipment, appliances, apparatus, supplies, buildings, and other property of the United States of America at the American University Experiment Station on June 24, 1918. A board consisting of three members, one to be selected by the Secretary of the Treasury, one by the Secretary of the Interior, and one by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, shall confer with the owner or owners of the American University property with a view to purchasing same as headquarters for experimental work of the Bureau of Mines authorized by the acts of May 16, 1910, and February 25, 1913, and as one of the experiment stations authorized by the act of March 3, 1915, and shall report to Congress its recommendations at the beginning of the next regular session thereof."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I trust the chairman of the committee can be prevailed upon not to make the point of order. The objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois has been that there has not been sufficient investigation. The amendment I offer does not appropriate, but provides for investigation and report to Congress. The situation is that we have hundreds and thousands of dollars' worth of property out there that may go to waste.

The Secretary of War as late as February 20, less than a week ago, wrote a letter to the Secretary of the Interior agreeing at that time, although before there had been some dispute about it, that this should go back to the Bureau of Mines, and that the Bureau of Mines should take care of that property and should utilize it, which it can do. Of course, at the end of six months after the war it is going to be turned back under the law, but we ought to make some provision now, and I regret that the point of order was made against the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER]. I make this prediction: If it is not turned back and proper appropriation made to take care of it, gentlemen on the other side will be called upon during the next Congress to appropriate $2,000,000 to establish a separate establishment like that for the use of the Army. The Naval Affairs Committee will be called upon to make similar appropriations for a laboratory of the same character for the use of the Navy, and we all know, as sensible men, that you will be compelled to retain an establishment like this out here, separate and apart from the activities of the Army and Navy, and my sole efforts are along the line of economy. I do not want three different establishments. I know that if you have an Army laboratory experiment station it will confine itself entirely to the needs of the Army from a purely war-munitions standpoint, and that the Navy in its laboratory experimental station shall do the same thing in respect to the Navy, and then you will have to maintain a civilian and scientific laboratory experimental station, which will be of great value to the country, separate and apart. I am in favor of having one civilian plant of this kind and letting it do the work for the Army and for the Navy and for the civilian and scientific needs of the country. In other words, not have a duplication of plants. That is one reason why I have been so interested in getting this property transferred back to the Bureau of Mines and the proper appropriation made to put it on its feet and prevent the necessity for these separate appropriations.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from South Carolina to reserve his point of order for just a moment. The amendment is subject to a point of order, and I should not take up the time of the committee to discuss it if it were not for the fact that I think the House should not be misinformed as to the situation. A few moments ago I said to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], who we regret is going out of Congress, that I have considerable sympathy with the idea of building up a central laboratory or experiment station for the Bureau of Mines, but if there is any place in the world that is not suited for that sort of thing it is the American University grounds and buildings. Those buildings were erected in a very beautiful location for educational purposes. They are fine marble, academic buildings, utterly unsuited for the purpose of an experimental station. It would be a wanton waste of public money to buy such buildings and purchase such valuable land for this purpose. Further than that, if there is to be a central experiment station of the Bureau of Mines it should be placed on a railroad. This tract is half or three-quarters of a mile away from a branch line of railroad and several hundred feet above it. It is as poorly located for that sort of a station as a tract could well be, and it is covered with magnificent marble buildings, unappropriate as it is possible to imagine for the purposes contemplated.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman state whether or not these proposed sites for the Army and Navy are on railroads?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman's statement is the first intimation that I have had that the Army and Navy are proposing any establishments anywhere along the lines that will be developed by the Bureau of Mines. What the Bureau of Mines has in contemplation is to establish, among other things, small furnaces with a view to testing the alloys of metals—useful work, no doubt. No one is proposing to do that sort of thing under either the Army or the Navy. It is true there is an appropriation in this, as there has been for years, for certain kinds of experiments with material already delivered under the Army, in order to test the character of that material and to determine, if possible, the cause of the faults in its structure. But that is not what is contemplated by the Bureau of Mines. The Bureau of Mines contemplates somewhere, and it could carry this on at any of its stations anywhere in the interior of the country, tests in furnaces of metals under certain conditions—electric furnaces and things of that sort, particularly the testing of alloys. That is one of the things they have in mind.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Is that the gentleman's conception of the limit of activities of a laboratory experiment station of the character that the Government should have? Is that the gentleman's conception of the class of work that was done under the direction of the Bureau of Mines prior to the time the Army took this station over?

Mr. MONDELL. I know what the Director of the Bureau of Mines said as one of the things that he had in mind, and it is exactly what I have stated.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman does not answer the question.

Mr. MONDELL. There are many laboratory experiments that can be carried on that do not require marble halls, that can be carried on in the laboratory rooms of the Bureau of Mines, and that are being carried on there. When you go beyond purely laboratory work, which can be carried on and which is being carried on in rooms especially fitted for that purpose in the Interior Building now, when you get beyond that sort of thing and want to have a large establishment, that desire can only be predicated upon the expectation of going beyond laboratory work into practical demonstration work, and practical demonstration work means furnaces and equipment to test metals in various ways, and that sort of an institution ought to be upon a railroad, and it ought not to be on the top of the highest hill in the most exclusive residential suburban district in the city of Washington.

Mr. WINGO. Why, the gentleman does not contend that the work that has been done at the American University could safely be done in the Interior Building, does he?

Mr. MONDELL. Not gas work.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is thinking about experiments with furnaces. He has not yet understood what is necessary at an experiment station of this kind and what the activities are intended to be.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I reserved the point of order, and I now make the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. There is no question that it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For all expenditures authorized by the act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stats., p. 388), and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, known as the reclamation law, and all other acts under which expenditures from said funds are authorized, including salaries in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; examination of estimates for appropriations in the field; printing and binding; law books, books of reference, periodicals, engineering and statistical publications, not exceeding $1,500; purchase, maintenance, and operation of horse-drawn or motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; hire of automobiles and motorcycles, at mileage rates not exceeding 7 cents per mile for automobiles and not exceeding 2½ cents per mile for motorcycles; payment of damages caused to the owners of lands or private property of any kind by reason of the operations of the United States, its officers or employees, in the survey, construction, operation, or maintenance of irrigation works, and which may be compromised by agreement between the claimant and the Secretary of the Interior; and payment for official telephone service in the field hereafter incurred in case of official telephones installed in private houses when authorized under regulations established by the Secretary of the Interior:

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, what I rose for was to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing in the RECORD two letters from Secretary of War Baker on a bill that is now on the calendar, and has been for a year or more, with reference to certain changes that ought to be made in the tolls provision of the Panama Canal act. I desire this to go in so that Members of the House may see what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letters are as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 7, 1919.

Hon. T. W. SIMS,
Chairman Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SIMS: I am writing to you in a separate communication of even date regarding the Panama Canal tolls situation. It seems to me that, if possible, some action should be taken on this matter during the present session of Congress.

Sometime ago, in discussing the situation with Judge Adamson, formerly chairman of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I stated that in the event of the passage of the proposed tolls bill (H. R. 1655) I would recommend to the President the issuance of an Executive order amending the Panama Canal measurement rules so as to permit long lumber to be carried on deck without additional cost. I am still willing to do this, and mention the matter so that you can advise the Pacific coast Representatives, if you so desire.

Very truly, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER, Secretary of War.

—

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 7, 1919.

Hon. T. W. SIMS,
Chairman Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SIMS: I understand when Col. Chester Harding, governor of the Panama Canal, was recently in Washington, he saw you personally with reference to urging the House of Representatives to take favorable action upon the bill (H. R. 1655) providing that the Panama Canal rule shall govern in the measurement of vessels for imposing tolls. It is understood that this bill is now second on the calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having been reported by Judge Adamson on May 4, 1917.

During Col. Harding's recent appearance before the House Committee on Appropriations he was requested to give certain data regarding loss on Panama Canal tolls to the United States Government due to the fact that the Panama Canal rules of measurement do not govern, which data may be of some interest to you. The following is taken from the data furnished by the governor and also from his last annual report:

Tolls actually collected for fiscal year 1918	$6,439,083.99
Loss during fiscal year 1918 account of Panama Canal rules of measurement not governing	1,083,111.69
Total loss of tolls on foreign ships since the opening of the Panama Canal	2,652,032.06
Total loss of tolls on American ships since the opening of the Panama Canal	145,228.20
Total loss suffered by United States Government since opening of canal on all ships	2,797,260.26
Percentage of loss of the total of $21,336,526.06 that would have been collected if Panama Canal rules governed	13.11
The loss on American ships is distributed as follows:
American coast port to American coast port	72,563.80
American coast port to Canal port	64,491.20
American possession port to American port	1,126.00
Deck load on all 3 classes	7,047.20

One of the significant things shown in connection with the above statement is the fact that while, since the opening of the Panama Canal, there has been a saving to American vessels of $145,228.20, there has been a loss to the United States on foreign vessels of $2,652,032.06. In other words, foreign ships have been the beneficiaries of 94.8 per cent of the loss to the United States, while American ships have been beneficiaries only to the extent of 5.2 per cent of the loss.

I understand the main opposition to this bill is from the Pacific-coast lumber interests, who desire that the present maximum limitations under the United States rules of measurement shall be continued, because measurement under these rules does not include deck loads, which frequently results in no tolls being paid for lumber carried on deck. You will note, however, that the loss on deck loads—or, stating the matter conversely, the gain to American ships carrying deck loads—was only $7,047.20, which is almost negligible considering the total loss involved. Under the circumstances it would seem that immediate legislation should be enacted to prevent further loss to the United States Government, particularly when it appears that foreign interests are benefiting mostly by this loss in canal revenue.

I am not referring in this communication to the administrative difficulties which the Panama Canal authorties have encountered in collecting tolls on vessels using the Panama Canal due to the fact that the United States rules of measurement enter as a factor, in addition to the Panama Canal rules of measurement, in determining the amount of tolls, as I understand this phase of the subject has been fully covered in previous communications and particularly at the hearings held before your committee on H. R. 1655 on May 1, 1917.

Under the circumstances, I would again urge the enactment of legislation during the present session of Congress to remedy these matters. House bill 1655 fully covers the subject, the purpose of which, in general, is to enable the President to enforce at Panama one set of tonnage rules, viz, the present Panama Canal rules based on the actual earning capacity of a ship, applying under all conditions to all vessels using the canal.

Very truly, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order upon the following language in this paragraph:

Hire of automobiles and motorcycles, at mileage rates not exceeding 7 cents per mile for automobiles and not exceeding 2½ cents per mile for motorcycles.

I would ask if that language would not permit a person in the service who happened to own an automobile or a motorcycle to receive compensation at that rate per mile for its use while he was going back and forth to his work and making use of it?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It might, and I will say further, as the gentleman doubtless has it in mind, it might be subject to abuse, and the answer to it is that the situation as it now exists is also subject to abuse, because when an examiner or attorney is sent on field work to make an investigation which necessitates his being on the trip for three or four weeks, what they are now doing is to hire a man, and the compensation fixed so as to provide reimbursement for his automobile in addition to his services. The abuse is that when he gets back to the office where he is not using that automobile his compensation would still run on, so it really made an expensive system, more expensive than this would be. It is subject to the point of order if the gentleman insists upon it.

Mr. WALSH. Well, it seems to me to be a provision here to permit the service to indulge in an experiment, but the difficulty is that if you permit this experiment to be made and the first year it worked well we are liable to have a flood of provisions and other acts to permit the same thing to be done, and I do not believe the Government ought to establish a precedent that if a man owns an automobile and if he uses it for his own convenience, perhaps in performing some of his duties, that he ought to be entitled to 7 cents a mile for its use.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Oh, no. No one would contend but what that could be abused. As it is now it can be abused, and this will be an improvement over the present system, in my opinion.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the committee placed this provision in the bill realizing that it was an experiment, but believed we ought to try the experiment. There is no doubt but what if a provision of this kind was in the law, and it were intelligently and honestly administered, it would result in a saving.

For instance, you take a ditch rider on an irrigation-ditch project, and if he walks he will walk a certain distance, only going so far as he can from headquarters to enable him to return at the close of the day. If he goes with a motorcycle, either riding the cycle or walking and taking the cycle with him, he will ride or walk over very much more ditch in a day—two or three times as much, probably. You could, possibly, by the use of motorcycles reduce the number of ditch riders. Now, there is danger of abuse, I grant you. It is something that will be necessary to guard very carefully.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman permit? Do you think by allowing the use of motorcycles and automobiles we are going to reduce the number of Government employees?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, I have no manner of doubt but that we will; or else, if it is necessary and proper, we should very greatly extend their activities. Now, another thing. You take the superintendent of one of these projects who has a vast territory, to go over, and in many cases we can scarcely afford to maintain an automobile; but it would be a matter of economy, if the official himself has one, to pay him a little something for the use of it in making long trips rather than to go to the expense of maintaining an automobile where the use is comparatively small.

Mr. WALSH. Well, what is there peculiar about this Reclamation Service that would call for us to adopt that policy with reference to that and not to the Public Land Service?

Mr. MONDELL. As a matter of fact, there are several services where I think it would be very well to try out a policy like this. You will never know how it works unless you try it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the gentleman from Wyoming feel that if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] would withdraw the point of order that it would remedy the matter by moving to amend it "for field service," so that it would limit it?

Mr. MONDELL. We never will develop this sort of thing—we will never know what the most economical way to handle these services is—unless we try out these different plans.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I do not think we ought to permit in this service the establishment of this precedent at this particular time. This would permit every ditch rider or other employee upon all these various projects who had a motorcycle or an automobile to make use of it. So I am going to make the point of order upon that language—lines 16, 17, and 18, down to and including the word "motorcycles."

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SHALLENBERGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had this day approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

H. R. 8625. An act to accept from the Southern Oregon Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Oregon, a reconveyance of the lands granted to the State of Oregon by the act approved March 3, 1869, entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from the navigable waters of Coos Bay to Roseburg, in said State," commonly known as the Coos Bay Wagon Road grant, to provide for the disposition of said lands, and for other purposes;

S. 390. An act to establish the Grand Canyon National Park in the State of Arizona;

S. 4957. An act to establish the Lafayette National Park in the State of Maine;

S. 5038. An act extending the use of the special fund for vocational education provided by section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act, approved June 27, 1918, and for other purposes;

S. J. Res. 195. Joint resolution providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Members of Congress; and

S. J. Res. 214. Joint resolution authorizing and directing the accounting officers of the Treasury to allow credit to the disbursing clerk of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance in certain cases.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Truckee-Carson project, Nevada: For operation and maintenance, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $359,000.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I rise simply to send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read in my time a letter which I have just received from the president of Dartmouth College and which relates to a matter which, I think, is of interest to the Members of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent to have the letter referred to read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DARTMOUTH COLLEGE,
Hanover, N. H., February 24, 1919.

Hon. SHERMAN E. BURROUGHS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BURROUGHS: I wish to call attention briefly to House bill 15625, now before the House of Representatives, calling for the loaning by the War Department of certain machine tools not in use for the purpose of equipping trade and technical schools for the better accomplishing of their work.

I will not attempt to go into detail about this, excepting to say that all my experience, both in educational work and in the industrial field, makes me believe that it is desirable alike from both sides. Moreover, I feel that the War Department would be better off if these tools were lent to schools and universities than it would be either if it stored the tools or if it put them on the market to sell. In case of an emergency this expensive equipment could be recalled and recovered for the department's use on tolerably short notice.

I need not state that the technical institutions of the country would be greatly benefited by such an act. Incidentally I may add that there would be a calamity, the influence of which would be hard to estimate, if the Government were to dump this great lot of machinery onto the market at this time and to upset the law of supply and demand to such extent as practically to shut down many of the machine shops engaged in the making of tool machinery.

My own experience during the last year in Washington intensified the knowledge I had had before that the country was not sufficiently provided with skilled tool makers and machinists. It was one of the most vulnerable points in our industrial program, for it requires years to develop really skilled workmen in these branches.

Finally, I can speak the more cordially in regard to this movement because there is no personal or institutional interest which I have in it, the whole matter being without the range of Dartmouth's work.

I am, yours, very truly,

ERNEST M. HOPKINS.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SISSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4517. An act for the relief of the owner of the steamship Matoa; and

S. 5442. An act for the relief of the owner of the steam lighter Cornelia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 15834) to extend the time for the construction by Kratka Township of a bridge across the Red Lake River in Pennington County, Minn.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14078) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Carlsbad project, New Mexico: For operation and maintenance and incidental operations, $81,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this project for the fiscal year 1919.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the item at the top of page 98, the "Carlsbad project, New Mexico," carries $81,000 for operation and maintenance and incidental operation, and then, besides the $81,000, it includes the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this fiscal year. Last year we apparently appropriated $75,000, not including any unexpended balance, to do the same work and, besides that, to continue the construction of the plant. And I am curious to know whether after these plants are constructed it is going to cost more to maintain them than it does to construct them each year? This plant is apparently maintained and operated for this year on a good deal less than $75,000, because part of that is used to continue the construction. Next year you want $81,000, and, in addition, a part of the $75,000 which they do not need this year. Why is that?

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from South Carolina yield to me?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Most of this item, as the gentleman from Illinois knows, is for operation and maintenance. The operation and maintenance cost is carried in the appropriation and paid back eventually, so that it is simply an item of appropriation which returns to the Treasury.

There was some construction work completing this project in the current year. Of the appropriation for the coming year $30,000 is for the payment of a judgment for lands flooded by the McMillan Reservoir. This project is very largely supplied with water from a large reservoir, and at the time the Government took that reservoir over it had already been filed upon by private parties. The Government took it over, notwithstanding those private rights, contending that the private parties had no particular rights in the premises; but in the course of time suits were undertaken, and they resulted in a judgment against the Government for $30,000. That $30,000 is to be paid out of this $81,000.

Mr. MANN. If I were the auditor or comptroller, I think it would not be paid out of the $81,000, because the payment of judgments which have been secured in the past is in no part for the operation or maintenance of this plant for the fiscal year.

Mr. MONDELL. Possibly not; but we were not asked to change the language.

Mr. MANN. That explains the amount, at least.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I have been out of the Chamber, tied up on a conference committee, and I do not know whether any information was given by the gentleman having this bill in charge when the item on page 65 concerning the Grant Memorial was reached. Was any statement made as to the progress of that work on the Grant Memorial at the foot of the hill? When are we to see the completion of the Grant Memorial?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. There is an estimate this year, and they are asking for an appropriation for the dedication ceremonies in this bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. I believe that was asked for in the last year's bill and carried in the last year's bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am not responsible for the statements of the superintendent. I can only state that it is about completed. I understand it will be finished within the next few weeks, and they are asking for an appropriation for the dedication ceremonies.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have been asking that question for 10 years past, and I doubt whether anybody will be here within the next 10 years who will witness the dedication of that monument. That was one thing where I really had hoped that Congress would wake up and require something to be done to complete this monument. In its continued incomplete state it is a reflection on Congress.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What could Congress do about it? The money was always appropriated.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Entertaining the same desire that the gentleman from Tennessee has for the expedition of that work, we have been told that the sculptor has been ill. We are now told that the work is finished, and I think the gentleman will be glad to know that it is soon to be dedicated.

Mr. AUSTIN. We have had that sick report for years past, and I was wondering whether the sculptor was going to recover or——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Or die?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I think he has recovered.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then there is a prospect that it will be dedicated in the coming year?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is our hope.

Mr. AUSTIN. You will not be responsible for it?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am not anxious to be made responsible even for the statements I make myself, and I do not care to be made responsible for the statements that other men make. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Okanogan project, Washington: For operation and maintenance, continuation of construction, and incidental operations, $325,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I wish to inquire as to the amount of the appropriation under this item in the last bill. I think $154,000 was appropriated.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It was for the purpose of building a storage system. It was necessary to build that storage system. It cost $258,500.

Mr. WALSH. The land has been purchased?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They spent 53 per cent of the appropriation at the end of the year. The land is all open, and the acreage price is fixed.

Mr. WALSH. Is that the whole story?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If there is anything else the gentleman would like to know about, I will try to answer.

Mr. WALSH. Why is it necessary to more then double the appropriation?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Because it is necessary to build that storage system. It has cost $258,500 to do it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The Okanogan project is one of the finished projects of the Reclamation Service, a very fine one and a profitable one, where the people are paying their dues to the Government. But the Okanogan has had a drought in the last few years, which developed the fact that the water supply there was deficient without further storage, whereupon the Reclamation Service entered into a supplemental agreement with the people to furnish money for additional storage to insure them against future loss. This increased appropriation is partly for the purpose of providing them with that storage. The project is a very fine one and is moving along in a splendid way, and the people are meeting their obligations.

Mr. WALSH. Does that mean an extension of the service?

Mr. MONDELL. That means, in this case, the building of a dam, in order to store additional water on the project.

Mr. WALSH. Does that mean continuation of construction? Does that ordinarily mean extending the service?

Mr. MONDELL. That may mean continuation of the construction of a unit or the taking up of a new unit of a project. It means the development of the enterprise.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the investigation being made by the Director of the Reclamation Service of the reclamation by drainage of lands outside existing reclamation projects and of the reclamation and preparation for cultivation of cut-over timberlands in any of the States of the United States, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, purchase, maintenance, repair, hire, and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn vehicles, books of reference and periodicals, and for all other expenses, there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $100,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This, as the gentleman knows, is the same paragraph as was carried in the bill last year, proposing the continuance of that investigation. I do not argue as to the point of order at all.

Mr. MONDELL. I will not admit that the item is subject to a point of order. I do not want it to go by default.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this is continuing an investigation which was carried and provided for in last year's act.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The sundry civil bill.

Mr. WALSH. Well, the mere fact that an investigation was carried in last year's act does not authorize this bill to carry that item to continue it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have not said that it did.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, in some places in New England, in Massachusetts, there are lands which were formerly tilled by the God-fearing and industrious people of that Commonwealth. Finally they wended their way westward, where nature is kinder and where her rewards are greater, and so carried their splendid influence into distant parts of the country, leaving their New England hills untilled, and it has been hoped that now, finding those abandoned farms, we may be able to work out some plan under which they could be restored to fertility and usefulness. There may be areas of that kind in and about the Berkshire Hills. There may be some areas of that sort down toward Cape Cod and elsewhere. We appreciate New England so much that we have desired to at least inquire into the opportunities that might be offered there and elsewhere. They tell us that even up in New York State there are areas that have been deserted, which may be reclaimed and restored to usefulness, where happy, contented settlements of God-fearing, prosperous American freemen may be established for the benefit of our returning soldiers and of the Republic.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has made an almost unanswerable argument upon the point of order; but I would like to state to the gentleman that up in some sections of New England we are praying earnestly and devoutly that we may be spared from the benefits and evils of some of these wild and woolly schemes that are projected upon the western country, which the gentleman so eloquently and ably represents.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, nothing could be wild and woolly that was undertaken under such auspicious conditions.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, is this argument directed to the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I know the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is very impatient to make a point of order on another item, and I fear it is rather cruel to keep him waiting for a discussion of this character. I shall yield to the gentleman from Illinois if he desires to make a point of order upon this project.

Mr. MADDEN. I simply wanted to call the attention of the gentleman from Wyoming and the gentleman from Massachusetts to the fact that all these amenities might well be reserved for the banquet table.

Mr. WALSH. I would be very glad to reserve mine, but I have not heard anything about it. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to direct my argument to the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. I did not make any point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Now that we have alighted upon our feet once more, Mr. Chairman, this item was carried in the bill of last year, for investigations of the drainage of lands outside of existing reclamation projects, and of the reclamation and preparation for cut-over timberlands in any of the States of the United States, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere. Well, the gentleman from Wyoming a few moments ago submitted the argument that the District of Columbia was not a mining district, and I do not think he would seriously contend that Massachusetts is a timber section; but the mere fact that this investigation was carried last year is not a sufficient warrant for carrying an item in this year's bill to continue the investigation if the point of order is made against it. It seems to me that the item in its present form is subject to a point of order, and I make it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the point of order is made, the only argument I make in justification of the paragraph is that under this item an investigation has been made in about two-thirds of the States, and it ought to be completed, so that there will be a complete survey of the States of the Nation. If the gentleman makes the point of order, it leaves the work two-thirds completed, and the argument in its favor is that inasmuch as it was begun it ought to be completed in the few remaining States.

Mr. WALSH. I never heard of a Government investigation two-thirds completed that ever got beyond that stage. I do not think that argument has anything to do with the point of order, however. That goes to the merits of the proposition.

Mr. SUMNERS. If the Government is trying to ascertain these facts for the purpose of utilization, I should like to know if it is not clear that the Government has already found out enough about this matter in the States in which the investigation has been made to test the proposition to see whether or not there is any good in it? What is the use of going over all the States when they have already gone over two-thirds of them? What is the common sense of that? I can not see it to save my life.

Mr. WALSH. I do not admit that there is any common sense in it. Of course, it means a separation from the pay roll of certain gentlemen if the work is discontinued.

Mr. SUMNERS. Let us do it.

Mr. WALSH. In view of the situation in the labor market, I suppose that ought not to be done, in the view of some gentlemen.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to get a little information about this. I was not here when the sundry civil bill passed last year. We are supplying water on a good many so-called reclamation projects and irrigation projects. We have, of course, in this country a very large amount of land from which the timber has been cut. I own a little of it myself down in Florida, on which I pay taxes, and think I know as much about the drainage of that land now as I will if they send a Government expert down there to tell me. The trouble with most of the land which is in that shape is not a matter of drainage. The trouble is that a good deal of it will not produce crops. Now, is it the purpose of the General Government merely to conduct experimental work in order to tell the States how to drain land which has had timber cut off it, or is it the purpose to have the General Government make plans for this work throughout the country? I am asking this for information. Of course the drainage of land that has had timber cut off it is in no wise different from the drainage of the land that never had any timber on it. The problems are the same. We have learned in a good many parts of the country how to drain lands, and know a great deal more about it than the Reclamation Service will ever learn.

May I ask the gentleman from South Carolina what has been the work and what is the work now being carried on under the items in the law similar to this?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Under the item carried in the bill last year the surveys have been made of various drainage and reclamation projects in various sections of the country. The hearings, page 671, will give a detail of these surveys. They do not involve the original survey, but go only to the acreage, the character of the land, and the possibility of being extensively cultivated, and so on.

Answering the gentleman as to whether it is private land, it was a survey made of privately owned land.

Mr. MANN. I did not ask that; I knew the Government did not own land in most of the States where the timber has been cut off.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is to have surveys in order that the Government may determine whether it would enter into any arrangement. It was subject to a point of order, but no point of order was made.

Mr. MANN. Is it the purpose of the item to have the Government survey all the land in the various States which people want to part with and see whether it would pay the Government to buy the land in order to let somebody experiment and starve to death while he was trying to make a living?

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, last year, when this matter first came up, I made a brief statement to the House. It was my idea then—and I am not prepared to say that I may not have been lacking in wisdom—that perhaps it was wise to have the Government ascertain from surveys just what might be possible in the way of reclamation of land, whether the reclamation should be by drainage or irrigation. At that time there was tremendous pressure for the Government to undertake large experimentation on land as a basis of settlement for soldiers and others. I felt that if the Government was going into what might be called a questionable matter, it ought to go into it with knowledge, and that if we could get from the head of the Reclamation Service, a man whom I felt was a man of a good deal of ability and judgment, some information about what was available it might prevent the blunders that we have made in the past. Judging by some of the projects that seem to be floating around for reclamation of land, I may have opened up a Pandora box.

Mr. MANN. After all, what can they learn? Unless they make surveys of individual projects and estimate the engineering cost, or guess at it—and that is all they can do, probably—what information can they give? Of course, we can not drain the Atlantic Ocean; we would have no place to pump the water.

When I was a boy I lived on a piece of land where my father's house was located on one of the high points, probably 3 or 5 feet above the level of the country. I have made a little raft in the spring of the year and poled it all over that country. There were a few small spots here and there where the water did not stand in the spring. You might have asked the Chief of the Reclamation Service if you could drain that. But the farmers of that locality, without going to the trouble of asking the Chief of the Reclamation Service if they could drain it, proceeded to drain it, and it is now worth $500 an acre as farm land.

I lived in the city of Chicago where only a few years ago a whole territory was covered with water, where the weeds grew and the rushes grew higher than your head, and where the level of the water in some cases was lower than the level of Lake Michigan. You might have asked some distinguished engineer whether there was any way of draining that. He would have presented in the course of years a project probably suggesting that it might be drained under certain difficult conditions. But the people who owned the land proceeded to have it drained. It is as dry now as if it were 50 feet above the level of Lake Michigan.

It does not take the Reclamation Service to tell us that we can drain cut-over land any more than it would take an engineer to tell us that we can remove the stumps of trees. We can remove the stumps of trees and we can drain the land. The question is whose duty it is to do this, whether it is the duty of the General Government, that does not own the land, or the duty of the State, which has control of the legislation over the land and will benefit by the taxes if the land is improved, and, second, whether the people can make a living trying to cultivate that land? The Reclamation Service can not answer those questions.

Mr. SHERLEY. There have been a number of bills introduced, a great many last year, one now being pressed involving a hundred million dollars. I am not prepared to favor it or any other bill without a good deal more information than anybody has as to the land, and believing there was considerable movement looking toward the development of waste land, it seemed to the committee as though we might get some real information that would enable us to deal with the matter intelligently instead of being swept off our feet by a propaganda in the way of developing homes.

Mr. MANN. I am quite willing to get all the information that can be obtained. I am not prepared to say that I am opposed to the proposition which the gentleman says he is not prepared to say he will support. I do not know, but I am inclined to think it might be a good thing. I question, though I do not say it, whether any intimation we get from the Chief of the Reclamation Service under this item will have any influence or ought to have upon the question of whether the Government of the United States shall buy lands in the States that people want to get rid of in order to convert them into small farms for the benefit of people who may be located upon them, aided by the Government.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS. I suggest this to the gentleman: Does the gentleman believe that any man who wants to get a home will go out and buy a piece of property upon the advice of any one of these professional surveyors who are going out here surveying under Government salaries?

Mr. MANN. I believe that lots of people who have some money, who want a home, will buy anything on anybody's recommendation. That has been the trouble in the past, and that is the reason so many of them have been swindled.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The survey that has been made has not been with a view to answering the question of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], as, for instance, in the State of Illinois, where there have been some projects which, in the opinion of the Reclamation Service, would lend themselves to such improvement——

Mr. MANN. Where did they ever make one in the State of Illinois?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In the Green River Valley—100,000 acres.

Mr. MANN. I never heard of the Green River before, but I am very sure that the State of Illinois does not require the assistance of the General Government in making any surveys in that State.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. And the Spoon River district and six other projects, it seems from these surveys in the State of Illinois, have been investigated.

Mr. MANN. I should say that that came nearest to waste of money that I have heard of in a good while.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Then there is the Little Wabash in the State of Illinois also.

Mr. MANN. Those are all down in the southern part of the State, where they are making a question of drainage with the Ohio or the Mississippi and with the Wabash Rivers, where people have been seeking to have Congress appropriate money to build levees for a long time, through the river and harbor appropriation bill. Perhaps they will recommend it. Everyone knows how it can be done. The question is whether it is profitable; and if so, who shall pay for it? Of course everybody wants old Uncle Sam to pay for everything that costs money upon the theory that nobody pays the taxes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts withdraw the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I do not.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss this matter for a moment. In discussing the point of order, the merits of the proposition also should be discussed. This is an item for an appropriation for Reclamation Service engineering work. This proposition upon its merits can be best illustrated by what has taken place in the past. If gentlemen of the House will permit me, some years ago we passed a bill which provided for the placing in a special fund of a portion of the moneys received from the sale of public lands in the various States, and those of the West where the arid lands are found were the States to which the law related. The law provided that a certain portion of the proceeds of the sale of public lands should be placed in that special fund for the purpose of irrigation projects, for surveys and the building of dams and ditches, to carry water onto lands to be irrigated, to make them valuable for agricultural purposes. The law provided that no projects should be begun until there was money in the fund to complete that project. That is the language of the law. Money was placed in that fund very rapidly, and soon it was known that there were $20,000,000 in that fund. Mr. Gifford Pinchot was at that time Chief of the Bureau of Forestry, and through the Secretary of the Interior, and, I believe, Chief of the Geological Survey, a corps of engineers, 300 in number, were set to work. The first thing that Congress knew about the matter there had been 32 projects begun, at an estimated cost of $48,000,000, or an average of a million and a half dollars to each project. That fund became exhausted.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman has referred to Gifford Pinchot. I think in justice to Mr. Pinchot it should be stated that he had nothing to do with the Reclamation Service.

Mr. FORDNEY. He had something to do with this, because he and Secretary Ballinger got into a row afterwards and into a lawsuit which created very much notoriety about the country in reference to both of them. I will explain that briefly to the gentleman. The Forestry Department, through the Geological Survey, came to Congress and asked for an appropriation of $20,000,000 to continue those projects. They had run out of money.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Just let me conclude this sentence and then I will. At that moment it was found that some $72,000,000 had been expended on those 32 projects, and Congress was asked for an appropriation of $20,000,000 to finish them, and it was stated that the estimates for the finishing of those 32 projects would require $75,000,000 additional money, or a total of $150,000,000 in round numbers, when the estimates at the time the projects were begun were about $48,000,000. Congress refused to appropriate the $20,000,000, but it authorized the transfer of $10,000,000 of funds from one State fund to another, which had been provided by law could not be done, but the last act provided that within 10 years from that time that money should be returned by the States in which it was used to the States where it belonged. The reclamation of a very large portion of lands reclaimed by those projects cost this Government more than $200 per acre. Settlers, squatters, were permitted to go on the land before water had been carried to the land, and to these squatters was reserved the right of the first selection of a given amount of land, 20, 40, or 80 acres, and so on, by paying to the Government the cost of the reclamation, and a long term of years for those payments was provided for. It was found when Mr. Ballinger took office as Secretary of the Interior that duebills were being issued by the authorities carrying on this work, they having run out of funds, and a very high rate of wages was paid to men and teams with the understanding that those duebills would be accepted by the Government as so much money in the payment for these lands after they were reclaimed and the settler entitled to select a given amount of the land.

But those duebills were made transferable, and people working there, squatters upon the land, receiving those duebills were disposing of them to merchants to get provisions to live upon at 50 cents on the dollar, or thereabouts, it was stated. The point I am making, my friends, is that the Secretary of the Interior called upon the Attorney General, then Attorney General Wickersham, to pass upon the legality of those duebills, as we called them, and the Attorney General declared they were unauthorized by law, absolutely worthless, and ordered further issues of those certificates or duebills to be discontinued; and that started the ball to roll between that department and Secretary Ballinger, which resulted finally in his resignation as Secretary of the Interior. Now, let me get back to this question. It is said that this appropriation is to reclaim cut-over land. My good friends, I am an old-time woodsman, having spent 25 years of my life in the lumber woods.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FORDNEY. Gentlemen, there are but few cut-over lands in the United States that need draining. Timber does not grow on swamp lands generally. Timber grows on high land, except the cypress swamps of the South. There are cut-over lands for sale to-day in every State in this Union where timber grows at a price at from $1 to $5 per acre. I can go into the States of Mississippi and Louisiana to-day, as any man can, and purchase millions of acres of cut-over lands at from $2 to $5 per acre, and they are all lands on which good agricultural crops can be grown. It is true the cut-over lands of those States are not as valuable, not as rich soil, as the bottom lands of the valley of the Mississippi or valleys in the West where lands are reclaimed and irrigated. Those are the most valuable agricultural lands in the United States, but when once reclaimed it is discovered, my friends, that the cost is exceedingly high, and as a rule no particular valley in the West, the Yakima Valley as well as other valleys; and I am thoroughly familiar with the value of lands in the Yakima Valley, one of the richest valleys in the world. Improved land in Yakima Valley to-day is worth from $500 to $1,000 an acre, and you can not buy it for less than $400 or $500 unimproved, and where water has been supplied to these lands, wild lands, entirely wild except the water secured for them, these lands are selling at $400 to $500 an acre and have been for several years. Go to the States of Oregon, Washington, and California, and the cut-over lands, which I think are very valuable for agricultural purposes, sell at from $2 to $5 per acre. When we talk about giving a home to our soldiers, reclaiming cut-over lands and giving them a home, my good friends, they would not take it as a gracious gift.

They will scratch a poor man's elbow all their lives on some of these cut-over lands if you give them a quarter section and they try to make a living there. I will tell you what you can do if you want to do something for the soldier boys that, in my opinion, would be a meritorious and a proper thing for Uncle Sam's Government to do. We have more than 100,000,000 acres of forest reservations in this country. Before those lands were included in the forest reservations they were open to settlement by homestead, and under the timber and stone act, which act does not require settlement but a payment of $4 per acre, and each citizen can locate 160 acres after making affidavit that those lands are more valuable for their timber or for stone than they are for agricultural purposes. Then by paying $4 an acre he can obtain 160 acres of those timberlands. Under the Forestry Department those lands are being disposed of in large quantities, timberlands in forest reservations, and yet the money received for the sale of timber to the lumbermen of the country does not pay the cost of maintaining the bureau that has control over that question. [Applause.] Give them a chance to locate 160 acres of timberland with some value in it for them and you will give them something worth while. Stop this extravagant use of the people's money on wildcat schemes; if not, the people will soon rebel.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], I have no doubt, knows a very great deal about cut-over land. He has cut over a great deal of land in his time as a lumberman, and he probably knows a great deal about cut-over land. I know very little; but before the gentleman discusses the Reclamation Service he ought to brush up a little on his facts. The fact is that in 1902 we passed the reclamation law and dedicated the proceeds from the sale of public lands to the construction of reclamation works for the irrigation of arid lands. That work was placed under the Secretary of the Interior. My distinguished friend, Gifford Pinchot, never had anything to do with it.

The gentleman from Michigan is a little bit mistaken about Mr. Pinchot having had anything to do with the Reclamation Service. Whatever has happened under the service, Mr. Pinchot is neither subject to blame nor entitled to any credit except that he favored the law, I believe.

There were undertaken under that law some 26 projects; not 32, as the gentleman from Michigan says, but some 26. Two of them have been since abandoned. On the Garden City project, which was an experiment, and frankly admitted to be, we sustained a loss of some few thousand dollars. That was a pumping plant. It was necessary to try out the virtues of pumping in that locality. We tried it out and we pocketed a small loss in doing it. The Hondo project proved a failure because the reservoir would not hold water. No one could tell as to that until after a trial was made. We are still carrying on 24 of those 26 projects. Some of them are practically completed. After we had been operating under the law a number of years it became apparent that the proceeds of the public lands were not sufficient to enable the service to expedite the work as rapidly as it should be expedited in order to give opportunities for settlers. I introduced a bill providing—and the Forest Service had nothing to do with it—for a loan of $20,000,000 from the Treasury of the United States to the reclamation fund, and in due time the gentleman from Michigan helped to report that bill and, I think, helped to pass it.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. Is it not true that the law provided that none of these projects should be begun until there was money in the fund to complete it?

Mr. MONDELL. No; I think not.

Mr. FORDNEY. That is the language in the law, and I will bet you dollars to doughnuts.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will read the law carefully——

Mr. FORDNEY. I helped to make it, and that is the law.

Mr. MONDELL. There is no provision in the law that there shall be money enough in the fund to fully complete them. Nobody knows how far you may carry a reclamation project. Take the Shoshone project in my State. When it was undertaken but 35,000 to 40,000 acres of it were irrigated. When it is completed it may irrigate 200,000 acres, as one unit after another is added to the project.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. We got the $20,000,000 loan, and we are now repaying it, a million dollars a year; and this year a million dollars is paid out of the reclamation fund, as there was last, and as there was the year before, and as there will be each year until that $20,000,000 is repaid with interest. So much for that.

Now, it is true that these reclamation projects have not all of them been unquestioned successes. But that was scarcely to be expected. It was a new work. We were starting out on an untried field. No one anticipated complete success in every project that was undertaken without experience in this field of endeavor. But of the 24 projects we are now carrying on, my own opinion is—and an opinion based, I think, on considerable knowledge and information of the subject—most of them, beyond a question, will pay out completely, or nearly so. We will probably take some loss on a few projects. Just how much that loss will be I do not know. But I do not believe that the loss on all the projects will amount to over 3 or 4 per cent of the entire investment. The settlers paid on those projects this year to the Federal Treasury $2,500,000, and, with the exception of a few projects where conditions are not favorable, the settlers are to-day very little in arrears in payments. I think that all of us who have been in favor of reclamation, who have advanced this cause, may feel very well satisfied with the way the work has progressed. We wish it were true that all of the projects had been successful. That was not to be hoped for in a new enterprise in an untried field. But every project that has been undertaken in recent years is coming along splendidly. In the main, the people are reasonably prosperous. They are meeting their obligations. That is not true everywhere, but in the main that is true. And the situation to-day is very hopeful.

Now, about this new enterprise, if I may have just a moment more. It is now proposed to embark upon this enterprise of development not only in the arid regions but generally throughout the country. Every civilized nation on earth has done that sooner or later. Practically every civilized nation on earth is carrying on that kind of work this hour—Australia, Canada, Great Britain, Germany, Spain, and Italy. The work of developing waste places through governmental agencies is going on the world around. Now, I am an individualist. Ordinarily I do not believe in public undertakings in the field generally held and considered to be the proper field for private endeavor and enterprise. But conditions do arise in every country under the sun where it seems that the only possible way of bringing development is through the strength of cooperative enterprise, with large sums of money available at a low rate of interest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask that I may have five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Do you know why we have been able to develop the West; why the frontiers of America have been developed often at a cost of labor and hardship infinitely greater than the ultimate value of the land? Why, because people were living in an atmosphere of pioneer enthusiasm. They were sharing common discomforts in the desire to build homes in a new land. The spirit of the pioneer was in their hearts, and they were all poor and struggling together.

No one was very much worse off than his neighbor, and therefore there was a community of interest, a community of enterprise, a community of effort, under which men endured hardships and carved farms out of woodland and forest and swamps in what amounted to cooperative effort. We have passed beyond that now. The average farmer is fairly well-to-do. It is very difficult to get a man to go back to an abandoned farm, surrounded by prosperous farms, and there do the work that the pioneer did, and that is the work that has to be done. On the abandoned farms of New England, in the swamps of the South, in the cut-over lands of the South and the Northwest, there in the midst of well-to-do and comfortable settlements, some one has to undertake the work of the pioneer. It can not all be done by individual effort. It can be done by taking those tracts, considerable areas of them, enough for a community settlement, getting enough people there to establish the community spirit of cooperation, and building up a community which will be an example to all the surrounding region. The Government can set an example in that class of work. The Government ought to do it now, when by doing it we can help some of the returning soldiers to get farms and homes. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TERRITORY OF ALASKA.

Alaskan Engineering Commission: For carrying out the provisions of the act approved March 12, 1914, entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," including expenses incident to conducting hearings and examining estimates for appropriations in Alaska, to continue available until expended, $4,002,380, of which $1,000,000 shall be available immediately.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have about 10 minutes to talk about the Alaskan Railway, if I may have it.

I was reading over some of the reports the other day in connection with the construction of the Alaskan Railway, and I made some memoranda taken from the report, which indicate that we have built 228 miles of the main line of road and we have purchased 71 miles.

When the line was authorized $35,000,000 was provided for its construction. The estimated cost per mile at the time this authority was granted was $50,000 a mile. The actual cost of constructing the road thus far has been $141,441 per mile.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Is this part that has been constructed one of the easy parts of the road, or one of the most difficult parts?

Mr. MADDEN. It is the easiest part, so far, to be constructed.

Mr. HICKS. Therefore the gentleman can assume that the other part would be more expensive per mile?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

The $35,000,000, except for the $4,000,000 that is contained in this item, has been expended. One hundred and twenty-eight miles of the road are yet to be constructed, leaving the road thus far built absolutely useless.

The road is being constructed under the direction of three commissioners, each drawing a salary of $10,000. Two of these commissioners, I understand, have never taken any part in the work for which they draw this salary, and the one commissioner, whose jurisdiction is up in Alaska, has never, so far as I have been able to learn, been employed in connection with railroad work at any time during his life. The nearest approach that he has to any knowledge of railroad construction is that, I assume, as a citizen of the United States he has occasionally been compelled to travel over a railroad.

The estimates for expenditures as made by the department for 1920—and I quote them—read:

Salaries, $967,295.
Wages, $305,465.

That would indicate that 75 per cent of the amount estimated for is to be paid for men in overhead positions, and 25 per cent for building the road.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I did not get the figures. How much for wages?

Mr. MADDEN. Three hundred and five thousand four hundred and sixty-five dollars.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And how much for salaries?

Mr. MADDEN. Nine hundred and sixty-seven thousand two hundred and ninety-five dollars. That is rather a peculiar condition of affairs.

Twenty-five miles of road that was improperly located has been washed away, simply because the men who located the road paid no attention to where it ought to be located. Inefficiency and extravagance have characterized the entire management from the beginning up to now. Offers by responsible people to contract for the construction of this road at $44,640 per mile were refused by the Secretary of the Interior, and still we are going on and building the road at a cost of more than $141,000 a mile.

I can not understand the reasoning that leads the Interior Department to any such conclusion as they were led to in the adoption of the policy pursued in the construction of this road. The percentage of all the men employed in overhead positions is 53, and the percentage of the men employed in construction work is 47, so that here we have a case of where we are employing 53 per cent of all the men to do clerical work, to direct 47 per cent of the men who are presumed to be constructing.

This is the most outrageous performance that I ever heard about in connection with Government work, but it is only another evidence of the extravagance and inefficiency of those who have had charge of Government affairs under this administration. It is a beautiful illustration of what Government ownership and operation means. We have gone along in the operation of the railroads in continental America. About a year ago we turned these railroads over to the Government of the United States. We gave them $500,000,000 as an operating fund. They have used it all up, and in the operation of the roads they have lost about $200,000,000 besides. They came before Congress a day or two ago and asked for $750,000,000 more, making in all $1,450,000,000, which indicates the loss that we have sustained in Government operation of railroads in continental America in less than a year. In the meantime they have raised the rate all the way from 25 per cent to 1,000 per cent, and still, with all these increased rates, we continue to lose fabulous sums of money every year.

Now, my judgment is that the rottenness of the conditions that exist in the construction of the Alaskan Railroad should be investigated. The Secretary of the Interior is a man whose name stands out as the shining light for ability, integrity, system, knowledge, experience, and patriotism.

But he has not shown any of these qualifications or qualities in his conduct of the affairs of the construction of this Alaska Railway. When we were proposing to authorize the construction of that railway, in 1915 if I recall, I then said that I was quite sure that $50,000 a mile would be but a small percentage of the cost. Everybody insisted that we would reduce the cost per mile below the $50,000 estimate. Instead of that, we have the figures now to show that the cost has been three times as much as the estimate. The railroad is useless as it is to-day. It does not go anywhere. We assumed that we were going to build the road to get into the coal fields. We were going to supply the American Navy with a high-grade coal at a very low price. We have not touched the coal in Alaska yet. We were denouncing the men who owned the lines that had been constructed in Alaska. We were saying that those men ought to be arrested because they were enemies of the public. I then predicted that when we authorized the construction of the road in Alaska the first thing we would do would be to buy the roads of these men whom we denounced. That prediction came true, because we did buy the roads, and we have squandered the money of the American people beyond all reason, and there ought to be a thorough investigation of the facts. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to a defense of the management of the Alaskan Railway; yet I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has been a little severe. I did not vote for the Alaskan Railway. I did not believe it was a proper investment of the public money. I have not, however, been prejudiced against the road on that account. I should have hoped that it could be built within the estimated limit of cost, but I doubted it could be. I never believed that a railroad could be built by anybody in Alaska at the cost estimated, so I have not been surprised that it cost more than the estimate. The road has not been well managed at any time, I am sorry to have to say. Yet the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is not entirely fair on his percentages as between overhead charges or salaries and wages, because I think he has not included in his equation the payments on contracts. So his percentages would be somewhat different if those considerable sums were included.

There were some errors made in location. One piece of road 25 or 26 miles long was very badly located and had to be abandoned at a great cost. We ought never to have bought the Alaska Northern. That little old corkscrew, jimcrack railroad never can be made into a first-class coal-carrying road; and if it is not to be a first-class coal-carrying road it is of little value, because if it is to perform any useful purpose it will be to carry coal from the Matanuska field—assuming that there is any considerable amount of coal in the Matanuska field—to the seaboard. The curves can not be taken out of that road to make it a good standard freight-carrying road. The grades can not be so eliminated as to make it a cheap road to operate. It will always be expensive and it will always be difficult to operate. But after all perhaps that is not so important, in view of the fact that up to the present time we have not demonstrated that there will be any considerable amount of coal to haul. And that brings me to the point which I really had in mind to discuss when I took the floor.

Of the various agonies of hysteria that we have had in this House at one time and another since I became a Member of it, the most agonized and hysterical of them all was the so-called Ballinger-Pinchot controversy, in which it was alleged that somebody was proposing to give to some malefactors of more or less wealth unlimited areas of the most valuable coal known to man, situated amidst the icebergs of the frozen North. Well, in order to prevent that being done the Government repudiated its contract with well-intentioned locators and did things that if an individual were to do them and the grand jury could find him he would be sure to be lodged in the penitentiary for the greater part of his life.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. But as this was done in the name of reform and conservation, of course it went. Who was interested in the claims of men away off yonder, five or six or seven thousand miles from the Capital, particularly when there was a great opportunity to besmirch the names of honorable gentlemen and by so doing get political capital out of it? That is what there was in the Ballinger-Pinchot controversy. Well, we canceled the claims up there and took possession, and for six or seven years we have been trying to develop some coal in the Alaska coal fields. If any of you gentlemen have an appetite for blood-stirring fiction, read the descriptions of the tremendous value of the Alaska coal fields as written in official documents some few years ago. Yet after six or seven years of prospecting, of constant driving of entries and tunnels, they have not been able to develop a coal mine in the Matanuska field that it seems to pay to operate. I regret to have to say that, for I had some faith in the Alaska, and particularly the Matanuska, coal fields. Apparently the field has been so tossed and broken as to make it very questionable as a producing field, although it is possible that by a great expenditure we may eventually reach the vein where it is not as badly broken as near the surface, and under conditions where the economical mining of the coal may be made possible. It costs now about $5 a ton to bring it to the pit mouth, and at that rate it is not going to compete to any very great extent with the coal of the outside world.

The Bering field, which we threw to one side as something not to be considered when we began the construction of the Alaskan Railroad, may be developed into a coal field, because private enterprise has gotten to work there unhampered by the Government except as hampered by lease, and they are actually getting out some coal there, and we may be able to open mines in the Bering field that will actually develop some coal.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the delay in the opening of the Alaska Railroad is responsible for the failure to develop the Matanuska field?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no; because by building from the seaboard at Anchorage to Matanuska a first-class road it has been made possible to get out coal that can be loaded on ships at least seven months in the year. We can carry coal on short trains over the Alaska Northern to Seward, so that there would be no difficulty in getting coal out if the coal was there to get out.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let me ask the gentleman another question on the railroad. Has the committee any information as to the success of the model town of Anchorage?

Mr. MONDELL. No special information, except that there is such a town.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Is there any statement as to whether that has been costly to the railroad or not?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know that the town has been expensive; we have spent some money in wharves there, and I am hopeful that we will be able to load ships at Anchorage a considerable part of the year, although that is still a question.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming has said that coal has not been developed in the Matanuska coal fields because there is no coal there to be developed.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will pardon me, I did not say that nothing had been done. There has been a good deal of money spent trying to get coal out.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The gentleman is as mistaken about that as he is about the other. The difficulty is not the want of coal, but the want of transportation. The railroad which he speaks about, from Anchorage to Matanuska coal field, has only been completed within the last 18 months, and since that time there has been considerable effort to open and develop coal in that field, but not until then.

Not only that, but the general conditions there, brought about by the war, or brought about by conditions of transportation, are such in the Territory of Alaska that it is impossible to open almost any sort of business because of the increased and extortionate rates for transportation to and from and in the Territory. The rates never were so high; coastwise rates and other transportation rates in Alaska were never so high as now. And they have been increased since the war began three or four times, and there is no apparent intention on the part of the rate-controlling bodies to reduce them at all. Until they are reduced it is impossible to open the gold mines, the coal mines, or any other mines except those which, like the copper mines, can have a great price for their product.

The copper mines in Alaska have been able to go on with business, because the copper-mine owners own the ore-carrying transportation. They mine the copper in Alaska, bring it down, smelt it, and put it on the market for less than 5 cents a pound, and are able, because the Government of the United States has fixed the price, to get 26½ cents a pound, thus making about 400 per cent profit on copper.

That is not true of coal. The opposite is true of coal. The chance for development of the coal resources of Alaska has been utterly destroyed in the last three or four years by the increased cost of transportation. So it is unfair for the gentleman from Wyoming to say that coal development in Alaska is in any degree a failure on account of the coal, but only because of abnormal transportation conditions.

Another mistake he makes: The gentleman says that there was no mine opened in Matanuska. In Eska Creek they are producing and shipping coal. A lease has been made to the Chickaloon Coal Co., which has what is thought to be the best area of coal, on which the company spent a large amount of money in doing development work. There is a part of that coal area open and developed, and the mine ought to show some good results.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In regard to the railroad rates, are the rates of the Alaskan railroad subject to the same rule that railroads in the United States are, and did they have the same percentage of increase?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Oh, there has been a large percentage of increase in the Government rates in Alaska. The rates are excessive.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I would like five minutes more.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I dislike to object, but I would like to get on with this bill.

Mr. MANN. This is an important subject, and I want a few minutes myself.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Can not we make some agreement as to time?

Mr. MANN. I do not know how much time we want; I never waste any time.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I know the gentleman does not.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I would like to have 10 minutes more myself.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman from Alaska wants five minutes and the gentleman from Washington five.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman from Alaska ought to have 10 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. All I desire is to make some inquiries and get some information if I can.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman from Alaska would then have 10 minutes.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I would like to have 10 minutes in addition to the five I have already had.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Very well.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I am going to suggest at some time that we instigate a congressional inquiry to see whether this railroad is going to be properly completed or completed at all, and I think the information that we will get in advance will save time later.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am merely endeavoring to see if we can reach some agreement.

Mr. MANN. I suggest the gentleman let it go on for a few minutes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Very well.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alaska may have 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I notice in the bill the following language:

> Including expenses incident to conducting hearings and examining estimates for appropriations in Alaska.

What is that intended to cover?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It was included in the bill last year and carried because the committee was at that time hoping that at some time a congressional committee would be appointed for the purpose of going to Alaska to investigate the expenditures under this Alaska railroad bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would like to state that I remember last year I think the distinguished gentleman from New York, Mr. Fitzgerald, was in the House, and it was hoped at that time that we could induce him and some of his associates to go to Alaska and look into that situation.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. And with the changed situation nothing has ever been done about it, but it was continued for the same reason it was originally intended in the bill.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Will that cover private investigations?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Oh, no. I can satisfy the gentleman on that. No private inspectors can go and conduct hearings and examine estimates for appropriations in Alaska, because no one would have the right to do it.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Can the Secretary of the Interior send investigators there to conduct hearings and examine estimates for appropriations and pay such a commission under that clause?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No one has the right to consider estimates except Members of Congress.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. The reason I asked the chairman the question is that when I was up there this summer there was an investigating committee there doing a lot of work of that kind, headed by a Mr. McCormick, the vice president of the Southern Pacific Railroad.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They could not investigate the estimates that the Congress was to consider.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I do not know what he was doing. I know that he was there under the guise of some public employment and making investigations, and I was just wondering if the chairman had any information about the matter, and knew whether he and those with him were being paid from the appropriations or not. If the chairman will please answer that question——

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr Chairman, if the gentleman is addressing his inquiry to me, I know nothing about it. I assume that if he went on behalf of the Department of the Interior, and they paid him, then they paid him out of funds they had for that purpose, but certainly the provision to which the gentleman from South Carolina and the gentleman from Alaska have referred was put in there to do in connection with Alaska the same thing that was done in connection with Panama, and speaking for myself, I do not know any more important duty that could be performed than by the Committee on Appropriations getting some real information about Alaska by personally going there.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I quite agree with the gentleman as to that, and I hope the committee will take such action.

Mr. SHERLEY. It is exceedingly difficult to get accurate information about it now.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. And if the chairman of the committee or a subcommittee, or the whole committee would go there, it would be a very great help, I think, to Congress, and probably would assist very much in bringing the work on this road to a conclusion.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the going of the Committee on Appropriations to Panama from year to year in connection with the building of that canal saved this country a good many million dollars.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I agree with the gentleman, and hope to see the same investigation of the Alaska Railroad work.

Mr. SHERLEY. And I have not the slightest doubt that the Committee on Appropriations going there, as they would go seriously to examine into estimates and to see the actual situation, would be able to perform a similar service in connection with the Alaskan expenditures.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I did not mention this matter with any view of criticizing the committee, because I think just as the gentleman does, that it would be a very great advantage to the committee and to the country if the committee would go and examine into the situation in Alaska, and I think you would be very greatly interested in what you would find. My inquiry was as to whether or not the language was broad enough to cover the payment of those other gentlemen who were there making investigations.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am quite sure it is not, and it never was so intended.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Are they being paid?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not know. The gentleman probably knows about it himself. Certainly, if he asks the Secretary of the Interior, he can get the information.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Could not the situation be cured by inserting the word "congressional" in there, so that they would be conducting congressional hearings?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I think so. With respect to the Alaska railroad itself, I made a great many of the statements which my friend from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] referred to as glowing statements with respect to Alaska and to this railroad. I felt in a glowing mood when this matter was before Congress at that time. I do not have such a healthy glow now as I had then. I do not know whether it is because of the war or what the reason is, but the $35,000,000 has been expended, substantially, with the exception of the last $4,000,000 asked for in this appropriation, and I want to say to Congress, and say it openly and publicly, that in my judgment there has been such waste in the building of the road that it deserves the careful attention of the Committee on Appropriations and of the Congress itself.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is the gentleman opposed to the present appropriation for continuing it?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I am not. I think the appropriation ought to be made, and I think the committee is to be commended for making it. What I am opposed to is this waste by people who are spending the money in Alaska.

Mr. SHERLEY. The reason for making the inquiry is this: If the gentleman thinks the money has been greatly wasted, of course he would not want more money to be appropriated to be similarly wasted.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; I do not. I simply call the attention of the committee, and I am not going into any specifications. The road is now about two-thirds completed, $31,000,000 spent, and it will take a good many more millions, I regret to say, to finish it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does the gentleman believe the road can be built and put in operation?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. If the road had been let to contract when the bill passed, March, 1914, it would have been completed within about two years for a great deal less money than the appropriation, but it was not done in a businesslike way. It was constructed under three commissioners, one of them, as a gentleman stated, who had no experience whatever in railroad building. He did not know whether a railroad frog jumped forward or sideways; he knew enough to get a ticket and ride on a railroad and pay for it, and that was all he knew about railroads and is all the experience he had in railroad building.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Where do these commissioners spend their time—have they been here in Washington, all of them?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. One commissioner, I think, is here in Washington now, and has been here all winter and will probably be here until May. Another one was appointed governor of Alaska. The third one is in France and has been for a long time, and no doubt he has performed good service for his country. I do not want to make any serious criticism, but I did say so much for this railroad bill to get the first authorization and appropriation to get the road constructed and something done to develop that great Territory that I feel I am entitled to urge fair treatment for it. I do not want the burden of its failure to be laid upon my shoulders, because I have never been consulted about it in any way from the day the first appropriation was made, nor has anyone else who has known very much about Alaska. It has been conducted by a very amiable gentleman by the name of Edes, who is chairman of this commission. If it had been let to contract the road would have been completed long ago. As it is, I understand his estimate is that it will take three years longer and something like $8,000,000 or $10,000,000 more to finish it. In my judgment the Appropriations Committee or some committee of this House ought to give this matter a searching and careful investigation and you will find very much worthy of your attention when you do investigate it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I only desire to say one word in reply to the gentleman from Alaska. I do not know anything safer than to prophesy what would have been if something else had been done than was done, because there can be no proof that it would not have occurred. Now, it is very easy to prophesy that if this had been let to contract it would have been finished in two years. There is no way of proving it would not, though it may be a difficult thing to prove it would, but, judging by some of the experience we have had with contracts recently and the insistence that the terms of them be so liberalized as to prevent a contractor from throwing up his job and going into bankruptcy, I, for one, have some doubts as to the accuracy of the gentleman's prophecy as to something in the past which might have happened but which did not.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I took some part in the House in the consideration of the bill which authorized the construction of this railroad in Alaska, and I favor the proposition. There was very strenuous objection to it, as I recall largely led by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], who was very able in his presentation of the matter. It may be that it is somebody else to whom I am paying this compliment. There was a bitter fight over it in the House. Originally it was asked that Congress authorize the construction of the road without any limit of cost at all. We were then engaged in constructing the Panama Canal, almost finished. The Panama Canal was authorized a good many years ago with a limit of cost and probably has been built within the limit of cost originally made and as afterwards revised when the size of the canal was considerably increased. The work done there in the main has always come within the estimated cost submitted to the Congress. The Government selected for that purpose the brainiest man I think I ever met, a man at least of great ideals and ideas, who knew the minutiæ of everything, and who, it was generally conceded—and I believe it—not only knew the whole general outline of the Panama Canal but knew more about the details of every bureau than the chief of the bureau, though they were not called bureaus.

I do not know anything about gentlemen who have been constructing the Alaska Railroad. I do not recall who they were. I have an indefinite recollection that when the appointments were made I had heard of one of them, maybe more. But when Congress passed the bill we were told with great emphasis that all of the work authorized could be constructed complete for $35,000,000, and that that was an outside estimate. And because it was said to be an outside estimate I aided the members of the Committee on Appropriations in securing an amendment to the bill providing that that should be the limit of cost. And we thought we were allowing a very large amount. We turned over a considerable portion of the unused machinery from the Panama Canal for use in connection with the construction of this road.

We have given them the appropriations as they have asked for them, and I take it from what has been said that the item of $4,002,380 carried in this bill is the balance of the $35,000,000 that was authorized. I have always believed that a Government official in an administrative branch of the Government who was authorized to do a certain thing within a certain limit of cost, and concluded he could not do it within the limit of cost, had no right to spend the money without coming to Congress first for an increase in the authorization. [Applause.]

I do not think it is honest for the Supervising Architect's Office, if Congress authorizes a public building at a limit of cost of $100,000, to adopt plans for a building which they know will cost $150,000, and then when they have spent $80,000 of the money, come to Congress and say, "We must have an increase of $50,000 in the limit of cost." I do not think it would be honest for the Supervising Architect's Office to do that, and I do not understand that is their practice. They refuse every day, almost constantly, to go ahead with the construction of public buildings within limits of cost authorized by Congress, saying that they want an increase, because they can not construct the character and size of buildings which ought to be constructed at the particular place within the limit of cost fixed by Congress. And we very frequently increase the limit of cost.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Now, what is the situation about the Alaska Railroad? Regardless of the limit of cost, in utter defiance of the law, they have not only proceeded in the past when perhaps they could not at first tell what the cost might be, but they are proceeding now, and we propose now to appropriate this sum to balance the $35,000,000 of limit of cost, when they have told us it will take about $9,000,000 more to do the work. Is that correct? Are not the figures about $9,000,000?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; that is the estimate.

Mr. MANN. They have said to us, "You have authorized us to build a road at a cost of $35,000,000. We are going ahead and building it, knowing that we can not do it within the limit of cost." I think before any more money is appropriated for this road, Congress ought to determine whether it will increase the limit of cost and, if so, how much. Of course there has been gross extravagance connected with the building of the road. There usually is, especially when construction is a long ways from home.

The Panama Canal is a shining and conspicuous example of honest, saving, careful, economical work done, which seldom occurs. I do not know who is to blame as to this matter. I do not know whether any individual is to blame or whether there is to be blame attached anywhere in reference to the building of the road. I have no doubt there has been a great deal of money wasted, from what I have read on the subject. But I do know that if Congress upholds its rights and its duties it will say to these people at this time, "Before you spend any more money on this road we want to know what it will cost. If we think it will pay to finish the road at the new limit of cost, we will tell you so."

Nobody is going to suffer in Alaska except the men who have the jobs, if the road is not finished for five years, unless it would be the Delegate from Alaska would lose votes in the next election because he did not secure the appropriation.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] said to the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM], as he says to other Members of the House, "Are you opposed to this appropriation for your own district?" It is pretty difficult for Members to say for their own district. It is not difficult for the gentleman from Kentucky to say, and it is not difficult for me to say, we ought not to appropriate the money until we know what this road is going to cost. [Applause.]

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to secure from the gentleman in charge of the bill a little information concerning the present condition of the Alaskan Railroad. Can the gentleman tell me how many miles have been constructed?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Two hundred and forty-four miles have been constructed.

Mr. NORTON. At what expense per mile for construction?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It would not be fair to state the expenditure, as a certain number of miles have been purchased in addition to those constructed. The total expenditure up to this time, with the road 76 per cent completed, lacks only $4,000,000 of the authorized expenditure of $35,000,000.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I was personally very much in favor of the proposition to construct the Alaskan Railroad, and I hoped, at the time I favored the measure, that the construction of the road would prove wise and that it would demonstrate to the American public that Government ownership of railroads was a feasible thing and a good thing. I have not had the time during the past two months that I would like to have had to make a careful and analytical study of the expenditures that have been made in the construction of the Alaskan Railroad. I have the information, however, from a man who is as well acquainted personally with the conditions of the construction of that railroad as any other living man to the effect that there has been the grossest and most inexcusable mismanagement up to the present time in the construction of the road. I have it on his statement that if the men who were chosen to direct the construction of the road had been chosen with the chief object in view of getting men who would do the most possible to discredit the building of railroads by the Government, no better choice could have been made than was made in their selection.

Recalling my conversation with him, I remember that he stated that the cost of the railroad would exceed $140,000 per mile, and that the part of the road that has been constructed thus far is the least expensive part of the road to be constructed. I do not know this to be a fact, but I am giving it to you as it was given to me.

Now, from the statements of this man, who, as I said, is acquainted with the actual conditions of the work of the construction of the road as well as any living man, it seems to me it behooves the Congress and the committee having this particular project in charge to investigate it very carefully. The public money should not be permitted to be wasted like water. While there has been probably some occasion for paying higher rates of wages during the war period, my information is that there has been little sound judgment used either in the employment of men to construct this road or in the fixing of the rate of wages paid.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. Yes, indeed; to my good friend.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I voted against the proposition in the beginning.

Mr. NORTON. I voted for it; but from what I have been told of it I am inclined to regret that vote now.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would like for gentlemen who talk of "waste" to give some substantial statement here about the "waste." Why is it that gentlemen persist in speaking of "waste" without giving something definite? I was opposed to the proposition of building this railroad in the beginning, and I have no regret for the vote I cast. But I dislike these statements about "waste" unless gentlemen will give us some facts as to where the "waste" is.

Mr. NORTON. I have personally thought the verbal information I received and to which I referred generally was about as reliable information as could be received from any source.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But the man whom the gentleman is now quoting—did he give the gentleman those statements?

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman I am quoting says the estimate this year is for something like 2,000 men, and of those only a little over 200 are men who are to be actually engaged in construction work. The great percentage of the men are in administrative and clerical positions that are not productive of any real construction of the road. I would like to have some information from the chairman of the committee or the gentleman in charge of the bill on that feature of the matter.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the last statement made by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON], instead of the information being correct, the estimate submitted to the committee was for 149 men in the supervisory and clerical capacities and for 1,026 workmen upon construction.

Mr. NORTON. I will say to the gentleman that when I made the statement a moment ago——

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman must have been incorrectly informed.

Mr. NORTON. If the gentleman will yield, I will say that while I made the statement of 2,000, my recollection now is that it was 1,200 men, and of that number only 200 men were going to do actual construction work there. The gentleman from whom I obtained this statement is thoroughly acquainted with the actual conditions up there. Does the gentleman from South Carolina know that 1,026 workmen are to be employed out of the total of 1,175?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Of course I do not, because I have not been there. But the gentleman who presented this estimate to the committee stated to us that there were not to be 1,200 men in clerical capacity, but 1,026 upon construction and 149 upon clerical work.

What the gentleman says about waste may be true. I do not think there could be a railroad constructed for $35,000,000 without some waste being connected with it.

Mr. NORTON. Can the gentleman tell me whether or not the cost has been $140,000 per mile?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No. The situation is simply this: In 1914 the gentleman in charge of this work said it would cost $35,000,000. Now, we all know that if anyone had predicated a statement of cost in 1914 upon conditions then prevailing and had attempted to build a railroad from 1914 up to this time upon an estimate of cost arrived at upon cost prices prevailing in 1914 he would have gone into bankruptcy; and if any contractor had taken a contract in 1914, based on prices then prevailing, he would have gone into bankruptcy.

Here is what these commissioners give as the reason for the increased cost. I hold no brief for them and was opposed to this proposition at the outset, as was the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. But let us, in justice to these gentlemen, know what they have gone through. The first thing that happened up there was that a river, known as the Nenana, followed the course that the Missouri River sometimes follows, namely, it changed its course and carried away 24 miles of track, which was a dead loss. Since last year what has happened? I read:

> Now, here are some of the big items showing increase in cost: One of the biggest items is lumber. In 1917 we paid $14.75 per thousand for lumber in Seattle, and last year we paid $23 per thousand. That is really pretty good, or is not so bad as some other things. For instance, take the item of milk, which seems to be as bad as anything. We paid $3.78 per case for milk in 1917 and $6.30 in 1918. For iron—and by that I mean bridge iron and not steel—we paid $3.89 per 100 in 1917 and $5.95 in 1918. For shovels we paid $5 per dozen in 1917 and $14.50 per dozen in 1918. Freight has advanced, and labor went up 10 per cent.

Prices have advanced and labor has gone up, as every man knows. Of course, that is true; and in justice to those people we know that they necessarily had to incur expenses that they could not originally have anticipated. And yet, in the face of that, they say the road stands to-day 71 per cent completed. With this appropriation it will be 77 per cent completed. The estimate of the commissioner is that $9,000,000 will be needed to complete it. He says that is based on prevailing prices, and if prices drop he will be able to complete it for a less amount. If they go up, it will cost more. Of course, that is true. You can not make any guess unless it is based upon cost prices, and the only thing for us to do is to make the appropriation. This appropriation will give to this work the balance of the original authorization.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The future must take care of itself if the limit of cost is to be extended. But certainly now the only thing for us to do is to go ahead and authorize the continuance of this work.

Mr. NORTON. If the road can be completed at an increase of $9,000,000, I personally will be very well satisfied. But that is not my information, as I received it from this gentleman.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. My information is that it can be completed for $9,700,000.

Mr. NORTON. In addition to the original estimate?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes. He says that in addition to the original estimate he estimates that it will cost $9,700,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended three minutes or five minutes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I ask that my time may be extended three minutes, in order that I may answer the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did I understand the gentleman to state that the average cost per mile of the road so far constructed was some $70,000?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is my recollection of the hearing—about $70,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. How does the gentleman arrive at that figure when there has been $31,000,000 already expended and 244 miles of road completed?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Oh, they bought a railroad line there.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; they bought about 71 miles of road from the Alaska Northern Railroad Co.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, 244 into $31,000,000 gives an average price of $130,000 per mile. The rate of $78,000 a mile is a very low figure per mile for construction, and I am trying to ascertain the basis on which the gentleman arrives at that conclusion.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. When they bought the Alaska Northern they bought equipment and many other things that went into the sum of this original appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was under the impression that the Government bought the 71 miles of the Alaska Northern Railroad at a rather sacrifice price, because it was in bankruptcy. It was owned by the Sovereign Bank of Canada, which went bankrupt, and it was in the hands of the bondholders at the time the Government took it over.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Here are one or two items going to make up that statement:

Construction equipment, consisting of steam shovels, ditchers, unloaders, scrapers, etc., $1,382,136.59.

Plants at Anchorage and Nenana, consisting of office buildings, storehouses, quarters for employees, mess houses, hospitals, heating and lighting plants, freight-handling machinery, and so forth, $1,538,947.17.

I have picked out only the two largest items which go to consume this appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman know how much was paid to the bondholders of the Alaska Northern Railroad?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; I do not.

Mr. STAFFORD. That would enable us to compute the cost per mile of the road which has been constructed by the Government, because we know there were only 71 miles of road in operation owned by the Alaska Northern Railroad Co.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If I had the time, I could give the gentleman the information.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. CURRY of California. Mr. Chairman, I think probably if it had not been for war conditions the Alaska Railroad might have been constructed within the original estimate of $35,000,000. That estimate was carefully made, and it was based on statistics on the cost of railroads on file in the office of the Interstate Commerce Commission in this city, and also on the estimate of the cost of the Copper River Road in Alaska and of the Alaska Northern. The Alaska Northern, so far as it has been completed by Mr. Ballaine, cost $27,500 a mile, but he built the easiest constructed part of the road.

After the bill was enacted the question arose as to whether the road should be constructed by contract or by the Government. A contract could have been entered into for the construction of the road for a little over $44,000 a mile; but it was thought that the road could be constructed better by the Government, and it was undertaken under Secretary of the Interior Lane, whom all will admit is an honorable, honest, patriotic man. Undertaking the construction of the railroad by the Government may have been a mistake, although if the road had been contracted for it is likely the contractors would have gone broke under war conditions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CURRY of California. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The contractors would not have undertaken to dredge the entire bay in front of Anchorage or to build a model town site, and such things as that, would they?

Mr. CURRY of California. I was going to call attention to that later. The cost of materials used in the construction of railroads has increased from 100 to 500 per cent and the cost of labor has increased 200 to 400 per cent. In addition to that 5,000 of the strong, healthy young men of Alaska, a great many of whom were engaged in the construction of this road, were drafted into the Army, and those who were left up there who could do this work were Indians and old men.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CURRY of California. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. My friend is aware of the fact that practically all the steel that has been used on the Alaska Railway up to this time was contracted for before the war raised steel prices——

Mr. CURRY of California. No.

Mr. MONDELL. That is true.

Mr. CURRY of California. No

Mr MONDELL. And if they have bought any steel at war prices it has been very little; and the cost of labor has advanced less in Alaska than almost anywhere else.

Mr. CURRY of California. Yes; but steel is only one of the things entering into the cost of railroad construction. The cost of the Alaska Northern should be added to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CURRY of California. I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURRY of California. The work done at Anchorage and the laying out of the towns and the fixing up of the places to care for and board and house the men should be added to the expense. I believe if the war had not occurred this road would have been constructed for $35,000,000, and I think we are fortunate if we can construct it for $9,000,000 or $10,000,000 more. There is not a railroad in the United States that has done any construction work since the war started, that could avoid it. The United States Railroad Administration let a contract for 100,000 cars last May at the then prevailing prices. Ten thousand only of those cars have been completed and the railroads will not accept them because the contract price is from $1,275 to $3,500 each more than it was before the war started, or that they can buy them for probably a year from now. The Government made a forcible delivery of some of the cars on the Clover Leaf line, and the case is before the courts to determine whether the Government has authority or not to compel the railroads to take these cars. The contractors are proceeding with the construction of the other 90,000 cars. In Alaska they had to buy cars, construction material, and hire any kind of labor available at war prices, and I think these things ought to be taken into consideration by Congress when it criticizes the commission appointed to construct the Alaska Railroad.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, just one moment. I understand that the gentleman from Illinois reserved the point of order. Did the Chairman hold that the point of order has been withdrawn?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was reserved by the gentleman from Illinois, but he is not in the room, and is not pressing the point of order, and the Chair assumed that it had been withdrawn and abandoned.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, he left the Chamber temporarily without saying whether the point of order should be pressed or not.

Mr. MONDELL. I understood that the gentleman from Illinois withdrew the point of order.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do not think that he intended to press it, though I do not know that he withdrew it.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think he did withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair was under the impression that he did not intend to press it. It was not formally withdrawn.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I shall go back to it if the gentleman wants.

Mr. STAFFORD. Very well.

The Clerk read as follows:

During the fiscal year 1920 there shall be covered into the appropriation established from time to time under the act approved March 12, 1914, entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," the proceeds of the sale of material utilized for temporary work and structures in connection with the operations under said act, as well as the sales of all other condemned property which has been purchased or constructed under the provisions thereof; also any moneys refunded in connection with the construction and operations under said act, and a report hereunder shall be made to Congress at the beginning of its next session.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The members of the committee will remember that I was opposed to the Alaska Railroad, but I do not rise to discuss that. I had hoped that the gentleman from California [Mr. KETTNER] would return to the room. He has been called out temporarily. We were discussing this matter and he showed me a statement that the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lane, had given him. It is so full of facts as to these expenditures that I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is it a very extensive statement?

Mr. WINGO. Not so very extensive, but it gives the facts with reference to expenditures. I think it gives some information that the gentleman was asking for himself.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much space will it take?

Mr. WINGO. I do not know, but not very much. It is a very concise statement. It gives the number of miles of road constructed, the miles of yard tracks, and the miles of road purchased from the Alaska Northern, and a lot of other data. It is very informative and I think it ought to go into the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. From the appearance of the statement, as I see it in the gentleman's hand, it seems to me very lengthy, I have no objection to having it printed as a public document.

Mr. WINGO. I think it ought to go into the RECORD in connection with the inquiries that have been made.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. For the time being I shall object.

The Clerk read as follows:

All expenditures of money appropriated herein for school purposes in Alaska for schools other than those for the education of white children under the jurisdiction of the governor thereof shall be under the supervision and direction of the Commissioner of Education and in conformity with such conditions, rules, and regulations as to conduct and methods of instruction and expenditure of money as may from time to time be recommended by him and approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have been trying to keep track of what was being read, but the Clerk has gotten ahead of me. I ask unanimous consent to return to page 103, to the matter of education in Alaska.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Reserving the right to object, for what purpose?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I want to ask the chairman something about the jurisdiction of the committee over this particular class of items.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, is it the purpose of the gentleman to make the point of order against the proposition?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I would like to reserve the point of order for the purpose of asking a few questions.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the gentleman want to make the point of order or to offer an amendment?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I would like to ask the gentleman some questions. I would like to know how it is that the Committee on Appropriations gets jurisdiction of appropriations relating to Indians and Indian affairs in the Territory of Alaska. Under the rules, Rule XI, subdivision 16, all matters in respect to the relations of the United States to Indians and Indian tribes, including appropriations therefor, go to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I would like to ask if the chairman of the committee has given the matter any consideration, and how this committee gets any jurisdiction of appropriations over Indians and Indian affairs in the Territory of Alaska?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The question has never been raised that I know of. This bill has always carried this appropriation. The Indian Affairs Committee has jurisdiction over the Indians in this country. I do not know that they have ever extended their jurisdiction to the Indians of Alaska. It has been carried here every year. No question has ever been raised about it.

Mr. WELLING. Is the appropriation distasteful to the gentleman?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; the appropriation is not distasteful to me. I think the appropriation ought to be made. But I think it ought to be made by the proper committee, and while I do not intend to make any point of order on it, I do want to call the attention of the House, and the attention of the Committee on Appropriations, to the rule which gives jurisdiction over these Indian appropriations to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The Alaskan appropriations have always been under the jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committee. The Indian Committee never had any jurisdiction over Alaskan affairs.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Where does the gentleman get that authority?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Where does the gentleman get his authority?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. From the rule that gives jurisdiction of Indians to the Committee on Indian Affairs and all appropriations relating to Indians or Indian affairs.

Mr. SHERLEY. This does not relate to Indian affairs in the sense that is mentioned in the rule. For 20 years the Committee on Appropriations, ever since there has been a Territory of Alaska, has been dealing with these matters.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. March 4, 1909, this item, in the words in which this appropriation is carried, first went into an appropriation bill. So far as the Indians of Alaska not being Indians in the true sense of the word Congress by act of February 6, 1909, defined what an Indian is. It says:

The term "Indian" in this act shall be construed to include the aboriginal races inhabiting Alaska when annexed to the United States and their descendants of the whole or half blood who have not become citizens of the United States.

Congress having passed that act, all the aboriginal peoples in Alaska are Indians in the strict sense of the word.

Mr. SHERLEY. Laying aside the question of the rule, about which I am clear the gentleman is wrong, would he have the Committee on Indian Affairs appropriate money for the Indians in Alaska and the Committee on Appropriations appropriate for their educational matters in Alaska?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. No; my idea is that you have no jurisdiction over any of it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Would the gentleman take away from the Committee on Appropriations all jurisdiction over Alaska?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Perish the thought. I am not raising a point of order; I am simply inquiring where you get jurisdiction over any of these appropriations for Indian Affairs in Alaska.

Mr. SHERLEY. They are not Indian affairs in the sense that the Committee on Indian Affairs deal with the matter. The Appropriations Committee has always carried all of these appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alaska to return to the item?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

Glacier National Park, Mont.: For administration and improvement, construction of roads, trails, bridges, and telephone lines and the repair thereof, including necessary repairs to the roads from Glacier Park Station through the Blackfeet Indian Reservation to various points in the boundary line of the Glacier National Park, including not exceeding $1,000 for the maintenance, repair, and operation of one motor-driven and one horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicle for the use of the superintendent and employees in connection with general park work, $85,000.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so for the purpose of bringing to the attention of the House a statement made two or three days ago while this bill was under discussion, and also another speech that was made a short while since by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON] with respect to Government activities near Newport News. My purpose in selecting this point to make this motion is that I found the committee had considerable difficulty in getting out of Alaska. I notice that we are about to enter the Hawaiian National Park, and if they have as much trouble in leaving Hawaii as they had in leaving Alaska, I shall not have an opportunity to present my views.

A short while ago, in a speech made on the floor of this House, the lady from Montana [Miss RANKIN] made certain remarks which will be found on page 4163 of the RECORD. I am not impugning her motive, but simply desire to correct any erroneous impression that may follow from that statement. I refer to the last paragraph, on page 4163 of the RECORD. I shall discuss the matter in as delicate a way as possible.

The lady from Montana was not sure that the particular incident to which she referred occurred in Newport News. In view, however, of the fact that it is thought that this incident occurred in a camp near Newport News, I feel called upon to deny the implications which follow. The statement was made not upon direct knowledge of the lady from Montana, but rather upon information coming to her from a third party. The statement is, and I will read only a part of it:

In one camp, I think it was Newport News, a reliable woman, a personal friend of mine, was sitting in the Public Health Service office. A man came in the office and talked with one of the officials. The official became very angry, and when the man left he came over to my friend and excused his anger by explaining that the man who came in tried to bribe him.

There is then the statement that the alleged bribery consisted in an effort to procure a white card for a card of another color. The conclusion is drawn that if the colored card was changed for a white card the holder might pursue a nefarious business.

It is exceedingly difficult to answer a charge that is indefinite as to parties, time, and location. I am satisfied that if upon investigation the lady from Montana finds that this incident did not occur near Newport News she will make the correction. The implications necessarily to be drawn from the incident referred to is that in effect the white card was a process of licensing; that is, that there was a process whereby persons who were examined were given one card to indicate one condition and another card to indicate another condition. In effect, the possession of the white card would constitute a license, and the context implies permission to pursue a nefarious trade. I deny that there is in Newport News or in the first district of Virginia—yes, I will go further and deny that there is in the State of Virginia, in camps or elsewhere, any process of licensing. The trouble about the whole matter, gentlemen, is this, that there has been a misconception of the purpose for which the cards are issued by the Public Health Service. I hold in my hand a letter, signed by Rupert Blue, which I will ask to make a part of this record, and which shows that the cards which are issued are colored cards relating to——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Can not the gentleman get along with less than five minutes?

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. I can not get through the discussion of the other matter to which I desire to refer in less than 10 minutes, and without additional time I will not take up that now, but ask to be heard at some other time. I will say this, that I sought to have my remarks come in general debate on the appropriation bill which is to follow, but I was told I could not be given the opportunity then and that this was the last opportunity.

Mr. SHERLEY. I trust the gentleman may have the time.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Surg. Gen. Blue states that:

The white form was issued to restaurants, and so forth, having a sanitary grade of more than 90 per cent; the blue cards to restaurants, and so forth, grading from 75 per cent to 90 per cent; and the red cards to restaurants, and so forth, grading from 60 to 75 per cent. These restaurant permit cards were given after a sanitary inspection of the premises in question, and the grading of the place, including a close examination of the method of preparing, serving, and handling food, including the dishes, food, floors, walls, ventilation, absence of insects, and other sanitary phases.

So that when the Public Health Service issued a card it was with respect to the business of conducting a restaurant or to conduct one of those businesses that are mentioned in the letter by Surg. Gen. Blue. Now, gentlemen, the commonwealth's attorney of the city of Newport News is a veteran of the Spanish-American War, a man who tried to get into this war, a man who went to Old Point and asked to be examined for service, agreeing to waive all exemptions in order that he might fight for his country. His request was not granted. I know the man well, and he has followed these matters closely. These matters fall within the scope of his duties, and from the beginning of the war the municipal and State health authorities have cooperated fully with the Army authorities and the Public Health Service.

I know how dear to the Commonwealth's attorney and to the State and municipal authorities has been the protection of the morals of the city of Newport News and the camps in that community; and I say to you, gentlemen, that they never would have permitted a system of licensing, as is implied—innocently, I believe—in the remarks of the lady from Montana. The intendments which flow from the incident as related and the context do a grave injustice to the community which I serve, and for this reason I have felt that this explanation should be made. I ask that this letter be made a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by the insertion of the letter referred to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the letter referred to:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE,
Washington, February 26, 1919.

Hon. S. O. BLAND:
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. BLAND: You no doubt noticed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 24, on page 4163, a statement to the effect that Public Health Service officers had given cards to women in regard to their physical conditions. An incident is related, which it is thought happened at Newport News, Va., to the effect that a "man came to the office of the Public Health Service and wanted his wife's red ticket changed to a white ticket so that she might ply her trade." The implication of this statement is, that the woman in question was a prostitute and that an effort was being made to secure a certificate that she was free from disease. It can be most positively stated that no officer or employee of the Public Health Service at Newport News, Va., or at any other stations of the service, has at any time given to a woman a certificate of freedom from venereal disease. Such practice is entirely contrary to all the regulations and orders of this bureau, and the incident as reported could not possibly have happened. It is believed that this misunderstanding may have arisen through the issuing by the Public Health Service of permit cards to restaurants, soda fountains, and barber shops, which permit cards were printed on red, white, and blue forms. The white form was issued to restaurants, etc., having a sanitary grade of more than 90 per cent; the blue cards to restaurants, etc., grading from 75 per cent to 90 per cent; and the red cards to restaurants, etc., grading from 60 to 75 per cent. These restaurant permit cards were given after a sanitary inspection of the premises in question, and the grading of the place, including a close examination of the method of preparing, serving, and handling food, including the dishes, food, floors, walls, ventilation, absence of insects, and other sanitary phases. No other possible explanation of the reported incident can be made.

It is deeply regretted that a statement should appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which would lead the casual reader to believe that the Public Health Service would issue certificates of health to immoral women.

Respectfully,

RUPERT BLUE,
Surgeon General.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Now, I am going to take up the other matter, which is of less concern to the people of this House, and I am not going to dwell on it for any considerable length of time. I wish I had an opportunity to discuss fully the speech of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON]. It seems he went down on a tour of inspection and made certain reports to this House when he came back. In the course of his remarks he made certain statements, and among others he said that the control of governmental activities in Newport News and in the surrounding neighborhood was in the hands of Mr. Ferguson, a brother of Gen. Ferguson, the commanding general at the port of embarkation, and that the Fergusons controlled all governmental activities around there.

Gen. Frank K. Ferguson, to whom he referred, is not related to Mr. Homer L. Ferguson, who is president of the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. Gen. Ferguson, who is in command of the port of debarkation, is a brother of Homer Ferguson. Gen. Ferguson, brother of Homer Ferguson, did not come to Newport News until November 10 of last year. He was then placed in charge of the port of debarkation. The governmental work down there was done under the supervision and direction of Gen. Grove Hutchinson, who preceded him, and while that work was going on Gen. Ferguson was in France fighting for his country. You know who Gen. H. B. Ferguson is. He is the man who went to Cuba to raise the Maine. You know who Homer Ferguson is. He is the president of the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. And I wish that there should not appear in this RECORD any reflection against these high-toned gentlemen, one of whom is a citizen of that community, and both of whom are doing what they can for their country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended for an additional five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that his time may be continued for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Comment was made to the effect that Hilton village was a phantom village. I have here, and I am not going to read it now, a letter from Mr. Homer Ferguson, president of the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., which I am going to ask to be incorporated in the RECORD. It will show at the very time the gentleman from South Dakota made his inspection that there were 189 houses occupied in Hilton village by families, of which 171 were occupied by shipyard employees. It is said that the Morrison Aviation Field was abandoned because it was not suitable for aviation purposes. It was never intended for aviation purposes. If you will go to the record you will find that it is purely and simply an aviation concentration camp, where aeroplanes were to be collected and from which point they were to be shipped to the other side. The cessation of hostilities necessarily resulted in a practical abandonment of the aviation field.

It is said that the Government had built a road from Thirty-fourth Street in Newport News out for some distance. I know of my own personal knowledge that $150,000 was expended by the city of Newport News for the building of that road from Thirty-fourth Street to the city limits.

I wish there were sufficient time to answer all the charges, many of which might be as easily explained as those to which I have referred.

Mr. Chairman, I ask to have this letter made a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the letter referred to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the letter referred to:

NEWPORT NEWS SHIPBUILDING & DRY DOCK CO.,
Newport News, Va., February 20, 1919.

Hon. S. O. BLAND, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BLAND: I thank you for the copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 5, sent me with your letter of the 7th instant.

Mr. DILLON'S statements, beginning on page 2774 of the RECORD, are, regarding matters within my knowledge, so contrary to the facts that I trust a correction may appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Hilton village is built, as you know, in a splendid location overlooking James River. The center of the village is a quarter of a mile from James River and the elevation above mean tide is 26 feet. When the streets and other improvements are completed the town will be dry, healthful, and a model of its kind.

The preliminary agreement with the Emergency Fleet Corporation for the construction of Hilton was signed January 9, 1918. Preliminary work was started January 24, 1918. Final contract for the building of Hilton was executed April 9, 1918, and the work of clearing the site was started on April 18, 1918. On November 10, 1918, the village was from 70 to 75 per cent completed. The number of houses occupied on that date was 134. On January 28, 1919, the date of Mr. DILLON'S visit to Newport News, there were 189 houses in Hilton occupied by families, of which 171 houses were occupied by shipyard employees and their families, the remaining 18 houses being occupied by Emergency Fleet Corporation employees and superintendents engaged in building the town. Mr. DILLON'S statement that "no shipyard workers live in Hilton" is not true.

The Army quarters, built on Thirty-fifth Street and West Avenue, are located on the land belonging to Mr. H. E. Huntington, the owner of the shipyard, under a lease prepared by the War Department's representatives and signed by Mr. Huntington and such representatives. These quarters were started last spring, were completed during the summer, and were occupied by Army officers stationed here, during August and September, and were fully occupied on November 10, 1918.

Brig. Gen. Frank K. Ferguson has never been in command of the port of embarkation, but has been in command of the Coast Artillery station at Old Point and of the artillery camp at Lee Hall, Va. His family and mine are not related. Capt. L. G. Thom is not related to any member of my family by blood or marriage.

Brig. Gen. H. B. Ferguson, my brother, was ordered here in command of the port of embarkation on his return from France, about November 1, 1918, and entered upon his duties here November 10, 1918, the day before the armistice became effective.

The dates given are important. Since the armistice no new projects have been conceived in this community, but on the contrary large governmental housing projects for shipyard workers have been abandoned.

The foregoing statements of known facts are not only known to me but are generally known to intelligent citizens throughout this community, and investigation by Mr. DILLON would have put him in possession of the facts.

Yours, very truly,

H. L. FERGUSON.

Mr. BLAND of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Alaskan Railroad.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alaska asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Alaskan Railroad. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hawaii National Park: For expenses incident to securing donations of patented lands and rights of way over patented lands in Hawaii National Park, $750.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to call the attention of the committee to an item that would have properly come under the head of the health survey, but being out of the Chamber when we passed that I am going to trespass on the time of the committee to talk out of order, if it is permitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I have been interested in some of the facts that have been made public in regard to the spread of the epidemic known as the "flu." Figures have been given me that indicate that 400,000 people died of this epidemic and that probably 25 per cent of the population of the country was somewhat influenced in their physical health by it, making something like 25,000,000. The question was raised as to whether we have taken any steps to prevent it or anything more than simply to attempt to care for it. A letter was addressed to the Surgeon General of the Navy and specific questions were put to him referring to the possibility of this disease spreading another year.

I want to invite the committee's attention, if it pleases, to some facts that are official, facts which I believe are well worthy the attention of the Congress. The first question that was submitted to the Surgeon General was this:

1. Are we likely to have, during the coming winter, and even the winter following, a recurrence of the influenza epidemic?

The reply is as follows:

It is reasonable to expect that death rates in the United States will be unfavorably influenced by influenza for the next few years, that the disease will appear in epidemic form from time to time, and that in accordance with the history of the disease, as shown by studies extending back to 1732, another pandemic will appear in due course of time. It may be said that the causative agent of the disease is now unknown.

This is an official answer by the officer of the Government to whom we would apply for expert and accurate information, and he suggests that the influenza will be present next year. And another more remarkable fact is that its cause is now unknown. I have been told by physicians held to be of high rank that they are more or less baffled with this epidemic, scarcely knowing how to treat it.

The second question that was submitted is as follows:

2. Has the experience of medical men with the disease during the recent epidemic developed any recognized and dependable method of prevention, any recognized cure, or any reasonably positive method of treatment that might assure us that we could face a recurrence of the disease with any less disastrous results than attended the onset of the epidemic this past winter?

The answer is as follows:

No dependable method of prevention has been discovered. No specific method of treatment which is universally applicable has been discovered, but promising results have been secured in some instances by the use of serum from convalescent patients.

We were told first that the cause is now unknown. We are told now that we have not discovered a sure preventive and not a sure cure.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. FESS. I will yield to my friend.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It might be added, however, that so far as the present medical knowledge goes, there has been a use of antipneumonia serum that is almost a sure specific for that part of the trouble that follows.

Mr. FESS. I will say to my friend that that is included in a further question.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I will be glad to hear it.

Mr. FESS. The third question is:

3. Is the nature of the disease such as to make reasonably sure that it is spread by a bacillus, now unidentified, but which full research might be expected to isolate and identify?

The answer is:

Without a doubt research in the course of time may be expected to result in isolation and identification of the causative agent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, may I ask for five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks that his time be extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FESS. The fourth question is:

4. If it was proven by such research that it was due to some now unknown organism, is it likely that with this organism identified a vaccine or serum could be developed that could in any substantial degree inoculate against the contagion?

I will say to my friend from Illinois that that question involved his question. The answer to this question is:

Certainly discovery of the causative agent would represent a very substantial advance toward the successful application of preventive measures.

The Surgeon General has not put himself upon record that such vaccine has yet been discovered. The fifth question was:

5. Would proper research work to ascertain, if possible, the cause and cure of influenza be facilitated and expedited by the appropriation by Congress of a substantial sum for this specific work?

The answer of the Surgeon General is in the affirmative, and he thinks without a doubt that research would find a remedy.

The sixth and last question was:

6. Will it be possible for the various medical agencies of the Government to coordinate and carry on such research in any really big way without some such specific appropriation and authorization?

The Surgeon General says:

Undoubtedly an additional appropriation would enable the Government medical agencies to broaden their fields of investigation.

Now, gentlemen of the committee, my interest was due to quite a number of letters that have come to me, asking whether the Government has taken any steps to discover the cause of this disease, to prevent it if possible breaking out another year, and that is why an investigation has been made to ascertain whether there really is a possibility of such research.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is aware of the fact that there is an appropriation of $300,000 carried in this bill for the study of the diseases of man, which can be used, so far as the Public Health Service feels it should be used, for the study of influenza.

Mr. FESS. That is on page 33, for field investigations?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; a study of the diseases of man.

Mr. FESS. Has the gentleman from Wyoming any doubt as to whether, with the law as it is, this can be extended to the study of this epidemic?

Mr. MONDELL. I have no doubt at all but that that fund has been used somewhat for that purpose. But "influenza" is not mentioned in the fund for the study of epidemics, and this committee, of course, is not justified in modifying the law in that respect. But the other appropriation is available for that work.

Mr. FESS. It would be impossible for anyone to estimate——

Mr. MONDELL. And if the gentleman will yield further, there is still a considerable sum at the command of the Public Health Service for the study and prevention of influenza which will be available to the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. FESS. I am glad to have the gentleman assure the country that this fund can be used for this investigation.

I was just about to say that there is no way for us to estimate the loss through this disease. I was thinking along this line: Suppose it would cost $10 a day to treat the patient, speaking generally, including not only the cost of the service rendered by the experts but including, all told, the loss you would have, and supposing it would amount to $10 a day incident to the illness of a citizen suffering under influenza. If you would estimate 10 days of illness at that rate and calculate the number of people ill from the disease this year, the amount of loss or cost would be something over $2,000,000,000. That is, counting the loss of service and the actual outlay, the small fund appropriated to make investigation of this frightful disorder should be gradually increased to insure a larger investigation. It would be a good investment, indeed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hot Springs Reservation, Ark.: The unexpended balance of the appropriation and authorization contained in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919 for the construction of a new administration and Government free bathhouse building is reappropriated and made available for the fiscal year 1920. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to use such appropriation and authorization in the construction of separate buildings for administration and free bathhouse purposes and to accept sites in the city of Hot Springs which may be donated for said buildings.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. Can the gentleman from South Carolina give some information about these sites and about how extensive a plant it is proposed to erect?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If no site is donated, there will be no building done. On the opposite side of the street from the Government reservation there is a block of rather unsightly buildings, which the city of Hot Springs has promised to present as a gift, upon which site they intend to construct the free bathhouse. If the site is not presented to them, they will not build on it. If it is, they propose to build there, because it will be a much better site and will enable them to continue to use the present administration building, which, under the bill of last year, would have to be combined in one institution.

Mr. WALSH. At a cost of $190,000?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes; $140,000 from the Treasury and $50,000 from the revenues.

Mr. WALSH. Has the city of Hot Springs donated any site?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It has not yet, but it is to do so. If it does not, of course, this money can not be used to build.

Mr. WALSH. Do the authorities know that the city will donate the site, and has it been selected?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes. It is right opposite the reservation, where there are now some unsightly buildings.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mount Rainier National Park, Wash.: For protection and improvement, construction of roads, bridges, fences, and trails, and improvement of roads, including not exceeding $500 for the maintenance, operation, and repair of a motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicle for use of the superintendent and park employees in connection with general park work, $32,500.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I had intended at this point in the bill to offer an amendment making an appropriation for the administration, protection, maintenance, and improvement of the Grand Canyon National Park, which was recently created by an act of Congress. Unfortunately the House has not as yet been officially advised that the President has signed that act. Of course, the amendment is subject to a point of order in the absence of actually existing law, and there will be none until the President signs the act. I desire to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether, in the event that an amendment is adopted by the Senate providing for the proper care of this new national park, it will receive the usual careful consideration that he gives to matters of that kind? In other words, I want to know whether the maintenance of the Grand Canyon National Park is going to be provided for during the next fiscal year? At the present time the national monument at the Grand Canyon is under the care of the Forest Service, but as soon as the new act goes into effect jurisdiction will be transferred to the Department of the Interior. An appropriation is therefore necessary to provide funds in accordance with the changed conditions.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can give the gentleman the assurance which he first asked for, that if the amendment is passed by the Senate it will receive the usual careful consideration that all such things do receive from the gentleman from South Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sieur de Monts National Monument, Maine: For protection and improvement, including not exceeding $600 for maintenance, operation, and repair of a motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicle for use in administration of the monument, $10,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina: Page 108, line 18, strike out the words "Sieur de Monts National Monument" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Lafayette National Park."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The bill changing the name of this park has passed both Houses. That is the explanation for offering this amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, when this bill passed the other day I called attention to the fact that there is another Lafayette Park, which has been made somewhat conspicuous, at least in recent days, by certain documentary burnings and other acts of vandalism. Some gentlemen insisted that there was no Lafayette Park in Washington; that it was Jackson Park. I do not know what the statute may say, irrespective of the appropriation act, as to the name of the park in front of the White House, but this bill carries an item—

For ordinary care of Lafayette Park, $2,000.

And the sundry civil appropriation act has carried such an item for many years. Hereafter when Lafayette Park is referred to no one will know which one is meant unless the ladies transfer their attentions to the park up in Maine. I wish they might be misled by the name "Lafayette Park," and go up to Maine to burn the President's messages, so that they would attract less notice than they do here in the District of Columbia.

The Post Office Department dislikes very much to give the same name to two post offices in different States, although that is frequently done. We have somewhat the same feeling about names. When Washington was laid out it was called the city of Washington. When the State on the Pacific coast was admitted it was called the State of Washington; and in order to avoid confusion in these names, so that people might not be misled when Washington is referred to as the name of a locality, the distinguished Committee on Appropriations have stricken out the name of Washington in this bill wherever it has occurred in the law heretofore. In the sundry civil act passed last year, now the current law, there are many references to Washington, meaning the city of Washington. The Committee on Appropriations, in order that no one should be misled and think it referred to the State of Washington, have in every place stricken out the word "Washington" in this bill. Having done that, they propose to try to confuse the American public by having two Lafayette Parks.

Mr. MONDELL. Did the gentleman from Illinois vote for the Lafayette National Park in Maine?

Mr. MANN. I did not. I did not vote against it. It went through by unanimous consent.

Mr. MONDELL. Then the gentleman voted for it.

Mr. MANN. Well, theoretically, possibly. I voted against the proposition for the change of name.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have another amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 108, line 18, after the word "for," insert the words "administration, maintenance."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, by reason of the change of name of the Sieur de Monts National Monument to Lafayette Park, I ask unanimous consent that that paragraph be transferred so as to follow line 14 on page 107, so that these parks will continue to be in alphabetical order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the paragraph be transferred so as to come after line 14 on page 107. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Yellowstone National Park, Wyo.: For administration, protection, maintenance, and improvement, including not to exceed $7,500 for maintenance of the road in the forest reserve leading out of the park from the east boundary, not to exceed $7,500 for maintenance of the road in the forest reserve leading out of the park from the south boundary, not to exceed $15,000 for a bridge over the Buffalo Fork of the Snake River on the Lander approach, not to exceed $7,000 for the purchase, operation, maintenance, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and including feed for buffalo and other animals and salaries of buffalo keepers, $255,500, to be expended by and under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That not exceeding $2,000 may be expended for the removal of snow from any of the roads for the purpose of opening them in advance of the tourist season.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] whether the practice is to use horses in the park or have they been superseded by automobiles?

Mr. MONDELL. All the main roads have been opened for automobiles, although they are also used for horse-drawn vehicles. The transportation furnished by the transportation company has all been motorized. A company was formed by combining the various transportation interests in the park, and they put motor vehicles on instead of horse-drawn vehicles. So that the only horse-drawn vehicles in the park are the private vehicles that go through the park.

Mr. FESS. How much of an expense to the Government does the touring enterprise embrace?

Mr. MONDELL. This bill appropriates $255,000. As I recall it, it is about $75,000 less than the current law, but the cost of the maintenance of the park runs about $250,000 a year. The receipts amount to something like $75,000 per year.

Mr. FESS. The touring business is not self-supporting.

Mr. MONDELL. We did not begin to secure receipts in any considerable amount from the national parks until about three years ago. We are gradually building up quite a fund in the way of receipts from all the larger national parks.

Mr. FESS. Who owns the big hotels?

Mr. MONDELL. They belong to a hotel company.

Mr. FESS. Are they any expense to the Government?

Mr. MONDELL. No; the Government receives some revenue from them.

Mr. FESS. A national park can never become self-supporting.

Mr. MONDELL. The revenues of Yellowstone Park are, as I have said, about $75,000.

Mr. FESS. And the cost to the Government is how much?

Mr. MONDELL. The sum carried in this bill.

Mr. FESS. I am not complaining, because I believe in national parks.

Mr. MONDELL. We can not have a self-supporting park; they will always be an expense. This is the greatest of the national parks; no other park compares with it except perhaps the Yosemite, which is also a great park but of a different character.

Mr. FESS. What is this $7,600 for motor vehicles?

Mr. MONDELL. That is partly for the use of the superintendent for the administration.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I would like to inquire whether the $7,600 referred to is exclusively for the purchase and operation of a motor-propelled vehicle or is the amount also for the pay of feed, and salaries, and so forth, referred to in the following clause. I am referring to lines 9 and 11 of page 109. The amount for the motor-propelled vehicle is quite beyond the amount carried in other paragraphs for a similar purpose.

Mr. MONDELL. That includes the other items of expenditure following further down.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is somewhat ambiguous, and I thought it must include the expenditures for the other items because the amount is so large.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Yosemite National Park, Cal.: For protection and improvement; construction and repair of bridges, fences, and trails, and improvement of roads other than toll roads; including not exceeding $2,300 for purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of horse-drawn and motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles for use of the superintendent and employees in connection with general park work; not exceeding $55,000 for grading in width not exceeding 20 feet El Portal-Yosemite Road, $200,000.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 109, line 25, insert the following:
"Provided further, That no owner or operator of a motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle in any national park shall charge a price in excess of $2.50 per hour for a five-passenger vehicle or $3.50 an hour for a seven-passenger carrying vehicle, including driver.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, I prepared the amendment because in most of these public parks and reservations the automobile privilege is let out to some particular individual, who has an exclusive monopoly of the right to the park or reservation for the operation of automobiles. You go into some of the parks, and they will charge any price they feel like asking or they think they can get a tourist to pay. In many places tourists are robbed; they charge $4 and $5 an hour for a five-passenger car. It is not fair. Anybody with a grain of sense knows that is an outrage.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLAGHER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is what the charge is in the city of Washington.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Oh, here in the city of Washington you can hire a five-passenger car for a dollar and a half an hour, and it is so advertised in the daily papers.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman please give me the address?

Mr. GALLAGHER. You can get a Ford car in the District of Columbia—[Laughter]—oh, well, that is a five-passenger car.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the gentleman would not want to take any of his guests out in a Ford car.

Mr. GALLAGHER. That is a five-passenger car, and you can get any other kind of a five-passenger car in the city of Washington for $2.50 an hour, and they are advertised as such in the daily papers for that price. If they can run cars for $2.50 an hour in the District of Columbia, then, with the privileges they have in the national parks and reservations, they can as well do it for that price there. They charge upwards of four and five dollars an hour for those five-passenger cars in the parks. That is what I am protesting against. I think, as a measure of public safety, we ought to protect the visitors to the parks and fix the price that these monopolies can charge the visitor. That is my idea. What is the ground of the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I make the point of order upon the ground that it is legislation.

Mr. GALLAGHER. It is a limitation. It limits the charges that these people make to visitors for automobiles.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina make the point of order?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that it would look better if he would move to strike out the semicolon at the end of this paragraph and insert a period.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, that is correct. On line 25 I ask unanimous consent to strike out the semicolon and insert a period.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Authority is granted to appoint a deputy disbursing agent who shall give a bond satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior and who shall have the same power as the disbursing agent during his absence.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on this to inquire by whom this deputy is to be appointed.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. By the head of the institution. The situation there is that if the disbursing officer goes away on leave on account of sickness or for any other purpose there is no person in his place under bond to assume his duties.

Mr. WALSH. They have gotten along quite a while without one.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. And they could do it now. They say that it is an unwise thing to have an employee there to be placed in charge of a considerable amount of funds who is not under bond. I can see no objection to doing it.

Mr. WALSH. And it is intended that the superintendent of the institution shall make the appointment?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is the disbursing officer appointed by him?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. My recollection is that he is simply going to designate some employee there to act in this capacity.

Mr. WALSH. Is the disbursing officer appointed by the superintendent or by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. By the superintendent of the institution.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. In the preceding paragraph we provided not exceeding $1,000 for use in the purchase of books, periodicals, and papers, as may be required for the purposes of the hospital, for the medical library. A lady of very high standing, who has visited St. Elizabeths a number of times lately, told me the other day that there was nothing out there for patients to read, no games for them to play, no opportunity for exercise, except that they might walk out in good weather. A good many years ago I went out to St. Elizabeths on a number of occasions to visit patients whom I knew there, but my recollection about the hospital is not very good. I wonder if it is correct that with all of these patients out there they have no attractive way of helping them pass the time away. I was an inmate of a hospital myself last winter, and had the opportunity of buying magazines and of having books sent to me from the Congressional Library, and a good many other books were sent to me to read also. I know of nothing which would be more likely to make one insane or keep one insane than to lock one up somewhere with nothing to do. I had supposed that St. Elizabeths was a modern hospital for the insane and that it had all of the modern things to be found at such a hospital; that there were many forms of amusement to help the patients pass the time away, instead of having the fairly well ones confined in a room with the more seriously ill patients, all of them wondering how they could get through the day. I do not know whether anybody here knows anything about it, but if they do, I wish they would tell me.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the other day I learned by accident almost that a young man from an Illinois district, who had been a soldier in France, was incarcerated in the St. Elizabeths Hospital. He had been a soldier and had fought at Chateau-Thierry, and had what is commonly called shell shock. On being brought back to this country he was sent to St. Elizabeths. On investigation it was ascertained that this young man was in possession of his faculties, like the rest of us here, but was suffering from that peculiar ailment, commonly known and wrongly termed shell shock. He is out there to-day mingled with a lot of men who are insane, kept in a ward where there are other inmates absolutely devoid of reason, without anything provided with which to get his mind off his peculiar affliction, and I am told there are others there who are in like condition.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Has the gentleman personally investigated the chart of this young man and seen the result of the diagnosis?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No; I have not.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then, I will inform the gentleman that his young man friend is not suffering from shell shock. There are no shell-shock patients at St. Elizabeths.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I do not know. I am told by those who went out there and who investigated, and by one of my colleagues from Illinois who went out there, as I understand it, personally, that that is what they claim is the matter with this man. I hope the gentleman from New York is right. If it is true that there are any shell-shock patients out there, they ought to be immediately removed, for it is manifestly unjust to keep them there. I hope there are none there. A man suffering from shell shock is not insane; he is simply suffering from nervous exhaustion, a kind of ailment from which, I was told in France, at base hospital 117, 60 per cent returned to duty fully cured, 20 per cent returned to a modified kind of service, and that only 20 per cent of the men afflicted are permanently disabled, and only a very small percentage of them become insane. A man suffering in that way ought to have special treatment, physical as well as mental.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Has the gentleman investigated in order to ascertain? That is precisely what the Surgeon General's office is doing, separating shell-shock cases and giving them special treatment and they are not sending them to the asylum.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I may say to the gentleman from New York I have made such investigation as I can without going there——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Perhaps the gentleman has, but he may not know all that is out there. I am told by those who have investigated this that this man is a shell-shock patient. I simply want to take this occasion to suggest I hope it is not true and I hope that no patients suffering from that ailment are sent to St. Elizabeths or any other hospital for the insane. That is not the way to treat them, and I will be very glad indeed to verify what the gentleman from New York says, on further investigation.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Appropriations having heard these more or less nebulous stories about soldiers suffering from shell shock having been sent to and incarcerated in St. Elizabeths took pains to examine Dr. White very thoroughly and very carefully on that point. Dr. White assured us that there was not at St. Elizabeths and had not been anyone suffering from shell shock so called with one possible exception. There was one man with regard to whose case there might have been some doubt. He was at St. Elizabeths for a very few days. Dr. White said in his opinion he might very properly have remained there and been benefited; did not believe he could get better treatment anywhere, but he was there for a very short time. With that exception he said that there had not been a so-called shell-shock case there; that they were very careful not to receive such cases, and would be none if they could so diagnose cases as to differentiate between what is known as shell shock and real mental disorder.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. There are at St. Elizabeths Hospital in this city 300 young men who had been sent to the camps as limited service men who are now acting as orderlies and nurses for the insane patients. These men who were in the Infantry and other branches of the service—instead of being discharged—have suddenly been brought to St. Elizabeths Hospital for the purpose of performing orderly and nurse duty. They are protesting most emphatically against that kind of a new position which has been found for them. Furthermore, they are compelled to work one day from 6 o'clock in the morning to 8 o'clock at night and the following day from 6 o'clock in the morning until 5 or 6 o'clock in the evening. Most of the men have never worked such hours before, and they can not understand how it is that having been called out under the selective-draft law they have suddenly without previous experience been turned into nurses and orderlies.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is no authority under the law to use those men for that purpose. In the first place St. Elizabeths Hospital is run by the Department of the Interior, and no one ever gave permission to that department nor was it ever given to the War Department to have men who were drafted taken from the camps and put into the positions of being orderlies and nurses in an insane asylum. That is the work of civilians.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have an amendment which covers that. Will the gentleman support it?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will support any amendment taking these 300 drafted men out of St. Elizabeths and providing civilians or others to do that kind of work. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. This appropriation provides for the employment of civilians in place of those enlisted men.

Mr. SIEGEL. You do not provide any time in which these 300 men shall be taken out. These men are compelled to eat their meals inside the wards with insane people and they are not permitted to leave those wards, some having to work 14 hours a day. They are protesting and their families are protesting that in spite of circular 77 and all the other circulars issued by the War Department applications for discharges made by them are not being honored. There has not been a single discharge from St. Elizabeths Hospital of any of these men brought from the various camps according to what I believe is reliable information. They have certain rights which must be respected and particularly when there is no authority for keeping them there. As one man remarked to me the other night, "that they were going to go insane themselves if kept there much longer."

Mr. MONDELL. Is it any fault of St. Elizabeths that Congress not having given them money enough to employ nurses and guards and aids when necessary should have enlisted men in order to take care of the soldiers that go there for treatment?

Mr. SIEGEL. I do not blame the superintendent of St. Elizabeths, but I do blame the man or men that issued the order sending those men there, particularly when there is no legal authority to take men from the camps and send them in to act as orderlies and nurses in an insane asylum.

Mr. MONDELL. Then the gentleman should criticize those who sent them there.

Mr. SIEGEL. I am. I am criticizing the man or men who issued such an order sending them there. I have uttered no word against the superintendent. And I repeat it, that there is no legal authority to keep any of these men to act as orderlies and nurses inside of the hospital. Men throughout the country are demanding eight hours' work, and Congress has gone on record for an eight-hour day, and there is no reason now why Congress should stand idly by and permit these men to work 14 hours a day simply because, under the selective-draft law, they were drafted to do other kinds of work. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, we are making such rapid progress on this bill that I think we might take three or four minutes more.

The trouble with all the hospitals is, and it is the trouble with human nature, that people in charge of hospitals, their superintendents down to nurses, including the doctors and internes, are so used to having complaints of various sorts from their patients or their friends that they become absolutely calloused to them.

A lady, the wife of a Member of this House, visited a hospital. It might have been St. Elizabeths, but it happened it was the Walter Reed Hospital. And going in she was told by whomever conducted her around, a nurse or assistant superintendent, or whoever it was, "Now, when you meet these soldiers and patients and they tell you any complaint, just say, 'Oh, yes; oh, yes; oh, yes.' Let it go at that. Because they necessarily have these complaints. It does not do any good to encourage them to talk to them very much about the complaints. You just be smiling and sweet to them and say, 'Oh, yes; oh, yes; oh, yes.'"

This lady came to a patient and asked him how he was getting along, and he had no complaint. He said that they kept telling him he ought to be very cleanly and keep clean, and he said, "I have had the same suit of underclothing on for three months. I have one arm off. I can not wash my clothes and the hospital will not wash them. The Government has not paid me any money. I can not buy a new suit of underclothing. and, on the whole," he said, "while I do not want to complain, it is rather difficult for me to keep real clean while wearing the same set of underclothing for three months, with no encouragement." And the nurse said to the lady, "You just say to the patient 'Oh, yes; yes; yes. It is all right.'" [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have a bona fide amendment.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Then it is the first bona fide amendment that has been offered.

Mr. KING. I would like to have two or three minutes, inasmuch as we are moving so rapidly here.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. We have got to get through with this bill. I have not objected to extending the time to anybody else. The responsibility is on the House to get these bills through, and I ask the gentlemen to desist at this point. If the gentleman from New York has a proper amendment I have no objection to it at all.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York does not desire to offer his amendment at this point.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I ask that the Clerk read, then.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] is recognized.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I withdraw the request.

Mr. FOSTER. You have 10 minutes.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. FOSTER. Do not do that. I am only going to use two or three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I want to use only a minute or two.

I have visited St. Elizabeths Insane Asylum, not right lately, but several times I have gone over it and have been in every ward in that hospital; and, as my colleague said a while ago, there is no place out there for proper exercise in some of these wards. There are a good many of those buildings that are very old, having been constructed years and years ago. They are not modern buildings. They are not what we would build now for a modern hospital for the insane. There are some buildings which were erected several years ago, while the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. But there has been a good deal of complaint from time to time about St. Elizabeths Hospital. Some of it may have been justified, but a good deal of it has been unfounded in the past. I remember one time it was claimed that the Civil War soldiers were put in what was called the "bull pen." This "bull pen," as it was called, was a shaded place where these soldiers might go out and exercise and sit around in the shade and do as they liked—a very comfortable and a very convenient place for them.

Now, I was told by a relative of a soldier a day or two ago that, as narrated by Members here, soldiers were compelled to go over there and nurse these patients; men who were selected, drafted, if you please, to go into the Army during the war were placed over in St. Elizabeths and compelled to take care of those helpless patients—not the soldier patients, but those outside of the soldier patients, civilians; compelled to take care of those who were helpless and who had to be handled as babies are handled.

I submit that if that condition is true it is an outrage upon the soldiers of this country, and it ought to be stopped. Congress ought to pass such an amendment that will stop it. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] has one that will put an end to that sort of abuse and get these boys out of there, I will heartily support it.

The Government is able to hire civilians, and it should take care of these patients and let those boys go home if they have no further use for them than that.

The boys did not enlist for that purpose—to take care of civilian patients in an insane asylum. They enlisted to serve their country on the battle field, and when the country does not need them for its military purposes they have the right to go home. The Government should discharge them and permit them to go back to civil life. They did their duty as soldiers. Now, they should be allowed to go back home and not be detained in these asylums, or whatever those places may be called, to perform such service as has been described.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say that I recently visited St. Elizabeths Hospital, and the assistant superintendent acknowledged that he had 250 soldiers and 35 or 40 sailors there acting as nurses.

Mr. FOSTER. They ought to be turned loose. Congress ought to see they are turned loose. [Applause.]

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. KING. Hamlet said, "Something is rotten in the State of Denmark." And I want to say that there is something rotten in Walter Reed Hospital. I have heard many stories similar to that repeated here by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] a few moments ago. I know a man from my district who was operated on in that hospital against his will for appendicitis. After his operation he was allowed to lie without any nurse or without any care overnight, and he grew delirious, and in his delirium he rose up in his bed and tore open his wound.

Was anything done after that? Nothing but to shove him into the ether ward, and a friend of mine went into the ether ward and saw 25 or 30 men dying there. There was nothing to be done for them. They were dying. It was necessary for this patient to stay there and breathe the ether until he passed away.

Only the other day a soldier who was confined in there against his will wanted to visit his folks without a furlough, and when he came back he was fined $50 and put into the "brig." The "brig" is another place down there that they have into which they put men when they wish to punish them. They put them all in there together, black and white, some of them suffering from venereal diseases, and they are all compelled to wash in the same bathtub.

These things are facts. Nobody is lying about that. Ask anybody who has visited the hospital in the last six months and you will find that they will relate to you conditions there that will justify the operators of that hospital being put in charge of the infernal regions when they go to their reward. [Applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS. What does the gentleman refer to when he speaks of the "ether room"?

Mr. KING. They have a room there where desperate cases are shoved to die, and this man that I referred to died in there.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Was the ether intended to kill them?

Mr. KING. They were all dying in there, and this man died along with the rest of them.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. What is the purpose of putting them there?

Mr. KING. I could not say what it was, unless it was to make their final passage out a little more pleasant.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman give the name of the man he refers to?

Mr. KING. I was out there myself, and my wife was with me.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Give me the name of the man that the gentleman referred to as having witnessed that scene.

Mr. KING. I will not give the names of witnesses, but that man, Sam Combiner, was killed in that hospital.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the gentleman, but——

Mr. KING. The gentleman is not apparently in sympathy with me, when he is making light of these horrors.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am not making light of them. That is the reason why I asked the gentleman to give the name of the witness.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CALDWELL. I want to say, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that my experience with the medical division of the Army has been one that has led me to believe that something ought to be done to correct them.

When the war started out we had a great many men who were connected with the Army in the relation of contract surgeons, and under the law as it was passed men who wanted to could apply and get into the Army, either in the reserve corps or as Regular Army officers in the Medical Department, and these men, being what are known as "sooners," were early on the job, and they rose to high rank in the Army, and because of their personal acquaintance with the General Staff officers and with the men who had the appointing power, and because of their antipathy and dislike to the great surgeons and their dislike of the great doctors of our country, who had made a success in their private practice where these contract surgeons could not make a success, they have done all they could to discourage and to discredit men of integrity in the land upon whom we depend in our private life for the protection of our health and our lives and the health and lives of our families. It is a scandal and an outrage that this condition has grown up as it has.

Practices have come to my own personal knowledge that were so terribly outrageous that I felt it was my duty to go and protest; but never yet have I found a single instance in which one of these contract surgeons who had risen to high rank in the Army ever saw fit to correct any of the abuses that he had permitted to grow up for the purpose of favoring his own people.

Why, immediately after war was declared, on a telegraphic request from one of the young men in my district, I went to Allentown, and in the hearings before the Military Committee there is a statement of the things that were done there against a man in an endeavor to prevent him from obtaining what he has earned by his own service. I found him there under charges before a court-martial, a clearly and palpably framed-up case, and I defended him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time on this has expired.

Mr. CALDWELL. I have not spoken on this bill before. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman is about the only Member here who has not spoken. I will ask him to take five minutes on another paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general repairs and improvements, $60,000.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I request the Clerk to read.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. SUMNERS). The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 111, line 6, after the figures "$60,000," strike out the period and add the following:

"Provided, That no part of the appropriation herein shall be used as long as soldiers who were drafted or who enlisted for the duration of the war are assigned to this hospital and employed as attendants, orderlies, or assistants."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, that amendment is perfectly acceptable to the committee, and in order to save time I will accept it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Then I have nothing further to say.

Mr. SISSON. I wish to offer a substitute for this amendment, because as it reads the gentleman's amendment would seem to be limited to the general repair and improvement fund. I offer the following as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SISSON as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: After line 6, on page 11, insert:

"No part of the appropriations contained herein for St. Elizabeths Hospital shall be used so long as soldiers or sailors are detailed as orderlies, guards, or in any other capacity."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I accept the gentleman's substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment does not mention the marines. Are the marines used for this purpose?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; they are not. As a matter of fact, here is what happened: Many insane soldiers were sent to St. Elizabeths. They did not have a sufficient number of civilian employees to take care of them. They could not get civilian employees. They did everything on earth to secure them, but the civilian employees left them. In that emergency the War Department came to their aid and detailed some men to act as guards. They have been doing everything in their power to procure civilians. They have no idea of retaining the soldiers there for that duty. The money has been appropriated in this bill so that after the 1st of July they will have the money to employ civilians. They are just as anxious to get rid of this condition as are the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Mississippi. Therefore I gladly accept the amendment.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. FESS. We ought to strike out the period and insert a colon.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. No; this begins a new sentence.

Mr. MONDELL. The committee has no objection to the amendment, because the soldiers ought not to be kept there, and the committee provides in this bill a sufficient appropriation so that it will not be necessary to retain the soldiers.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The bill is not effective until the 1st of July, and we have given them money for the employment of a sufficient force of civilians to take care of these patients so that the soldiers may be relieved.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York as amended by the substitute offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general repairs and improvements, $60,000.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the gentleman inform me what connection, if any, the Government of the United States has with the Columbia Hospital for Women out on Pennsylvania Avenue?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It was constructed by authority of Congress with the money of the Government.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Has Congress any supervision over the institution?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It has a board of managers. I think the gentleman from Illinois, Dr. FOSTER, is one.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I am not offering any criticism, but I was after some information that I was requested to get.

Mr. FOSTER. The Surgeon General of the Army and the Surgeon General of the Navy are members of the board.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Is there any governmental aid given to the institution?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. DUPRÉ. In what bill?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. In this bill.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Where?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. On page 36.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I thank the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

McNeil Island, Washington, Penitentiary: For the construction complete of the following buildings: New dining room, kitchen, and bakery, $60,000; new hospital, $20,000; residence for the warden and residence for the deputy warden, $10,000; cottages for guards and employees, $12,000; in all, $102,000 to be available immediately and to remain available until expended, and to be expended so as to give the maximum amount of employment to the inmates of said penitentiary.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. What are the new buildings to be constructed in addition to the new cell wings and the isolation buildings?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This is on an island which is occupied by a penitentiary. There never has been sufficient accommodations for the number of prisoners. The prisoners from the Pacific coast are sent there. In the absence of accommodations at the McNeil Penitentiary they are sent to county jails and State penitentiaries.

Mr. WALSH. But this is for the employees, the people running it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is for the reason that this penitentiary is located on an island. These men who have families have to live inside the walls of the penitentiary. When they can not secure accommodations for their families they are forced to be separated from their families, and it is difficult to get men to stay on the island. As a result the service has been very inefficient.

Mr. WALSH. In order to get them to live on the island they have to have separate quarters?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Do the Government institutions have separate cottages for the employees and the guards?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I do not know of any one that is situated as this is on an island. But my information is that they do. In this case, it being on an island, they have no place where they can live except within the walls of the penitentiary. If a man has a family it requires that he should be permanently separated from his family or else that he bring his family and live on the island inside the walls of the penitentiary.

Mr. WALSH. How far is the island from the mainland?

Mr. HOWARD. About 8 miles.

Mr. WALSH. How many inmates are there?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The population is increasing now. There are 225, and the population is to be increased, I understand, to about 600 as soon as the wing that they are adding to it is built.

Mr. WALSH. Where are they to come from?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. That is a very difficult question to answer. They are scattered around in the State and county jails, and they are going to be moved into this penitentiary that is owned by the United States Government.

Mr. WALSH. We appropriated last year $107,000 for construction work there.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. And new cells were constructed. We have to take care of the increased population, that is estimated now will be 600.

Mr. WALSH. The total number of inmates will be 600?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. When they transfer these now being held in the State institutions. Does the Government have to pay anything for their being kept in State institutions?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They pay a great deal more than the cost of maintaining them in our own institutions, and that is the reason why it is desirable to enlarge this and other penitentiaries.

Mr. WALSH. What else is there on that island?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Nothing.

Mr. WALSH. I did not know that we had an island anywhere that produced nothing but convicts. I am inquiring now as to the reasons for this additional appropriation for accommodations for the warden, deputy warden, guards, and employees, for whom some $40,000 of the appropriation is to be expended. I assume that now the guards and employees are being accommodated in the wing of the main building.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. All of the guards that we now have are accommodated, but when the population is increased to 600, necessarily they will have to have an increased number of guards.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the point of order, in view of the contemplated increase in the undesirable citizens upon that unhappy island.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS OBJECTS, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Conduct of customs cases: Assistant Attorney General, $8,000; assistant attorney, $3,000; special attorneys and counselors at law in the conduct of customs cases, to be employed and their compensation fixed by the Attorney General, as authorized by section 28 of the act of August 5, 1909; necessary clerical assistance and other employees at the seat of government and elsewhere, to be employed and their compensation fixed by the Attorney General; supplies, printing, traveling, and other miscellaneous and incidental expenses, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General; in all, $65,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 114, line 1, after the word "by" insert "subsection 30 of."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of that is to make the reference clearer, as there are 30 subsections of section 28.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Suits to set aside conveyances of allotted lands for removal of restrictions, allotted lands, Five Civilized Tribes: For necessary expenses incident to any suits brought at the request of the Secretary of the Interior in the eastern judicial district of Oklahoma, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney General, $10,000.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma: Page 117, line 2, after the figures "$10,000" strike out the period and insert a semicolon and add the following: "Provided, That said suits shall be advanced upon the docket and their trial expedited."

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, these suits were brought in 1908. There were 30,000 suits brought to set aside conveyances that were made by different members of the Five Civilized Tribes. There has been an immense amount of money appropriated for the completion of those suits. For several years we appropriated $50,000 per annum, and the appropriation now has come down to $10,000. Some of those suits, a few of them, are still hanging fire and could be disposed of if they were advanced on the docket, but if they are not advanced they will be mulled over and continued on until another year, and then we will have to make another appropriation for them. I think if we can get them advanced on the docket, in accordance with this amendment, we ought to be able to dispose of them this year.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What is the difficulty with the language carried in the proviso of last year, that the Department of Justice is expected to expedite the final determination of the suits?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman knows that that is a direction without a real kick in it.

Mr. WALSH. There is not very much kick in the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. This provides for the advancement on the docket, and the other does not.

Mr. WALSH. Can they expedite the final determination of any of these suits without advancing them on the docket?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The other proviso does not even provide for advancing them on the docket.

Mr. WALSH. They can advance these on the docket, and then when they are called for trial they may not be ready.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Well, but the gentleman knows the advancement on the docket is really in the interest of disposing of litigation and real expedition.

Mr. MANN. Under the gentleman's amendment, is the court obliged to put all of these suits at the head of every other case of litigation pending in the court?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think not.

Mr. MANN. What does it mean, then?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It means advancement on the docket. The court certainly would be allowed to use some discretion about it, but last year we did not even provide for advancement on the docket——

Mr. MANN. Last year we directed the Department of Justice to proceed to a final determination of the suit. That meant it became the duty of the Department of Justice to ask the court to try these cases, advance them on the docket. The Department of Justice never has paid any attention to any portion of the law except that which appropriated the money to pay their expenses.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Well, I think——

Mr. MANN. Now, the gentleman puts in a provision which is either advisory, in which case it means nothing, or it is mandatory, in which case it means that all of these suits shall be advanced at the head of every other piece of litigation that is pending, and it may be successful. In my day here I have seen Congress pass laws directing that this class of litigation be given preference in the courts and then the next day it passed a law providing that another class of litigation be given preference in the courts, and then follow that up with another law giving preference to another class of litigation until the courts could not tell—maybe did not care—what the law did mean as to preference. I hope I enjoy the hope that the gentleman does that these suits may be disposed of in the course of time even if the man who has charge of them loses his job.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I cherish that hope myself.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. I do not think as long as he holds his job the cases will be disposed of.

Mr. MANN. I doubt that. I do not think he will lose his job. There is always a soft berth in the Department of Justice office waiting with the increase in litigation.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I understand.

Mr. MANN. I have always hesitated about a law that undertook to tell the courts what cases they should try first.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Well, I will say this to the gentleman, if he will permit: These cases, or rather most of the questions involved in these cases, have been settled by the Supreme Court of the United States, but a great many cases are still on the docket——

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It is simply a matter of taking the case up and dismissing it in a great many instances, or one side or the other having disposed of a case in some such manner as that.

Mr. MANN. Certainly; and the courts generally in the course of time call through their calendars to know whether the cases are tried or dismissed.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I do not think the Federal court has ever gotten through with theirs, they have such a large volume of business.

Mr. MANN. They may not call the calendar through for trial of cases, but certainly they call the calendar to see whether the cases are ready for trial, and if they are not ready dismiss them. The court that does not do that is 100 years behind the times.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. As the gentleman knows, we are all kept here so steadily and constantly we can not get very much in the way of information about what is going on in the courts; but I do know there are a lot of those cases where the questions have been settled by the Supreme Court——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. And the questions have already been settled, and if the court could be induced to take them up and advance them on the docket they would probably be disposed of within the next year.

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. JUUL. I thought the gentleman stated that most of these suits were to be dismissed.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I said that a great many of the questions involved in these suits had been settled by the Supreme Court of the United States, and I assume, of course, they will be dismissed when the proper motion is made and the proper showing is made.

Mr. JUUL. If the gentleman will permit me, it strikes me you can dismiss a great many suits for $10,000.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think so.

Mr. JUUL. And it would seem to me this is a repetition of the case of Jarndyce against Jarndyce, when suits fall down because there is no more money.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I think there is something in what the gentleman has said.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Protecting interests of the United States in suits affecting Pacific railroads: To enable the Attorney General to represent and protect the interests of the United States in matters and suits affecting the Pacific railroads, and for expenses in connection therewith, $18,500.

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I did not hear the entire discussion this evening on the subject of conditions prevailing at St. Elizabeths Hospital. I will detain the committee but just a moment now.

It has been suggested to me by my friend from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] that the issue has been raised as to whether or not shell-shock patients are sent for treatment to that hospital. I just want to say that if any Member of Congress is under the impression that shell-shock patients have not been sent to St. Elizabeths Hospital he has an erroneous idea. To my personal knowledge such patients have been sent to that hospital. During the month of January one such case from my district was called to my attention. And so that there can be no doubt about it, and to give any person the chance to investigate the accuracy of this statement, I cite the case of Pvt. John A. Conley, Company B, Eleventh Machine Gun Battalion, who became the victim of shell shock in France during the month of July. He was returned to the United States; treated first at Fort Porter, Buffalo, N. Y., and then three months later was sent to St. Elizabeths. At my suggestion The Adjutant General's office reviewed this young soldier's case. The Surgeon General became convinced that this soldier had made a complete recovery. On the 29th day of January, only a very few days ago, this soldier was discharged from St. Elizabeths.

He came to my office, and I discussed his case with him. He is a splendid type of young American manhood. To my mind he has entirely recovered. He told me about other cases, and of how patients act out there who are the victims of shell shock.

In fairness to the authorities and attendants at the hospital I should state that the soldier expressed himself as well satisfied with the treatment accorded him under all the circumstances. However, the policy of sending such patients to St. Elizabeths does not commend itself to any of us.

From the information that came to me in this case I have not, therefore, any doubt concerning the policy of the military in sending shell-shock patients to St. Elizabeths Hospital.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Can the gentleman distinguish between the symptoms of praecox and shell shock?

Mr. CURRIE of Michigan. I must admit to my friend from New York that that goes into the technical side of the case, a branch that I have no knowledge of whatever. I can not make the distinction.

The Clerk read as follows:

For assistants to the Attorney General and to United States district attorneys employed by the Attorney General to aid in special cases, and for payment of foreign counsel employed by the Attorney General in special cases (such counsel shall not be required to take oath of office in accordance with section 366, Revised Statutes of the United States), $300,000, to be available for expenditure in the District of Columbia.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. I would like to make an inquiry about this. Part of this money has been used, and I suppose still will be used, abroad, where the counsel can not take the oath of office in the United States, because he is not an American citizen. How much does the gentleman expect of this increase, the item being increased $125,000, is to be used to pay people here in Washington?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The statement made in justification of this I know will appeal to the gentleman.

By reason of the activities of the United States Government in shipping, we have now pending quite a number of admiralty cases, demanding that admiralty lawyers be employed. The Attorney General, in presenting the statement, said it was evident that he would have to have the right to employ in Washington an admiralty lawyer, who in turn would be in charge of other admiralty lawyers. At this time, he said, there had been reported to the department 79 admiralty cases, involving many millions of dollars.

I remember one case in which there is a claim made for one cargo amounting to a little over a million dollars. In reference to the litigation arising out of the Alien Property Custodian Service, they have taken over property of the value of $500,000,000, and it is absolutely essential to take care of the claims arising under that law. Then there are the Army contract cases, cases arising out of contracts where a large number of suits have already been instituted; and for the purpose of taking care of the interests of the Government in these suits this increase of $175,000 was made, because we believed it was absolutely necessary.

Mr. MANN. I can understand that the Attorney General needs to employ an admiralty lawyer, and I should think he would need to have a permanent assistant who is familiar with admiralty law. I should suppose that the custodian, Mr. Palmer, employed many lawyers now. Certainly somebody is employed to be permanently in the office. This fund, which has varied at various times, is now $175,000 for the current year, and this proposition is to increase it to $300,000. It has been one of the worst-abused funds that the Government has appropriated—in employing men who did not work, who only rendered, or who thought they had rendered, political value somewhere. That may not be the case. It is to hire lawyers in many cases, not for permanent assistants. The gentleman said there were 70 or 80 cases, and they needed somebody up here who was acquainted with admiralty law. Very well. He will not be employed under this provision. This is for special attorneys. I have known under both parties cases of men employed under this item where, so far as their legal work was concerned, it would have taken a fine-toothed comb to find it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I will say to the gentleman that undoubtedly in the past this fund has been abused, but so far as this particular item is concerned the statements the Attorney General has made to the committee are to the effect that it is expected to employ out of this fund admiralty lawyers to take care of that litigation and litigation with reference to custodian matters.

I want to bring to the attention of the gentleman a statement that was made, that many excellent lawyers who had been connected with the Alien Custodian Service were men who served only during the war, men who came here for much less compensation than they were accustomed to receiving. Now that the war is over they are leaving, and we can not rely upon the Department of Justice receiving much legal service from the Alien Custodian's office.

Mr. MANN. I would doubt very much if anybody is leaving the Alien Custodian's office because they will not make as much money there as outside.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Palmer, the Alien Property Custodian, told us of a number of lawyers who came into his office during the war and who have recently left.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fees of clerks, $275,000: Provided, That salaries of deputy clerks and clerical assistants and other expenses of the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia shall be authorized and approved by the Attorney General and the accounts and emolument returns of the said clerk shall be examined and audited in the same manner as the accounts and emolument returns of clerks of United States district courts: Provided further, That after July 1, 1919, only actual expenses of travel and expenses of lodging and subsistence, not to exceed $5 per day, shall be allowed any clerk of a United States circuit court of appeals when absent from his official residence on official business.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, is this to take care of the compensation of clerks in the United States courts? It is the item at the bottom of page 20.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Did we not the other day pass a Senate bill fixing the salaries for clerks of United States courts?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What bill does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. WALSH. I refer to the bill fixing salaries of clerks of the United States courts—Senate bill 3079.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. My information is that an estimate has gone to the Senate. But we have received no estimate.

Mr. WALSH. Well, where are we going to land if we fix the salaries and permit them in the sundry civil act to secure the same compensation that they had been getting under the fee system?

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, may I say to the gentleman that this is for the salaries of deputy clerks, and so forth? Has he taken that into consideration?

Mr. WALSH. Line 19, page 120, says—

For fees of clerks, $275,000.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I know, but it goes on to say that the salaries are for the deputy clerks.

Mr. WALSH. That relates only to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, as the gentleman will see if he will read down a little further.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that the legislation we passed the other day will probably have the usual effect of legislation of that character and very largely increase the cost under this item. Has the gentleman offered an amendment to increase the appropriation?

Mr. WALSH. No. The reason it went through here so smoothly the other day was upon the representation and demonstration that it would not cost more, but would probably cost less. How it was figured out I do not know.

Mr. MANN. The report on that bill showed that it would cost a good deal more.

Mr. WALSH. I recall one of the gentlemen who was very much interested in it assured the House during the debate that it would not cost more.

Mr. MONDELL. Was he interested in it because it was going to reduce the emoluments of the clerks?

Mr. WALSH. No; because it was going to reduce the expense to the United States, strange though it may seem.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman has been here long enough to know that no legislation that reduces the cost of any Government activity goes through the House unopposed; and if that bill went through smoothly, as the gentleman says—I did not happen to be here at the time—it was probably due to the fact that those who were concerned were to be benefited and not the Treasury.

Mr. WALSH. In reply to the gentleman's question, I do not wish to take issue with him upon that statement. The information I am trying to secure now is whether or not we provide that we will pay them these salaries and permit them also to retain these fees? If not, what is the necessity for carrying the fee provision?

Mr. MONDELL. This is an item of appropriation to pay them, and I assume it would be applicable to the payment of their salaries, and could be used in the payment of salaries if carried in this form.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the gentleman will permit, the bill he refers to passed the House and Senate after these estimates had been considered by the committee and the sundry civil bill reported. The Department of Justice had made no estimate to us upon which we could base a recommendation different from that which is contained in this bill. I am informed that within the last day or two such an estimate has come to Congress and been sent over to the Senate. If this paragraph is passed in the form in which it now appears in the bill, when it goes to the Senate they can change it if they desire to provide an additional amount of money.

Mr. MONDELL. Can the gentleman inform us how much the estimate will be increased?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It will be $900,000 by reason of the new bill.

Mr. WALSH. Nine hundred thousand dollars, instead of $275,000?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, let us have no misunderstanding about this. This item is to pay fees due the clerks by the Government of the United States. The present clerks under existing law get their pay out of fees up to a certain amount. The Government contributes its share of the fees on business relating to the United States. The other day we passed a bill which, I suppose, is now in the hands of the President, if it has not been signed by him, providing for the payment of salaries to these clerks, providing that there should be no fees paid by the United States, and providing that the fees collected by the clerks from private parties should be covered into the Treasury; so that the amount of the appropriation for the payment of clerks' salaries has no relation whatever to the amount of the item carried in this bill.

Doubtless the law that was passed the other day will increase the compensation of clerks, because in many cases before they did not get fees enough to pay them the amount of the salary which the law would allow them to retain. The report on the bill said it would probably increase the amount of compensation. The only excuse for the passage of the bill was to abolish almost the last remnant of the law providing that Government officials should be paid from fees they collected from the people.

Mr. WALSH. If that be so, what is the necessity for carrying this item?

Mr. MANN. There is no necessity for this item in the bill, and, of course, if it remains in and becomes a law it will be superannuated and out of date, because the law we passed since provides that no part of it will be expended. There will have to be in a deficiency bill in the next session of Congress a provision providing for the payment of the salaries of these clerks or else it will have to be put into this bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It is that estimate that the Clerk informs me has been received for $900,000.

Mr. MANN. And that has doubtless gone to the Senate.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It has gone to the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. What about the provisos here?

Mr. MANN. The first proviso relates to the District of Columbia only. The second proviso relates to the clerk of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

Mr. WALSH. When absent from his official residence on official business.

Mr. MANN. I do not remember whether the bill we passed the other day related to the Circuit Court of Appeals or not. I may be mistaken, but my recollection was that it related primarily to the clerks of the District court.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, this is a useless appropriation, but the provisos may have some good effect, and I withdraw the reservation of a point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. I understood the gentleman from South Carolina had intended to propose an amendment striking out the first proviso.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have no objection if the gentleman moves to strike it out.

Mr. MONDELL. We have tried to legislate on that subject twice, and I think we have not legislated wisely now. One of the judges of the Supreme Court of the District, I think, explained to the gentleman from South Carolina why he hoped at this time that proviso would go out.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the gentleman move to strike it out?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the first proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MONDELL: Page 120, line 19, after the figures "$275,000" strike out all down to and including the word "courts" in line 1, page 121.

Mr. WALSH. By whom will the accounts be audited if the proviso goes out?

Mr. MONDELL. By the judges of the supreme court. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up the time of the House. I think until we have fuller information than we have on the subject at present it is better not to place that proviso in the bill. The judges of the Supreme Court of the District do not believe that it would aid in the transaction of the business of the court and I am inclined to agree with them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "further" in line 1, page 121.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FESS: Page 121, line 1, after the word "Provided" strike out the word "further."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For bailiffs and criers, not exceeding three bailiffs and one crier in each court, except in the southern district of New York and the northern district of Illinois: Provided, That all persons employed under section 715 of the Revised Statutes shall be deemed to be in actual attendance when they attend upon the order of the courts: Provided further, That no such persons shall be employed during vacation; expenses of circuit and district judges of the United States and the judges of the district courts of the United States in Alaska, Porto Rico, and Hawaii, as provided by section 259 of the act approved March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary"; meals and lodging for jurors in United States cases, and of bailiffs in attendance upon the same, when ordered by the court, and meals and lodging for jurors in Alaska, as provided by section 193, Title II, of the act of June 6, 1900; and compensation for jury commissioners, $5 per day, not exceeding three days for any one term of court, $250,000.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman—perhaps I ought to know about this, but I notice an exception in the first sentence in that paragraph "For bailiffs and criers, not exceeding three bailiffs and one crier in each court, except in the southern district of New York and the northern district of Illinois." To what does the exception apply, to the last clause or the first?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It means that they can have more in those districts.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I thought it might be possible that that would mean bailiffs and criers "except."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Oh, I think we can take it for granted that the Department of Justice knows how to construe this language.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I presume we may safely trust them to do that.

Mr. MANN. It has been there for many years.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous expenditures in the discretion of the Attorney General, fuel, forage, hay, light, water, stationery, fuel for generating steam, heating apparatus, burning bricks and lime; forage for issue to public animals, and hay and straw for bedding; not exceeding $500 for maintenance and repair of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles; blank books, blank forms, typewriting supplies, pencils and memorandum books for guards, books for use in chapel, paper, envelopes, and postage stamps for issue to prisoners; labor and materials for repairing steam heating plant, electric plant, and water circulation, and drainage; labor and materials for construction and repair of buildings; general supplies, machinery, and tools for use on farm and in shops, brickyard, quarry, limekiln, laundry, bathrooms, printing office, photograph gallery, stables, policing buildings and grounds; purchase of cows, horses, mules, wagons, harness, veterinary supplies, lubricating oils, office furniture, stoves, blankets, bedding, iron bunks, paints and oils, library books, newspapers and periodicals, and electrical supplies; payment of water supply, telegrams, telephone service, notarial and veterinary services; advertising in newspapers; fees to consulting physicians called to determine mental conditions of supposed insane prisoners, and for other services in cases of emergency; pay of extra guards or employees when deemed necessary by the Attorney General: Provided, That live stock may be exchanged or traded when authorized by the Attorney General, $150,000.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Last night, after I had discussed briefly the bond issue and had acquainted the House as best I could with regard to the cotton situation in the United States, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] said that when peace was finally agreed upon corn would go down to 35 to 40 cents a bushel, and wheat to about $1 a bushel, and cotton to 5 or 6 cents a pound. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the difference between corn and wheat and cotton. I do not agree with him as to the price of grain. Immediately following every war in the world, cotton has gone up. Cotton went up after the War between the States. In 1898 the price of cotton went up after the War with Spain. At this time there is the smallest cotton supply in the history of the world, as compared to the demand. If the gentleman thinks that cotton will go to 6 cents a pound, I invite him to watch the situation for the next 60 days. In our section in this fight we are entitled to the help of every State in the Union; and I hope that we will have the cooperation of the Members of every State, as the wheat-growing States have had the cooperation of the cotton-growing States in taking care of their wheat, which the Government is pledged to protect.

The cotton-growing States of the South are going to hold 4,000,000 bales of this crop; and if we continue to do it we can close down the mills of the United States in 60 days and shut down the mills of Europe in 30 days. As I stated last night, the financial institutions of the South are tied up in the cotton movement. The merchants of the South are locked up in the cotton movement. The cotton producers of the South are holding hard and fast with the merchants and the bankers.

Gentlemen, it is our money crop, and we are entitled to have the support of the other sections of the country in taking embargoes of all kinds off of this cotton and keeping the exchanges, as I said last night, from using fictitious stuff to beat down the price of actual cotton. We are going to fight this battle if we have to fight it alone, and I state again, as I did last night, unless restrictions are removed from cotton we can not buy bonds, because all that we have got is tied up in this cotton-holding movement—not all, but you know how it is, when you invest your main money supply in a great crop like that. Four million bales of cotton means several hundred million dollars. We need your help and we need your sympathy, but I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], whom we all respect and esteem, that the situation is not the same with cotton as it is with corn and wheat. The cotton supply to-day is 8,000,000 bales short of the world's demand. Cotton is exceedingly scarce; but if we hold this cotton—4,000,000 bales—the supply will be shorter this fall than now, because we are going to greatly reduce the cotton acreage. As soon as the Congress adjourns I with other gentlemen from the cotton-growing States will devote 30 days to touring those States urging the people to cut down their acreage, to cut it down and down and down, and to hold what they have got for two months or four months or six months or a year, and what will be the result this fall? If England is in this movement to beat down the price of cotton with other spinning interests of the Old World, they will not succeed, for they will force us to hold a part of this supply, and the acreage will be less, and cotton prices this fall will be 60 or 70 cents a pound, and maybe 75 cents. Mr. Chairman, there is no power on earth to prevent it. We produce more than half—nearly two-thirds—of the cotton supply of the world, and no country produces any cotton that is in competition with our cotton. They prduce a short staple of scrubby stuff in India, and that is the only country outside of our own that produces cotton in abundance, but it is not in competition with our cotton——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Not now; I will in a moment.

Egyptian cotton is a long-staple cotton. They produce about a million bales. They produce sea-island cotton in competition with that in South Carolina, Florida, and Georgia, but the great short-staple cotton of the United States, God Almighty has given us a monopoly of that, and if we cut that acreage this year and hold to the cotton we now have the price this fall will be 60 cents a pound, and we would get more for an 8,000,000-bale crop than for a 12,000,000-bale crop. Now, the question is whether we are going to permit foreign powers to combine and beat down this price in the hands of the producer here and buy it themselves and sell it to Holland and Spain and Japan and France and Austria and Germany and other countries later on for 75 cents to $1 a pound. Gentlemen, I am not in favor of that. I am in favor of taking the embargo off now if England is not willing, if France is not willing, if Belgium is not willing to permit us to ship cotton to Germany and Austria now, and permit us to sell Germany and Austria 2,000,000 bales, the amount they want, and store it in the United States until the allied nations say it can move. I stated that before, and that is my position now. What objection can there be to that? Are we going to tie ourselves up with these restrictions and hold them on our products and permit the producers of the United States to be held up and robbed of a fair price and living profit?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BLACK. I hope my colleague will not object.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read——

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman can not yield——

Mr. HEFLIN. I told the gentleman from Texas——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield; I have been recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. WALSH. I want to read——

Mr. HEFLIN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present, if the gentleman from Texas——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. If the gentleman from Texas will not allow me to have five minutes to plead in the interests of the cotton producers of the South, I make the point of no quorum. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], one of the greatest cotton-producing States in the South——

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman is so discourteous——

Mr. HEFLIN. I am not discourteous; I told the gentleman I would yield later. If the gentleman from Texas wants to deny the producers an opportunity to be heard——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. HEFLIN. I make the point of order of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, on the request of the other members of the Texas delegation, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. MANN. Count a quorum; there are plenty here.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a quorum present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], and for the delectation, edification, and benefit of the members of the committee I desire to read from the RECORD of yesterday just a short extract found on page 4295:

Mr. CANNON. Cotton after peace has come will sell for 5 and 6 cents a pound.

Mr. KITCHIN. If that should reach our friend HEFLIN, it would drive him crazy. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that appears as part of the official RECORD, but I am reminded of that old moss-back story that the gentleman from Alabama knows so well, because I think I have heard him relate it upon occasion, of the gentleman in the far western State who arrived in a little one-horse town and saw a great crowd proceeding up the street. He followed along in the procession and finally landed in a little country church, where a funeral was in progress. The mourners were there in great numbers, the church was crowded, and the stranger secured a seat in the rear of the edifice, and at one stage in the service the preacher arose and pronounced a few words of eulogy over the deceased. He finally said: "If there are any friends of our departed brother here who would like to say a few words, I will give them ample opportunity at this time." The widow and the friends occupying the mourners' seat were grieving and crying. There was every indication of grief there. But none of the friends took advantage of the opportunity presented. When finally, over in the corner of the church, an old gray-whiskered gentleman arose and said, "Parson, if there is nobody here wants to say anything about our departed brother, I would like to offer a few words upon the free and unlimited coinage of silver." [Laughter.]

Our friend from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] the other day, when we had a measure under consideration that had nothing to do with cotton, got up and orated on the cotton embargo, for which, by the way, his distinguished Executive and Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy is responsible, or his administration [laughter]; yesterday, when we had a bill providing for the issuance of short-term notes, the gentleman again delighted a large and intelligent assemblage upon the cotton situation. [Laughter.] To-night, when we are considering an item in the sundry civil bill relating to the support of the United States prisoners and the interment of deceased prisoners whose remains are unclaimed, once more he resurrects his theme, arises, and orates and discusses the cotton embargo.

I trust the remark of the leader of the majority, made in the colloquy with former Speaker CANNON last night, was made in a jocular way and that the symptoms which we have observed here are not the symptoms that were predicted, because I know there is nobody in this Chamber, on either side of the House, who would like to see the gentleman from Alabama arrive at any such condition as that, because, while we may not all agree with him, we all admire him and listen to him with a great deal of interest, sometimes mingled with amusement and sometimes mingled with concern. [Laughter.] And I trust the gentleman will see to it that now that the ship of state has brought his beloved Commander in Chief once more to the shores of America, that ere he takes his departure again from this side of the water he will succeed in getting into conference with him and arranging it so that this board that is threatening the existence of the cotton farmers of the South will be forced by Executive command to remove that embargo and remove their unholy hands from the sacred business of the cotton farmer of the South. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know who is to be recognized? The sundry civil bill is pending here.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman from Massachusetts has not the floor. He yielded the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts yielded the floor and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] is recognized.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I ask that the Clerk read, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

McNeil Island, Wash., Penitentiary: For subsistence, including the same objects specified under this head for the penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., and for supplies for guards, $20,000.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, it is said that Nero fiddled while Rome burned.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am not surprised, Mr. Chairman, that my good friend from Massachusetts and New England should rejoice——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

Mr. HEFLIN (continuing). While the price of cotton is being driven down.

Mr. BLANTON. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas will state the point of order.

Mr. HEFLIN. What is this curse that has come upon us? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Alabama is speaking out of order, Mr. Chairman. I make the point of order that the gentleman is speaking out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I raise the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman is speaking out of order. He is not confining himself to the amendment.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am trying to speak in the interest of the cotton producers of Texas and Alabama and all the cotton-growing States of the United States. I hope I have not offended the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who is here by the suffrage of the greatest cotton-growing State in the Union.

Mr. BLANTON. And yet the gentleman declined to yield to a question.

Mr. HEFLIN. I decline to yield while I am discussing the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. I insist upon my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Alabama was to strike out the last word, and the gentleman must confine himself to that motion.

Mr. HEFLIN. I was striking out the last word of the paragraph for the purpose of saying a few words with reference to the cotton question, and the gentleman from Texas was trying to prevent me from speaking.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The gentleman must proceed in order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Do I understand that the Chair says that it is not in order to discuss cotton?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to discuss the cotton question under a motion to strike out the paragraph. The Clerk will read.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, the question is to strike out the last word. Why should the last word stand? What is the merit of the last word? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is now proceeding in order. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Then, Mr. Chairman, in striking out the last word, which is connected with the speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], I do not see why I would not be permitted to say that the gentleman rejoices while the price of cotton is being beaten down, when he represents a spinning section of New England [laughter]——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order——

Mr. HEFLIN. And when they are now trying to transfer the power of the Republican Party from the West to New England why should I not be permitted to discuss that proposition? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support of inmates, including groceries, flour, feed, meats, dry goods, leather, shoes, gas, fuel, hardware, furniture, tableware, farm implements, seeds, harness and repairs to same, fertilizers, books and periodicals, stationery, printing, entertainments, plumbing, painting, glazing, medicines and medical attendance, stock, maintenance, repair, and operation of passenger-carrying vehicles, fencing, roads, all repairs to buildings, and other necessary items, including compensation, not exceeding $1,500, for additional labor or services, for identifying and pursuing escaped inmates, for rewards for their recapture, not exceeding $800 for the purchase of a motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle, and not exceeding $500 for transportation and other necessary expenses incident to securing suitable homes for discharged boys, $20,000.

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Chairman, I was not present this evening when the item was reached regarding the Alaskan Railroad. I desire to ask unanimous consent to insert some information, which I think will be valuable to the Members of Congress, on the Alaskan Railroad.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD some information which he has received in regard to the Alaskan Railroad. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. What is this information? Is it official information?

Mr. KETTNER. Official information. Being from the Pacific coast, I am very much interested in the Alaskan Railroad.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection, but I would like to know what it is.

Mr. KETTNER. It is a statement that I wrote to the Secretary for, in regard to the progress they were making on the Alaskan Railroad.

Mr. MANN. Is it substantially different from the statement they made in their estimate on the same thing?

Mr. KETTNER. I do not know.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to its insertion.

Mr. MONDELL. Some gentleman requested leave to insert that statement, or a similar statement, in the RECORD this afternoon.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] made that request in behalf of the gentleman from California [Mr. KETTNER], who was then absent.

Mr. KETTNER. I subsequently spoke to the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM], and he said he had no objection, and said he was going to put in a statement in regard to the matter, and subsequently the House gave him the permission. I think the statement I have to submit is a proper paper to be published in connection with the subject.

Mr. MANN. I think it is proper to be published.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the paper referred to:

The Alaskan Railroad, which is under construction from Seward to Fairbanks, is about two-thirds done. It has been built without graft; every dollar has gone into actual work or material. It has been built without giving profits to any large contractors, for it has been constructed entirely by small contracts or by day's labor. It has been built without touch of politics; every man on the road has been chosen exclusively for ability and experience. (I do not know the politics of any one of the 7,000 men who are or have been connected with the road, excepting Mr. Riggs, who is now governor of Alaska.) It has been well and solidly built as a permanent road, not an exploiting road. It has been built for as little money as private parties could have built it, as all competent independent engineers who have seen the road advise.

In the summer of 1918 I sent Mr. Edwin F. Wendt, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in charge of valuation of the railroads of the United States from Pittsburgh to Boston, to make an investigation into the manner in which the Alaskan Railroad was constructed and its cost. He reported to me as follows:

"In concluding, it is not amiss to again state that after the full study which was given to the property during our trip we are satisfied that the project is being executed rapidly and efficiently by men of experience and ability. It is believed that it is being handled as cheaply as private contractors could handle it under the circumstances."

Mr. Wendt had been connected for 25 years with the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Road as an engineer in charge of construction and maintenance, and was designated to make this investigation by me upon the recommendation of Mr. Prouty, of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Recently I had occasion to call in Mr. Wells, chief construction engineer of the Southern Railway Co., who reviewed the cost figures of the Alaskan Engineering Commission, and he said that he was astonished that the work cost so little; that on his own road during the past year he had paid more per yard for earth and rock work than it had cost in Alaska during the same period.

The road has not been built as soon as expected because each year we have exhausted our appropriation before the work contemplated had been done. We could not say in October of one year what the cost of anything a year or more later would be, and we ran out of money earlier than anticipated. It has not been built as cheaply as expected because it has been built on a rising market for everything that went into its construction from labor, lumber, food supplies, machinery, and steel to rail and ocean transportation. I believe, however, it can safely be said that no other piece of Government construction or private construction done during the war will show a less percentage of increase over a cost that was estimated more than four years ago.

The men have been well housed and well fed. Their wages have been good and promptly paid; there has been but one strike and that was four years ago and was settled by Department of Labor experts fixing the scale of wages. The men have had the benefit of a system of compensation for damages like that in the Reclamation Service and Panama Canal. They have had excellent hospital service, and our camps and towns have been free of typhoid fever and malaria. That the men like the work is testified by the fact that hundreds who "came out" the past two years attracted by the high wages of war industries, are now anxious to return to Alaska, and for them and in the interest of the Territory, I think we should have a large enough appropriation to speedily complete the road.

There has been but one setback in construction, and that was the washing out of 12 miles of track along the Nenana River. This is a glacial stream which, when the snows melt, comes down at times with irresistible force. In this instance it abandoned its long accustomed way and cut into a new bed and through trees that had been standing for several generations, tearing out part of the track which had been laid. But this damage has been repaired and the road relaid in what is thought to be a safer place. Such accidents may be expected on any road laid through the western mountains. There is not a single railroad from the Copper River road in Alaska to the Southern Pacific in Arizona which has not been closed for weeks, and sometimes months at a time, because of such washouts. Nor is there a western railroad which has not been compelled to relocate scores and scores of miles of track.

ALASKAN ENGINEERING COMMISSION.

The credit for the work done is to be given to the men and to the Alaskan Engineering Commission who have had charge of construction. This commission consisted of Mr. Edes, Lieut. Mears, United States Army, and Mr. Riggs. These gentlemen were appointed by the President upon my recommendation; Mr. Edes, because of 30 years' experience in locating and constructing railroads in the far West for the Santa Fe, Southern Pacific, and other railroad companies; Lieut. Mears, because of his experience as an engineer on the Northern Pacific under Mr. Stevens, and later in the construction of the Panama Railroad under Col. Goethals; Mr. Riggs, because he had spent many years in Alaska and surveyed the Alaskan-Canadian boundary from the sea to the Arctic Ocean, and was familiar with the Alaskan people and conditions under which work could be done in Alaska. Within the past year Lieut. Mears returned to active service in the Army and Mr. Riggs was appointed Governor of Alaska.

The work of locating and constructing the road has been left in their hands entirely. The only instruction which they received from me was that they should build the road as if they were working for a private concern, selecting the best men for the work irrespective of politics or pressure of any kind. I have not asked them to appoint one man. As a result we have a force that has been gathered from the construction camps of the Western railroads, made up of men of experience and proved capacity. That they have done their work efficiently, honestly, and at reasonable cost is my belief.

ROAD CONSTRUCTED.

The road as projected is to run from Seward to Fairbanks, a distance of 471 miles. In addition there is a line to the Matanuska coal fields (completed) of 38 miles.

The southern end of the road is the old Alaska Northern, running for 71 miles north of Seward, which was bought.

The northern end of the road is a part of the old Tanana Valley Road (7 miles), leading directly into Fairbanks, which was also bought. (This was part of a line 44½ miles long running out of Fairbanks, but 37 miles of this road is not counted in any mileage figures here given.)

Between the 71 miles of the Alaska Northern on the south and the 7 miles of Tanana Valley road on the north there was a stretch of 393 miles to be built through a waste. Of this there has been built 206 miles of main-line track, leaving 187 miles of this direct road from Seward to Fairbanks to be yet constructed. But of this stretch 48 miles have been cleared and graded, ready for track, and 30 miles have been cleared.

In addition, the Matanuska line running into the Matanuska coal field, 38 miles, has been completed.

So that out of the total of road projected of 509 miles, there has been fully constructed all but 187 miles. And of this 78 miles of right of way have been either cleared and graded or cleared.

There has also been constructed 30 miles of yard tracks, switches, sidings, etc., not included in the main-line mileage given above.

The total of track built amounts to 274 miles, made up of 244 miles of main-line track and 30 miles of siding.

A full statement of the road constructed and purchased is as follows:

Miles of road constructed	244.0
Miles of yard tracks, etc	30.0
Alaska Northern, purchased	70.9
Tanana Valley, purchased	44.4
Total	389.3

COST PER MILE.

It is not possible during the construction of a railroad to tell what it costs per mile, because all the foundation work, the construction of bases from which to work, the equipment for construction, and much of the material is a charge which must be spread over the entire completed line. If the cost per mile is figured when but a few miles of road have been built, it might be said to cost a million dollars a mile. This road four years ago could be said to have cost ten times as much per mile as it could be said to cost to-day. So that as to an uncompleted road the best estimate of cost is one that is approximate.

The best estimate that can be made to-day as to the newly constructed road is that it has cost between $70,000 and $80,000 per main-line mile, or between $60,000 and $70,000 per mile of track.

This cost per mile includes the building of the most difficult and expensive stretch of line along the entire route from Seward to Fairbanks—that running along Turnagain Arm, which is sheer rock rising precipitously from the sea for nearly 30 miles. There are miles of this road which have cost $200,000 per mile. Even to blast a mule trail in one portion of this route cost $25,000 a mile.

This cost per mile is increased by reason of the fact that it includes the expense of 48 miles of clearing and grading new right of way and of 30 miles of additional clearing and 30 miles of yard tracks, sidings, and switches.

The basis for the estimated cost of the main-line mileage above given is a table prepared by Mr. Wendt, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as an expression of the correct deductions from total expenditures that should be made in arriving at cost exclusive of equipment and terminals which are necessary to the road as a going concern and whose cost should be spread over the whole road when completed.

The new construction exclusive of sidings, as we have seen, is 244 miles. The total which has been appropriated for the road is $31,086,684.32. Of this amount there was a balance on hand December 31, 1918, of $1,214,407.15, thus making the amount expended $29,876,277.17.

But all of this has not gone into new construction. Much of it has gone into the purchase of the old roads referred to (Alaska Northern and Tanana Valley) and their partial rehabilitation, to the construction of two permanent towns (Anchorage and Nenana) as termini, for rolling stock, material, and supplies on hand, etc.

The full table of deductions made by Mr. Wendt is as follows:

Purchase Alaska Northern Railroad	$1,157,839.49
Its rehabilitation, repair, etc	2,403,563.75
Purchase Tanana Valley Railroad	300,000.00
Its rehabilitation, etc	46,407.00
Material and supplies on hand and in transit	2,889,248.56
Operation and maintenance expense	628,626.99
Town site expenditures (reimbursable in part)	304,731.52
Rolling stock for use in operation, consisting of locomotives, freight cars, passenger cars, etc	570,741.54
Construction equipment, consisting of steam shovels, ditchers, unloaders, scrapers, etc	1,382,136.59
Marine equipment	244,058.16
Coal mines	193,725.34
New wharf at Anchorage	124,618.16
Shop and plant machinery	126,703.48
Machine shops, engine houses, etc	218,314.34
Plants at Anchorage and Nenana, consisting of office buildings, storehouses, quarters for employees, mess houses, hospitals, heating and lighting plants, freight-handling machinery, etc	1,538,947.17
	12,129,662.09
	29,872,277.17
	12,129,662.09
	17,742,615.08

If now we deduct this amount, which should be excluded as not properly chargeable to construction cost of new main line road from the total amount expended, the result is as follows:

Amount expended	$29,872,277.17
Less deductions	12,129,662.09
Cost of newly constructed road	17,742,615.08
Cost per main line of track	72,716.00

If the sidings and yard tracks are included, the cost per mile of track would be approximately $64,754. (No allowance is made for the 78 miles of grading and clearing.)

In arriving at his cost per mile Mr. Wendt has deducted as part of his cost construction equipment which cost $1,382,136.59, consisting of steam shovels, ditchers, unloaders, scrapers, and other tools. This was in large part bought in the first year of the work partially from the Panama Commission, and is in the opinion of Mr. Wendt worth as much to-day as when purchased, owing to the increase in values since the war. Its value evidently is what it would bring on the completion of the road. Had private contractors built the road they would have had it as salvage. Much of it would have had to be bought for the maintenance of the road after completion. Whether it will be worth what it cost or how much less at that time is a question no one can answer. This is also true as to marine equipment.

The two termini which have been built at Anchorage and Nenana are permanent towns. They were built not as construction camps, but with a view to the necessities of the road in the future, as permanent parts of a working railroad, and would have had to be built after construction was completed in order to properly operate and maintain the road. It is to be noted that this work has been undertaken in a region where it was necessary to build through a forested wilderness, where there were no wharves at the water's edge (where, indeed, a way had to be dredged from the channel to the wharf); where there were no roads, no towns, no experienced labor, and where everything had to be imported a distance of from 1,500 to 5,000 miles. And it was thought best to build not a mere pioneer road like those that are driven into our western forests for the bringing out of lumber or for the reaching of some coal or gold mine, but a road that would attract passenger travel for its scenic beauties and be always the main connecting line between the interior of Alaska and the ocean. For this reason the work has been done not with the end of having so many miles of road built but of having a complete road with all the equipment for its operation, which includes not only cars, locomotives, and tracks, but complete and well-supplied bases and developed mines for fuel.

Two estimates were made in 1914 by the Alaskan Engineering Commission as to the cost of the road: (1) From Portage Bay to Fairbanks, at an estimated cost of $59,742 per mile; (2) from Seward to Fairbanks, in which the figure estimated for the road from Kern Creek, or mile 72 north, where all of the new construction has been done, was $55,340 per mile.

The only Government-built railroad—that across the Isthmus of Panama—cost $221,052 per mile. The only two recently built railroads in the United States are (1) the Virginian, built by H. H. Rogers, which cost, exclusive of equipment, $151,000 per mile, with labor at from $1.35 to $1.75 per day, and all machinery, fuel, rails, and supplies at its door, and (2) the Milwaukee line to Puget Sound, which is estimated as having cost $130,000 per mile, exclusive of equipment.

PRESENT CONDITION.

The work has been conducted with its main base at Anchorage, which is at the head of Cooks Inlet. This point was chosen as the nearest point from which to construct a railroad into the Matanuska coal fields. That was the primary objective of the railroad, to get at the Matanuska coal. From Anchorage it was also intended to drive further north through the Susitna Valley and across Broad Pass, and to the south along Turnagain Arm toward the Alaska Northern track. To secure coal for Alaska was the first need. So, in addition to Anchorage as a base, one was also started at Nenana, on the Tanana River, from which to reach the Nenana coal fields lying to the south. If these two fields were open one would supply the coast of Alaska and one the interior. This program has been acted upon, with the result that the Matanuska field is open to tidewater, with a down-grade road all the way. The Nenana road has been pushed far enough south to touch a coal mine near the track, which may obviate the immediate necessity for reaching into the Nenana field proper. From Seward north and from Anchorage south the road has been built, so that last fall there was through communication from Seward to Anchorage, Matanuska, and the Susitna Valley.

There is an open stretch across Broad Pass to connect the Susitna Valley with the road coming down from Nenana, and another reach of a few miles on the north of the Tanana River before connecting with the Tanana Valley road outside of Fairbanks. These gaps closed there will be through connection between Seward and Fairbanks. The accompanying map shows the road's condition.

OVERHEAD.

The road has been done by men on the job in Alaska, not by men in Washington. The only bureau maintained in Washington consisted of four clerks in one room. All the rest of the force is in Alaska with the exception of the purchasing division in Seattle.

The commission adopted the system of construction approved by the most competent engineers consulted at the beginning of construction—a combination of letting out the work to small contractors and of day's labor. The only contractor who ever talked of building the road asked a guarantee against loss from the Government—what we now know as a "cost plus contract"—and as this would involve a large staff of Government superintendents and checking officials, with no guarantee of a minimum cost to the Government, but every reason to believe that a maximum cost would be reached, it was thought wise to follow the course we have pursued. As the price of labor, supplies, and other things have risen, we have not had to pay a contractor a percentage on the increasing cost.

In 1918 the wage employees numbered 3,329 and the salaried employees 725.

The road has 1,982 wage employees and 441 salaried employees, as estimated for in the Book of Estimates for 1920. (A clerical error in this book transposed "Salaries" and "Wages," so as to make it appear that a greater amount was proposed for salaries than for wages.)

Taking the week ending Saturday, May 18, 1918, as a typical week, the number of employees and their distribution as to whether they were engaged in supervisory and clerical places or as workmen was as follows:

	Total.	Supervisory and clerical.	Workmen.
Engineer in charge	35	31	4
Shop and yards	53	9	44
Track, bridge, ballast	257	8	249
Receiving and forwarding agent	35	21	14
Machine shops	62	4	58
Marine ways and dredge Sperm	100	4	96
Store department	90	26	64
Employment bureaus	18	5	15
Transportation department	34	2	32
Disbursing office	7	7	.....
Accounting department	13	13	.....
Base hospital	15	3	12
Townsite office	15	2	13
Telephone and telegraph department	36	7	29
Mining department	140	2	138
Turnagain Arm district	185	5	180
Talkeetna district	1	.....	1
Location surveys	20	2	18
Total	1,116	.....	967
Stationmen and laborers	159	.....	159
Grand total all employees Anchorage Division.	1,275	151	1,126

RATES.

It is difficult to know what rates should be charged on such a railroad as this, which is as yet in the process of building, which originates so little traffic as to be negligible, and will not in all likelihood for some years pay operating and maintenance charges, without any return on investment. Plainly, the traffic can not be made to bear charges that would be reasonable from the standpoint of making the railroad pay its own way. To do this would be to retard the growth of Alaska and of the railroad itself. The freight rates on the Alaska Railroad are from 25 to 50 per cent of the rates charged by other Alaska roads. The Copper River and the Skagway roads charge from twice as much to four times as much as does the Government road. If, therefore, there is anything in the test so often applied by the Interstate Commerce Commission in judging of the reasonableness of a rate by the rates charged on similar traffic on neighboring roads, the rates on the Alaska road certainly meet that test.

Here are a few comparisons in cents per 100 pounds on less than carload lots for a 60-mile haul on the Alaskan Railroad and the Copper River Railroad:

	Alaska Railroad.	Copper River Railroad.
	Cents.	Cents.
Household goods, secondhand	32	160
Canned goods	49	109
Flour	49	109
Eggs	69	216
Fruit, dried	49	134

The rates now in force on the Alaska road are approximately the same as those which the Railroad Commission of the State of Washington approved on the Seattle, Port Angeles & Western Railroad between Maynard and Majestic, a distance of 60 miles, as the following comparison furnished by the Interstate Commerce Commission shows:

Commodities.	Government railroads.	Seattle, P. A. & Western R. R.
	Per ton.	Per ton.
Household goods	$6.40	$13.80
Canned goods	9.80	9.30
Flour	9.80	9.30
Eggs	13.80	11.50
Dried fruits	9.80	10.50
Fresh fruit	16.20	13.80
Meat, cured	9.80	9.30
Kerosene	11.40	10.50
Sugar	9.80	9.30
Vegetables	16.20	20.70
Butter	13.80	11.50
Hardware	13.80	11.50

It would hardly be regarded as unfair to say that on the Alaskan road the rates should be twice as high as on the main line of the Northern Pacific in Washington, considering the fact that the Northern Pacific has several hundred thousand times the density of traffic per mile that the Alaskan Railroad has. Yet a comparison of the two rates shows that the rates on the Alaskan road are not that high by from 25 to 50 per cent. They are, indeed, but a small percentage higher than many of the rates on the Southern Railway running immediately out of this city, which carries in any one hour more traffic than the Alaskan road carries in a year. I am satisfied, however, that the rates in existence on the Alaskan road are not those which will best promote the interest of the Territory and in the end that of the road. And last summer I asked Mr. E. O. McCormick, vice president of the Southern Pacific in charge of traffic, to make a study of the actual conditions in Alaska with the purpose of devising a simpler tariff which would induce whatever traffic could be induced to move over that road and still preserve some justifiable relation between commodities. This is not an easy task. And there must be some experiments tried before anything like a stable schedule can be arrived at.

WATER TRANSPORTATION.

One of the serious disadvantages that any new enterprise in Alaska suffers under is the long distance by water which all machinery and supplies must be carried. During the war this has been particularly embarrassing in the carrying on of this work. Because of the highness of the rates charged and the uncertainty of the movement, the commission gave over employing the regular lines and chartered a transport from the War Department which ran from Seattle to Anchorage for two seasons. This service is invaluable to the railroad. While we were without it last season, some such arrangement must be renewed if the railroad is to be completed at as fair a figure as has been thus far maintained. Some months since negotiations were entered into with the Shipping Board looking to the establishing of a line between Puget Sound and Alaskan ports which would serve the railroad, or at least to the putting on of a single boat to Anchorage and Seward. The board offered to charter to the commission a new steel ship at $25,000 per month, which was thought to be too high a figure, and negotiations are still under way in the hope that this offer can be bettered.

MATANUSKA COAL.

By decisions of the Commissioner of the Land Office all of the claims in the Matanuska coal field were set aside, and by act of Congress a leasing bill was put into effect over the entire field. Under this law a number of claims must be reserved to the Government. The field was surveyed and some of the most promising portions of the field have been so reserved.

Two leases have been entered into by the Government, one with Lars Netland, a miner, who has as a backer Mr. Fontana, a business man of San Francisco, and the other to Oliver La Duke and associates. Neither of these parties has any other interests of any kind, so far as is known, in Alaska or any connection with any railroad, and neither of them has been successful in developing any large amount of coal. There are many thousands of acres in this field which are open for lease and which will be leased to any responsible parties who will undertake their development. There is no possibility of monopolizing this field, even if some one wished to do so, for the Government reserves are kept to be operated in case such monopoly should arise. Thus far, however, the Government in operating its own mine has been no more successful than the private lessees, for the coal is so badly broken and faulted that exploration work to follow the seam must be undertaken before development work can be wisely done. And this is being undertaken. Government experts who have examined this field do not promise without further exploring a larger output of coal from this field than 150,000 tons a year.

POPULATION.

The population of Alaska has fallen off during the war. She sent, I am told, 5,000 men into the Army, the largest proportion to population sent by any part of the United States. The high cost of labor and materials closed some of the gold mines, and the attractive wages offered by war industries drew labor from Alaska to the mainland. All prospecting practically closed. But with the return of peace there is evidence of a new movement toward that Territory, which should be given added confidence in its future by the completion of the Alaskan Railroad.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, National Training School for Boys, $60,136.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. SHERLEY, as Speaker pro tempore, having assumed the chair, Mr. SUMNERS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16104) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTIONS AND SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolutions and bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 217. Joint resolution admitting into the United States 560 barrels of Spanish wine ordered by Luigi Bick, of New York City, before the passage of the food-control act prohibiting the importation of distilled spirits, the delivery of which was delayed on account of war conditions until after that act went into effect; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

S. J. Res. 207. Joint resolution admitting into the United States 35 puncheons of Gordon's sloe gin, ordered by E. LaMontagne's Sons, of New York, before the passage of the food-control act prohibiting the importation of distilled spirits, the delivery of which was delayed on account of war conditions until after that act went into effect; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

S. 5556. An act to provide for the erection of memorials and the entombment of bodies in the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater in Arlington National Cemetery, Va.; to the Committee on the Library.

S. 5323. An act to authorize the Governor of the Territory of Hawaii to acquire privately owned lands and rights of way within the boundaries of the Hawaii National Park; to the Committee on Territories.

S. 5224. An act to prohibit intoxicating liquors and prostitution within the Canal Zone, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 5442. An act for the relief of the owner of the steam lighter Cornelia; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 4517. An act for the relief of the owner of the steamship Matoa; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1102. An act for the relief of Simon M. Preston; to the Committee on Claims.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 13037. An act to amend the fiftieth article of war;

H. R. 13306. An act to authorize the payment of allotments out of the pay of enlisted men in certain cases in which these payments have been discontinued;

H. R. 13366. An act permitting any person who has served in the United States Army, Navy, or Marine Corps in the present war to retain his uniform and personal equipment, and to wear the same under certain conditions;

H. R. 13035. An act to amend section 4 of Chapter V of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918, and to make said amendment retroactive;

H. R. 15950. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Halifax, in the State of North Carolina, to construct a bridge across the Roanoke River;

H. R. 13394. An act to extend the time for the completion of the dams across the Savannah River by authority granted to Twin City Power Co. by an act approved February 29, 1908, as amended by acts approved June 3, 1912, and March 1, 1916;

H. R. 12211. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 13308. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 5279. An act to authorize the resumption of voluntary enlistment in the Regular Army, and for other purposes.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, what is going to be taken up to-morrow?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I understand that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations desires to take up the general deficiency bill, which he expects to report to-morrow morning. If not, I am going to endeavor to go on with the sundry civil bill.

Mr. MANN. Will the general deficiency bill be printed, so that Members can have access to it to-morrow?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. My information is that it will be printed so that Members can have access to it.

Mr. MANN. So that that bill can come up?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Can the gentleman state further whether any of the pending conference reports will be taken up?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. They have the right of way. I do not know whether they will be taken up or not.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman can give no information to the House on that subject?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am sorry that I can not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

WATER POWER.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a complete conference report agreement on the water-power bill (S. 1419); and, although I believe that at this stage of the session the rule does not require the printing of the conference report in the RECORD, I ask that the conference report and statement be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee presents a conference report, which, with the accompanying statement, will be printed under the rule.

PORT OF ENTRY, BAR HARBOR, ME. (H. DOC. NO. 1831).

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The sundry civil act approved August 1, 1914, contains the following provision, viz:

"The President is authorized from time to time, as the exigencies of the service may require, to rearrange, by consolidation or otherwise, the several customs-collection districts and to discontinue ports of entry by abolishing the same or establishing others in their stead: Provided, That the whole number of customs-collection districts, ports of entry, or either of them, shall at no time be made to exceed these now established and authorized, except as the same may hereafter be provided by law: Provided further, That hereafter the collector of customs of each customs-collection district shall be officially designated by the number of the district for which he is appointed, and not by the name of the port where the headquarters are situated; and the President is authorized from time to time to change the location of headquarters in any customs-collection district, as the needs of the service may require: And provided further, That the President shall, at the beginning of each regular session, submit to Congress a statement of all acts, if any, done hereunder, and the reasons therefor."

Pursuant to the requirement of the third proviso to said provision, I have to state that by Executive order dated June 1, 1918, effective June 15, 1918, Bar Harbor, Me., was made a port of entry in customs-collection district No. 1, of which Portland is the headquarters port.

This action was taken because the volume of business arising at Bar Harbor warranted the designation of said place as a port of entry.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 26 February, 1919.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday, February 27, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the president of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., transmitting annual report for the year 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1830); to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the President of the United States, inclosing with his approval a proposed draft of legislation recommended by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics for the regulation of civil aerial navigation, including an estimate of appropriation, for expenses incident thereto (H. Doc. No. 1828); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War, submitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation, required by the War Department for "General appropriations, Quartermaster Corps, 1919" (H. Doc. No. 1829); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. VOLSTEAD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13581) to provide for the enforcement of war prohibition, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1143), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MANSFIELD: A bill (H. R. 16180) fixing the rates of postal charges on mail matter of the first class, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. BIRCH: A bill (H. R. 16181) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Rockaway, N. J., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LEVER: A bill (H. R. 16184) to amend section 5 and section 8 of the United States cotton-futures act, approved August 11, 1916, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H. R. 16185) for the promotion of the general welfare, and to provide capital for the development by land colonization of the agricultural resources of the Nation; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. HUMPHREYS: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 436) providing for the appointment by each Member of the House of Representatives of one secretary and one clerk, whose names shall be placed on the rolls and paid in monthly installments; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. LANGLEY: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 437) extending for a total period of one year the grace period for the payment of premium on military and naval insurance policies in the case of any honorably discharged officer or member of the enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By the SPEAKER: Memorial from the Legislature of the State of New Mexico, memorializing the Congress of the United States to legislate with respect to the reclamation of swamp, arid, waste, and undeveloped lands to aid honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CAREW: A bill (H. R. 16182) granting a pension to Alfred J. Walker; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WALTON: A bill (H. R. 16183) granting a pension to Elizabeth V. Harris; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CRAMTON: A bill (H. R. 16186) granting an increase of pension to John Paul; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BURROUGHS: Petition of International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local No. 513, Manchester, N. H., J. A. Kenney, president; H. B. McKeon, recording secretary; R. S. Putney, financial secretary; advocating the establishment at Washington, D. C., of a committee through whom the telephone employees throughout the country may negotiate any requests for wage increases or betterments of working conditions; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, telegrams in favor of daylight saving from M. J. DeSaules, Dover, N. H., and James Kirkbright, Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., Nashua, N. H.; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, telegrams from the following persons and organizations, all within the State of New Hampshire, advocating the continuance of the United States Employment Service of the Department of Labor: New Hampshire Ice Co., by Arthur Day; Reeds Laundry; A. G. Davis, Merrimack County, agricultural agent; Holt Bros. Manufacturing Co., E. J. Hatch, president; Concord Foundry Co.; the George L. Theobald Building Mover; Shepard Bros. & Co.; Eagle Hotel; Highway Department; and W. S. Kaime Livery Stable, all of Concord; Draftsmen's Union, No. 4, International Federation of Draftsmen's Unions, American Federation of Labor, W. B. Collier, recording secretary; and Local Union, No. 230, International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths and Helpers, Percy Durgin, president, E. S. F. Pickering, secretary, both of Portsmouth, N. H.; Carpenters Local No. 1616, A. H. Marois, president, A. Nadeau, secretary; International Molders Local No. 257, Cornelius Hagerty, secretary, D. J. Sullivan, president; and H. A. Burque, all of Nashua; International Brotherhood Stationary Firemen, J. H. Featherstone, secretary, Franklin; and Central Labor Union, Earl C. Lane, secretary, Berlin; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, telegrams from the following persons and organizations, all within the State of New Hampshire, advocating the continuance of the United States Employment Service of the Department of Labor: Hon. James W. Remick; Concord Pipe Co., by M. Mulcahey; Matson Machine Co.; Locke Bullock; P. H. Larkin & Co., by Barry Larkin; Washington Street Market, by James Martin, manager; Concord Charity Organization, by Miss Jackson; Norris Baking Co., by David Taylor, manager; Elysian Farm, by Arthur H. Tenny; Concord Press, by H. Tarrant, manager; New Hampshire Spinning Co., by George W. Rooney, superintendent; Mrs. O. E. Richardson; and Concord Cash Market, by E. J. Nolan, manager, all of Concord; and Red Cross Committee, by Dana A. Emery, president, of Manchester; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, telegrams from the following persons and organizations, all within the State of New Hampshire, advocating the continuance of the United States Employment Service of the Department of Labor: Wales Line Co., J. A. Hassan, superintendent; Children's Home, Mrs. Sarah S. Wyatt, president; William Goss, cashier Merchants National Bank; Caroline H. Garland, librarian Dover Public Library; and Hon. George H. Yeaton, ex-county commissioner, all of Dover; Rumford Building and Loan Association, Isaac M. Savage, treasurer; and C. M. and A. W. Rolfe Sash & Blind Co., by Harold F. Rolfe, both of Concord; R. D. Hetzel, president New Hampshire College, of Durham; United Textile Workers and Central Labor Union, both of Lebanon; Tilton Electric Light & Power Co., William H. Moses, president, of Tilton; Thomas F. Nolan, grand knight, Manchester Council Knights of Columbus; Salvation Army, Herbert H. Saul, adjutant; Soldiers and Sailors Welfare Committee, Hon. Harry H. Spaulding, chairman; and Frank C. Livingston, chairman Community Labor Board, all of Manchester; Franklin Central Labor Union, R. W. Powell, secretary, Franklin; and Central Labor Union, R. S. Cotton, president, and William Fraser, secretary, both of Nashua; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. CAREW: Petition of the Consumers' League of New York, urgently requesting that the United States Employment Service be made a permanent bureau in the Department of Labor; to the Committee on Labor.

Also, petition of the Republican Club of New York, opposing indefinite retention by Federal Government of the railroads, telegraphs, telephones, and trans-Atlantic cable lines, and especially opposing Government control of railroads for five years; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of New York Wholesale Grocers' Association, advocating the adjustment of postal rates so that each class of mail shall pay the full cost of its service, and that only; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of Periodical Publishers' Association of America, indorsing daylight-saving system; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DARROW: Protests of Pennsylvania State Chamber of Commerce, and Philadelphia Bourse, Philadelphia Board of Trade, Philadelphia Cricket Club, Huntingdon Valley Country Club, William M. Lloyd Co., A. J. Reach Co., J. G. Brill Co., Madeira, Hill & Co., S. Rosenau & Co., H. Rosenberger, Joseph M. Jennings, C. E. Wyatt, and A. Saxon, of Philadelphia, Pa., against the repeal of the daylight-saving law; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. DOOLING: Petition of Periodical Publishers' Association of America, indorsing the daylight-saving system and protesting against any effort for its repeal; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ELSTON: Petition of Twentieth Century Club of Berkeley, Cal., favoring entrance of the United States into a league of nations; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. ESCH: Petition of Freedmen's Aid Society of Methodist Episcopal Church, asking for passage of law for the suppressing of lynching; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GALLIVAN: Petition of International Brotherhood Stationary Firemen, J. H. Featherstone, secretary, asking for appropriation to continue the United States Employment Service; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, petition of Shepard Bros. & Co., W. S. Kaince livery stable, Concord Ice Co., Holt Bros. Manufacturing Co., the George L. Theobald Building Mover, Reed's Laundry, Eagle Hotel, Highway Department, Concord Foundry, and Merrimack County agricultural agent, all of Concord, N. H., asking for appropriation to continue United States Employment Service; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, petitions of Boston Insurance Co., and J. Robinovitz, superintendent of Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., of Roxbury, Mass.; Wright and Ditson, Boston, Mass.; Longwood Cricket Club, S. S. Pierce Co. (by E. J. Preston, treasurer), O. E. Linscott (superintendent Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.), and Walworth Manufacturing Co., all of South Boston, Mass., protesting against repeal of daylight-saving law; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petitions of Lawrence Rodney, superintendent of Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.; Kistler, Lesh & Co.; Brown & Adams; and Pilgrim Rubber Footwear Co., all of Boston, Mass.; W. H. Dennison, Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., Quincy, Mass.; M. H. Keenan, superintendent of Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., Dorchester, Mass.; and M. A. Ryan, superintendent of Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., Roxbury, Mass., protesting against repeal of daylight-saving law; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH: Petition of the McGraw Tire & Rubber Co., of East Palestine, Ohio, protesting against repeal of daylight-saving law; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Petition of various citizens of Stellacoom, Wash., favoring legislation to deport persons who renounced their citizenship to avoid military service; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania: Petition of Lutheran, Methodist Episcopal, and Presbyterian churches of Montoursville, Pa., with reference to polygamy in the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: Petition of R. C. Schaffter, of Baltimore, Md., urging passage of Senate bill 5464 and House bill 15402; to the Committee on Education.

Also, petition of Merchants' & Manufacturers' Association, of Baltimore, Md., protesting against repeal of daylight-saving law; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of J. F. Ireton and others, asking for passage of United States service employment bill; to the Committee on Labor.

Also, petitions of Morgan Mill Work Co.; E. W. Bartol, superintendent Metropolitan Life Insurance Co.; Commercial Credit Co.; R. C. Shaffter and 50 employees; and A. Schusster and 45 field employees, all of Baltimore, Md., protesting against repeal of daylight-saving law; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Maryland Council of Defense in favor of United States Employment Service; to the Committee on Labor.

Also, petition of Maryland Branch of the Anti-Prohibition League, protesting against the war-time prohibition act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Pomona Grange, Talbot County, Md., unanimously indorsing Senate bill 4987 and House bill 15400, to establish a national department of education; to the Committee on Education.

Also, petition of J. Maurice Buchheimer, Baltimore, Md., relating to tax rates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of W. N. Brewington, Wicomico News, Salisbury, Md., asking protection for the potash industry; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of county superintendents, Baltimore, Md., indorsing the Towner bill (H. R. 15400); to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. MAHER: Petition of Lady Jefferson Democratic Club of the fifteenth assembly district of Brooklyn, N. Y., against the Hoke Smith educational bill; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. SCHALL: Petition of Commercial Telegraphers' Union, Minneapolis Local, No. 8, indorsing the proposed league of nations; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. TAGUE: Letters and telegrams from business concerns of Boston, Mass., protesting against repeal of the daylight-saving law; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 27, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we have come before Thee upon a day of glad acclaim, when the National Capital is welcoming home her boys from beyond the seas. We bless Thee for their safe return. We thank Thee for the protection that Thou didst give to them. We recognize Thy grace to them in answer to the prayers of many faithful hearts, in keeping them clean and strong and brave, and in bringing them back gloriously victorious.

We pray that Thy blessing may be upon the boys; that the record they have made will be an incentive always to them as they turn back to civil life; and that all who have marched under the order and call of their country may be clothed with those virtues that have been forged in the furnace of a great conflict, that they may be the strong leaders of the days that are to come to achieve yet greater things than their fathers have achieved in the paths of peace and of righteousness and of truth.

Grant us now Thy blessing to enable us to discharge the duties of the day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SHEPPARD and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

TELEGRAM FROM SENATOR PHELAN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the following telegram from Senator JAMES D. PHELAN, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., February 26.

To the VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Referring to remarks alleged to have been made by Hon. William Howard Taft at recent meeting here to the effect that he would not trust certain Senators overnight, the following letter, signed by all of us, was to-day delivered to the editor of the San Francisco Chronicle:

"Your continued editorials with regard to President Taft's remarks at the noon meeting held at the St. Francis have created an issue of fair play which leads us to address you upon the subject. The men signing this note were in Mr. Taft's immediate neighborhood when he was speaking. The language he actually used was as follows: 'That he was afraid to trust these gentlemen overnight with the Constitution.' When he spoke the words 'that he was afraid to trust these gentlemen overnight' there was loud applause, which drowned, so far as the words were concerned, the balance of his statement. As Mr. Taft must be held responsible for what he said, we hope that you will make the proper correction of this mistake. The undersigned personally vouch for the correctness of the foregoing, as each distinctly heard the actual language used by Mr. Taft."

You are respectfully requested to present this telegram to the Senate for its information and with the request that it be entered on its records.

James D. Phelan, P. H. McCarthy, Robert A. Roos, Charles C. Moore, Jesse W. Lilienthal, Frederick S. Nelson, R. R. Rogers, H. A. Melvin, R. B. Hale, R. H. Marchant, Frederick Whitton.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Hale	Norris	Smoot
Bankhead	Henderson	Overman	Spencer
Borah	Johnson, Cal.	Owen	Sterling
Brandegee	Jones, Wash.	Page	Sutherland
Calder	Kellogg	Pittman	Swanson
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Poindexter	Thompson
Colt	King	Pollock	Trammell
Culberson	Knox	Pomerene	Underwood
Cummins	La Follette	Reed	Wadsworth
Curtis	Lewis	Robinson	Walsh
Dillingham	McKellar	Shafroth	Warren
Fernald	McLean	Sheppard	Watson
France	McNary	Sherman	Weeks
Frelinghuysen	Martin, Ky.	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Gay	Moses	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott
Gore	Myers	Smith, Mich.
Gronna	New	Smith, S. C.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. My colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] is detained from the Senate on account of the serious illness of his wife. I should like to have this announcement stand for the day on each roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. Petitions and memorials are in order.

LANDS IN MONTANA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 13th instant, certain confidential information requested by the Senate, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

LIFE-SAVING DEVICES (S. DOC. NO. 423).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 27th ultimo, certain information relative to the enforcement of title 52 of the Revised Statutes with respect to life-saving devices, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

FREIGHT RATES ON WHEAT AND WHEAT FLOUR (S. DOC. NO. 424).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 19th instant, certain information relative to comparative freight rates on wheat and wheat flour, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

FREIGHT RATES ON FERTILIZER MATERIAL (S. DOC. NO. 425).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Interstate Commerce Commission transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 10th instant, certain information relative to the proposed consolidated freight classification No. 1, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed.

PRODUCTION OF MINERALS (S. DOC. NO. 422).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Director of the Bureau of Mines transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of all expenditures and disbursements made under the act to encourage the production, etc., of minerals, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining and ordered to be printed.

CHESAPEAKE & POTOMAC TELEPHONE CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a supplemental report from the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. for the year 1918, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

VENTILATION OF SENATE CHAMBER.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds, which was referred to the Committee on Rules and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF SUPERINTENDENT,
UNITED STATES CAPITOL BUILDING AND GROUNDS,
Washington, D. C., February 26, 1919.

The honorable the VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

SIR: I beg to inform you, and through you the United States Senate, that, in accordance with the terms of the resolution passed by that body February 24, 1919, calling for improvement in the ventilation of the Senate Chamber, etc., the air furnished the Senate Chamber is now being taken directly from the open court adjacent to the Senate wing of the Capitol, and on the west side of the building, through inlets within a very few feet of the ventilating fans.

I desire to state further that I have ready for early consideration of the Senate Committee on Rules complete plans and specifications looking toward a full revision and improvement of the ventilating system of the Senate, including washing, purifying, and tempering of the air in cold and warm weather.

Very respectfully,

ELLIOTT WOODS,
Superintendent United States Capitol Building and Grounds.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2812) to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 12211. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 13308. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes;

H. R. 14078. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 15834. An act to extend the time for the construction by Kratka Township of a bridge across the Red Lake River, in Pennington County, Minn.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CURTIS. I present a memorial from the Kansas Legislature, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The memorial is as follows:

House concurrent resolution 22.

A resolution requesting the Government of the United States to take immediate action permitting all soldiers, sailors, and marines inducted into the great world war of 1914–1918 to retain all personal property, including uniforms and individual equipment, except guns or other special weapons of warfare.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the State of Kansas, the Senate concurring therein:

Resolved first, That the Congress of the United States be requested to pass with all convenient speed and dispatch a bill allowing the War Department to permit every soldier, sailor, and marine inducted into the Army of the United States during the years 1917–1918 to retain all their personal uniform, clothing, and equipment now in their possession issued to them by the Government of the United States, excluding therefrom the guns and other special weapons of warfare.

Resolved second, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are hereby urged to secure such action at as early a date as possible on account of the fact that the demobilization of the forces is occurring so rapidly that many of the soldiers, sailors, and marines will have to return their equipment unless such action is speedily taken.

Resolved third, That if Congress has already taken action in this regard, that the War Department be requested to issue the order in such plain terms and at as early a date as possible that these soldiers and marines may not be compelled to turn back to the Government the equipment described in the first resolution.

Resolved fourth, That the secretary of the senate and the chief clerk of the house are instructed to send engrossed copies of this resolution to every Senator and Representative of the State of Kansas in the National Congress, to the War Department, and to the presiding officer of each House of Congress.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution originated in the house, and passed that body February 13, 1919.

D. A. N. CHASE,
Speaker of the House Pro Tempore.
CLARENCE W. MILLER,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Passed the Senate February 19, 1919.

CHAS. S. HUFFMAN,
President of the Senate.
EMMET D. GEORGE,
Secretary of the Senate.
By HENRY S. SOUTHOCK,
Assistant Secretary.

Approved February 24, 1919.

HENRY J. ALLEN, Governor.

Mr. STERLING. I have received many letters from my State, protesting against a continuance of the daylight-saving law and favoring a repeal of that law. I have this morning received a petition with a letter accompanying it. I ask that the letter, which is short, and the petition may be read.

There being no objection, the letter and petition were read, as follows:

FLANDREAU, S. DAK., February 22, 1919.

Senator STERLING,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am inclosing the names of a lot of farmers taken at a farm sale, which, I think, expresses the sentiment of the farmers of Moody County and the farmers at large regarding the daylight law, which we put up with last season as a war measure, but do not feel that we should be hampered with it again this season; and would ask that you urge the repeal of it. We are certain that it cost us, on the 1,700 acres that we operated, last season over $1,000 for lost time, which we had to pay for. Trusting that you will do your utmost to get the law repealed, we are,

Yours, very truly, GILES E. PETTIGREW & SON.

Whereas the daylight-saving law, as enacted by Congress has worked a hardship on the American farmer by being impractical for his use, causing him financial loss in the hiring of help, we, the undersigned, petition our Congressmen at Washington to have that law repealed.

E. M. DAILEY
(And others).

Mr. STERLING presented a petition of sundry citizens of Flandreau, Pipestone, Egan, and Sherman, all in the State of South Dakota, praying for the repeal of the daylight-saving law, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 11.

Whereas the United States Government has established offices of the United States Employment Service throughout the State of Oregon, serving the people of the entire State; and

Whereas the United States Employment Service, which was created and extended as a solution to the labor-employment problems growing out of war-time conditions, has proven its worth to the people of the State of Oregon and has been and is of material value and assistance both to employers in securing labor when workers are wanted and to labor when employment is sought; and

Whereas the people of Oregon believe that the usefulness of the United States Employment Service will not cease with the termination of the war, but, rather, that its fields of service will constantly become broader and more beneficial to the public: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Thirtieth Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, That we do hereby petition and earnestly pray the honorable Congress of the United States for the passage of such legislation as may be necessary for the continuance of the United States Employment Service; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the chief clerk of the Senate of the State of Oregon to the Senate of the United States and that copies of this memorial be forwarded by the chief clerk of the Senate of the State of Oregon to the House of Representatives of the United States and that copies thereof be transmitted by the chief clerk of the Senate of the State of Oregon to the Senators and Representatives in Congress of the State of Oregon, with the request that they use every effort within their power to bring about an accomplishment of the ends and purposes indicated.

Adopted by the house February 17, 1919.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate February 5, 1919.

W. I. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

Mr. CHAMERLAIN. I also present a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD:

The memorial is as follows:

Senate joint memorial 15.

Whereas the Hon. W. C. HAWLEY, Representative in Congress from Oregon, has introduced in Congress a bill "to reserve as part of the Oregon and Siuslaw National Forests in Oregon certain lands that were revested in the United States pursuant to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Oregon & California Railroad Company v. The United States" (H. R. 12770); and

Whereas the purpose of said bill is to protect the watershed from which the cities of Corvallis, Dallas, and Oregon City, in the State of Oregon, obtain their supply of water for municipal purposes; and

Whereas unless Federal legislation exempting from sale the lands described in said bill is enacted there is grave danger that the water supply for said cities will not only be reduced in amount below that actually necessary for said cities by reason of the timber being cut therefrom without regulation, but also that by reason of the occupancy thereof by private persons the purity of said water will be impaired and the health of the inhabitants of said cities endangered: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Oregon (the House of Representatives concurring), That we hereby memorialize Congress to enact some suitable legislation that shall have the effect to withdraw from sale the lands found situated upon the watershed from which the cities of Corvallis, Dallas, and Oregon City, in Oregon, derive their supply of water for municipal purpose; that in our opinion H. R. 12770, above mentioned, is such a bill, and we hereby urgently petition the Congress of the United States to enact the same into a law; be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the senate at once forward a copy of this memorial to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, and to each of the Senators and Representatives from Oregon a certified copy of this memorial.

Adopted by the house February 17, 1919.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate February 11, 1919.

W. I. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

Mr. HALE presented petitions of the Ministerial Association of Dover and Foxcroft, of North Franklin Pomona Grange, No. 22, Patrons of Husbandry, of Phillips, and of sundry citizens of Orono, all in the State of Maine, praying for the establishment of a league of nations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Portland, Me., remonstrating against the repeal of the daylight-saving law, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I present a telegram embodying a resolution passed by the Kiwanis Club of Kalamazoo, in my State, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The telegram is as follows:

KALAMAZOO, MICH., February 26, 1919.

Hon. WM. ALDEN SMITH,
Senate Office Building, Room 411, Washington, D. C.:

The following resolution was passed by Kiwanis Club of Kalamazoo to-day:

"Whereas the first and most pressing problem in the process of reconstruction is the industrial replacement of the discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines; and

"Whereas the most important, feasible, and far-reaching single measure yet proposed for meeting this situation is Secretary Lane's plan for employing these men to reclaim our idle lands and to place them on ready-made farms; a plan which is being carried on successfully in Great Britain and the British Dominions: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we urge on the present Congress the necessity of granting the appropriation of $100,000,000 as a revolving fund, which the Department of the Interior has asked for with which to carry on this work.

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to our Senators and Congressman at Washington, and also to the Secretary of the Interior.

"DR. R. A. GLEZEN,
"DR. GEORGE F. INCH,
"PROF. LEN. F. SMITH,
"Committee."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (for Mr. TOWNSEND) presented a petition of the Sunday school of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Wayland, Mich., and a petition of Council No. 361, United Commercial Travelers, of Traverse City, Mich., praying for the establishment of a league of nations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also (for Mr. TOWNSEND) presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from J. B. Sherrard, of Detroit, Mich., and a telegram in the nature of a memorial from L. D. Berry, of Detroit, Mich., remonstrating against the opening of public lands to private appropriation for coal, oil, and phosphate development, which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also (for Mr. TOWNSEND) presented a petition of the Michigan Federation of Women's Clubs, praying for the passage of the so-called McKellar-Keating civil-service retirement bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented telegrams in the nature of memorials from sundry citizens of Saginaw, Muskegon, Petoskey, Marquette,

Ishpeming, Bay City, Battle Creek, Albion, Calumet, and Lansing, all in the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the repeal of the daylight-saving law, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also (for Mr. TOWNSEND) presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from sundry manufacturers and business men of Detroit, Saginaw, and Flint, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the early passage of the bill validating informal contracts, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also (for Mr. TOWNSEND) presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from sundry labor unions of Detroit, Muskegon, Saginaw, Grand Rapids, Kalamazoo, Jackson, and Menominee, all in the State of Michigan, praying for the continuance of the United States Employment Service, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also (for Mr. TOWNSEND) presented a petition of South Jefferson Grange, No. 182, Patrons of Husbandry, of Osseo, Mich., praying for the repeal of the present zone system of postage rates, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also (for Mr. TOWNSEND) presented a petition of the Republican Club, of Detroit, Mich., praying for an increase in the salaries of postal clerks, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also (for Mr. TOWNSEND) presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from sundry citizens of Detroit and Flint, in the State of Michigan, praying for the repeal of the luxury tax, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also (for Mr. TOWNSEND) presented a petition of sundry employees of the Duluth, South Shore & Atlantic Railway Co., of St. Ignace, Mich., praying for the proposed five-year extension of Federal control of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. THOMPSON presented a petition of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce of Kansas City, Kans., praying for the continuance of the United States Employment Service, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Alabama, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE STATE OF ALABAMA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Wm. P. Cobb, secretary of State, do hereby certify that the pages herete attached contain a true, accurate, and literal copy of house joint resolution No. 54, adopted by the house of representatives on February 12, 1919, and by the senate on February 11, 1919, as the same appears on file and of record in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State, at the capitol, in the city of Montgomery, this 15th day of February, 1919.

[SEAL.] WM. P. COBB,
Secretary of State.

House joint resolution 54.

Whereas the measure now pending in Congress, popularly known as the Byrnes soldier settlement bill, providing for the appropriation of $100,000,000 to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose of providing employment for and the opportunity of securing homes for returned soldiers and sailors is of great general importance to the entire country, involving as it does far-reaching plans of readjustment; and

Whereas immediate action by Congress is necessary in order that plans may be perfected and put into operation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Alabama be, and they are hereby, very earnestly urged to lend their earnest, enthusiastic, and immediate efforts toward securing the prompt passage of the said bill before the adjournment of the present session of Congress; and

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the governor under the seal of State to the said Senators and Representatives.

Adopted by the senate February 11, 1919.
Adopted by the house February 12, 1919.

Mr. WOLCOTT presented a petition of sundry citizens of Wilmington, Del., praying for the establishment of a league of nations, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry teachers of the public schools of New Castle and Kent Counties and a petition of sundry teachers of the public schools of Dover, all in the State of Delaware, praying for the establishment of a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. LODGE presented petitions of the congregation of the Church of the Disciples, of Boston; of the congregation of the Payson Park Congregational Church, of Cambridge; of the congregation of the First Baptist Church, of Leominster; of the League for Democratic Control, of Boston; of the Pilgrim Club, of New Bedford; of the Women's Club, of Quincy; and of the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the establishment of a league of nations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

MERCHANTS & MINERS' TRANSPORTATION CO.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, several days ago the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] was calling attention to the Merchants & Miners' Transportation Co., and I presented to the Senate at that time a letter addressed to the counsel for the Director General of Railroads—Judge Payne—by Senators COLT, FLETCHER, and myself, representing a number of Senators who had been studying the question. I have received an answer from Judge Payne, and I think it should go into the RECORD that Senators interested may see the reply. I do not ask that it be read.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES RAILROAD ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, February 13, 1919.

MY DEAR SENATOR SMITH: Answering your kind letter of the 12th instant in which Senators FLETCHER and COLT join, representing the Senators who recently wrote me on the same subject:

I think you should know that after giving the best possible attention to the subject by the Railroad Administration, the loss from the operation of the boats of the Merchants & Miners' Transportation Co. from April 13, 1918, to December 5, 1918, the date of their relinquishment, was, in round numbers, $700,000, and that the difference between the expenses of operation and the income since that time have been at the rate of $100,000 per month.

In view of these rather startling losses, it does not seem to me possible that I can recommend to the Director General that the Government continue to absorb this loss. I have accordingly notified the Merchants & Miners' Co. that we would cease the operation of the boats on or before March 1, as I indicated at the conference at which you were present on Saturday.

My kindest personal regards.

Yours, very truly,

JOHN BARTON PAYNE.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I also present a letter from the Savannah Board of Trade on the same subject.

Mr. SMOOT. What is the subject?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Merchants & Miners' Transportation Co. The effect of my reading the letter without the answer might be misleading to Senators interested. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAVANNAH BOARD OF TRADE,
Savannah, Ga., February 21, 1919.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We understand that the releasing by the Railroad Administration of the Merchants & Miners' Transportation Co. and the Clyde Line have placed both of these steamship companies in such a position, due to increased cost of operation and control of the railroads by the Government, that they will be unable to operate except at extremely heavy losses, and indications are they will be placed in such an embarrassing position they will be compelled to cease operation.

The Merchants & Miners' Transportation Co., as you are no doubt aware, has a regular line of steamers between Savannah and Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Jacksonville.

The Clyde Line does not touch at this port, but does at other South Atlantic ports.

We feel that discontinuance of these two lines will seriously affect South Atlantic ports and will be pleased to be advised of the real situation of these two companies. The president of the Merchants & Miners' Transportation Co. filed with the Railroad Administration some time ago petition, contents of which we are not familiar with, therefore are unable to intelligently act at this time.

Thanking you for any and all information that you can give us and urging your support in our behalf, I am,

Very truly, yours,

THOMAS PURSE, Secretary.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT FOR THE DAY.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I offer a resolution of adjournment, for the cause stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the soldiers, sailors, and marines of this war assemble to-day in the District of Columbia, and the civilian population in a public procession do them the honor and show the respect to which they are entitled; and

Whereas the President of the United States has been absent for some months from the seat of government, having gone to and been present in various countries of Europe during that absence, and is now returned to the United States and is to-day in the District of Columbia, where he can communicate with coordinate branches of the Government in the discharge of his Executive duties; and

Whereas the people of the United States and Congress rejoice at his safe return and resumption of his Executive duties at the Capital: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate, That in commemoration of the presence of the Executive and in respect to the soldiers, sailors, and marines so in this seat of government that the Senate do now adjourn until 10 o'clock a. m. to-morrow, February 28, 1919.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Regular order!

The VICE PRESIDENT. A motion to adjourn is always in order. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Illinois. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I am compelled to withhold my vote, as I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is detained from the Chamber.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I transfer the general pair I have with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. COLT (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to ask if the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. COLT. I have a general pair with that Senator, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MARTIN of Virginia] is detained from the Senate on account of sickness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] is necessarily detained on official business. He is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. SHAFROTH. My colleague, the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], is detained on account of illness.

The result was announced—yeas 8, nays 69, as follows:

YEAS—8.

Baird	France	Penrose	Sutherland
Calder	Gronna	Sherman	Weeks

NAYS—69.

Ashurst	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	Jones, Wash.	New	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Kellogg	Norris	Smoot
Borah	Kendrick	Overman	Spencer
Brandegee	Kenyon	Owen	Sterling
Chamberlain	King	Page	Swanson
Cummins	Knox	Pittman	Thompson
Curtis	La Follette	Poindexter	Trammell
Fletcher	Lenroot	Pollock	Underwood
Frelinghuysen	Lewis	Pomerene	Vardaman
Gay	Lodge	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Gerry	McCumber	Reed	Walsh
Gore	McKellar	Robinson	Watson
Hale	McLean	Shafroth	Williams
Hardwick	McNary	Sheppard	Wolcott
Henderson	Martin, Ky.	Simmons
Hitchcock	Moses	Smith, Ariz.
Johnson, Cal.	Myers	Smith, Ga.

NOT VOTING—19.

Colt	Goff	Martin, Va.	Smith, Md.
Culberson	Harding	Nugent	Thomas
Dillingham	Hollis	Phelan	Townsend
Fall	Johnson, S. Dak.	Saulsbury	Warren
Fernald	Kirby	Shields

So Mr. SHERMAN's motion was rejected.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SWANSON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15539) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 777) thereon.

Mr. KENDRICK, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13350) to add certain lands to the Yellowstone National Park, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 783) thereon.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 5611) granting to certain claimants a preference right to purchase public lands in the State of Arkansas, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 779) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 5652) providing for cooperation between the United States and State governments in the rural settlement of soldiers, sailors, and marines, and to promote the reclamation of lands, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 780) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 5607. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee simple to the county of Huron, in the State of Michigan, for a certain described tract of land for public-park purposes (Rept. No. 778);

H. R. 17. An act to include certain lands in the counties of Modoc and Siskiyou, Cal., in the Modoc National Forest, Cal., and for other purposes (Rept. No. 781);

H. R. 11219. An act providing for the appraisal and sale of the Gig Harbor abandoned military reservation in the State of Washington, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 782); and

H. R. 11368. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee simple to the National Lincoln-Douglass Sanatorium and Consumptive Hospital Association (a corporation), of Denver, Colo., for a certain described tract of land (Rept. No. 784).

THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. THOMPSON. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably Senate resolution 469, authorizing the Committee on the Judiciary to continue its investigations of Bolshevik propaganda during the recess of the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. GORE. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go to the calendar.

LANDS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. KELLOGG. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably the bill (H. R. 13034) to validate and confirm certain erroneously allowed entries in the State of Minnesota. The bill has been once passed through the Senate and once passed through the House. This is simply a report from the Committee on Public Lands, substituting the House bill, as recommended by the Secretary of the Interior; and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish also to present a report. If there is no debate on the bill reported by the Senator from Minnesota and if it can be disposed of at once, I shall not object; but if it takes any time, I shall object to its consideration at this time.

Mr. KELLOGG. If it takes any time, I will not press it. If anybody objects to it, I will not press it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all cases where Chippewa Indian lands in Minnesota, ceded under the act of Congress approved January 14, 1889 (25 Stat. L., p. 642), were assessed under the State drainage laws prior to the opening of the lands to entry, where the lands were subsequently opened to entry and were thereafter sold under the said drainage laws, and where cash entries for the lands were subsequently made as though authorized by the act of Congress approved May 20, 1908 (35 Stats. L., p. 169), such erroneously allowed entries, if otherwise regular, be, and the same are hereby, validated and confirmed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDUCATION OF ILLITERATES.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. From the Committee on Education and Labor I report back favorably Senate bill 5464. I wish to state that this is the bill authorizing national cooperation with the States to promote the education of native illiterates and persons unable to use and understand the English language. This bill has received the most earnest support from all over the United States, and I will file during the day a full report in support of it.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia if he proposes to bring up the bill during this session?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I shall be delighted to do so if it does not interfere with the necessary appropriation bills. If I should find a lull at any time when I thought I could bring it to the attention of the Senate and pass it without obstructing legislation that must be passed before the 4th of March, I shall do so.

Mr. KENYON. I hope the Senator will do so, as I believe it is the most important bill before Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have been simply astounded at the enthusiasm with which the suggestion has been received from one end of the United States to the other. Many, many leading newspapers, magazines, educational associations, and patriotic associations have poured in resolutions in commendation of this bill, being perhaps more interested in teaching English to all in the United States who can not speak English than in the other portion of the bill. There is a feeling everywhere that it is absolutely necessary that in this country of ours every man, woman, and child should speak English.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator, if he has not the statistics—probably he has—that there are over 8,000,000 people in this country who can not speak the English language, and this bill is to help remedy that situation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In the report which I have prepared and which I will furnish to-day to be printed I give quite a number of those statistics. In the South, on account of the Negro race, there is illiteracy. In the Eastern and Middle States, and even in the Western States, there are foreigners in large numbers who do not speak English, and the enthusiasm with which from all over the country the call is made that English should be the language used all over our land, that every man, woman, and child should be taught to speak English, is but another manifestation of the patriotism which carried us through the German War.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does not the Senator think that that bill is really more important than at least the ordinary appropriation bills, which are not really needed until the 1st of July?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There are perhaps some that are more important than this.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. What is the order of business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The order of business is the reports of committees.

Mr. WALSH. I call for the regular order.

LINCOLN-DOUGLASS SANATORIUM.

Mr. MYERS. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably the bill (H. R. 11368) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee simple to the National Lincoln-Douglass Sanatorium and Consumptive Hospital Association (a corporation), of Denver, Colo., for a certain-described tract of land. I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] to the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to say that I am anxious to call up the wheat-guaranty bill at the conclusion of the morning business; and I shall feel obliged to object to unanimous consent for the consideration of any other measure until that time arrives. Therefore I object.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I hope the Senator will withhold his objection for just a moment. This is only a matter of 80 acres. It is a sanatorium for colored people out near Fort Morgan, Colo., under a corporation organized in Colorado, whose office is in Denver. This is the ordinary bill with relation to matters of that kind. The amount is prescribed. The Interior Department approves it, and I hope the Senator from Oklahoma will let it pass.

Mr. GORE. The name of the sanatorium recommends it to me—the Lincoln-Douglass Sanatorium. It is a monument to a dead President; but I shall have to object at this time.

Mr. MYERS. I wish to make a number of other reports from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Oklahoma whether he intends to object to all these unanimous-consent requests or whether he has a special objection to the bill referred to by the Senator from Montana?

Mr. GORE. I have no objection whatever to the bill introduced by the Senator from Colorado, and I was sorry to feel obliged to object to it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Under those circumstances, I will not ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the last bill reported referring to a military reservation in the State of Washington.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bills will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred, as follows:

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 5665) donating captured cannon and cannon balls to the city of McKinney, Tex.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DILLINGHAM:

A bill (S. 5666) granting an increase of pension to J. W. Parmenter (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

A bill (S. 5667) to prevent the removal of pneumatic-tube properties in post-office and Federal buildings in certain cities prior to July 1, 1920; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 229) to extend the period of Government control and possession of the telegraph and telephone systems of the United States; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MOSES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $65,792.53 to pay Walston H. Brown and also $26,400.30 to pay the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co. the amounts found due them by the Court of Claims, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

FIFTH LIBERTY BOND BILL.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I present an amendment which I intend to propose to the bond bill, if some provision is not made in the committee covering the matter. I want this amendment read. I do not see the chairman of the committee here; but I want to advise the members of the Finance Committee that unless some action is taken covering this proposition in some way, I propose to insist just as strongly as I can, when that bill comes up for consideration, upon the adoption of some proposition of this sort.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read:

The Secretary read the amendment, as follows:

That any owner of liberty bonds not exceeding $500 par value shall be paid in cash the par value thereof and accrued interest thereon through any Federal banking institution upon making a satisfactory showing that he is the owner and original purchaser thereof and that he is disposing of the same to meet his present needs. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the foregoing provisions.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, the question of a league of nations is of interest to the State which I have the honor in part to represent, and I desire to give notice that on to-morrow afternoon I shall address the Senate upon that subject.

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS AT BOSTON.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the President's address at Boston be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. SWANSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 479), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That until otherwise ordered the hour of the daily meeting of the Senate shall be 10 o'clock a. m.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. SPENCER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 475), which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That in order to prevent misunderstanding, either in this country or among other nations concerning the purpose and effect of the proposed league of nations, it is the judgment of the Senate that in any final draft of the constitution of the league of nations it should be clearly provided in substance as follows:

Nothing contained in this constitution of the league of nations is intended to imply any relinquishment by the United States of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions, nor is anything in this constitution of the league of nations to be regarded as limiting in any sense the power conferred by the Constitution of the United States upon the Congress.

THE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY.

Mr. MOSES submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 476), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to investigate by subcommittee the questions involved in Senate bill 5305, and for that purpose is authorized to sit in Washington or elsewhere during the period between the end of the Sixty-fifth Congress and the beginning of the Sixty-sixth Congress, and thereafter during the session or recesses of the Senate and to report in the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress by legislation or otherwise its conclusions thereon. And that the said committee or subcommittee is hereby given power and authority to summon witnesses, administer oaths, and to take testimony under oath, and to employ such clerical and stenographic assistance as may be necessary in the premises, the expenses of said committee to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I offer a resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration. It is to authorize a committee to sit during the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does it carry an appropriation?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It does not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 474) was read as follows:

Resolved, That the subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs authorized to investigate the Gum Springs (Va.) Camp, and the affairs of Company 553, Motor Transport Corps, be, and it is hereby, authorized to sit and make such investigation after the adjournment of the Sixty-fifth Congress, and said subcommittee be, and is hereby, directed to report at the first session of the Sixty-sixth Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, does the Senator from Oregon think this resolution will require any debate or lead to any discussion?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. No. If it does I will withdraw it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and was agreed to.

PROPOSED EXTRA SESSION OF CONGRESS (S. DOC. NO. 431).

Mr. FRANCE. I offer the following resolution and ask that it be read, and I also ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. ASHURST. Let it be read first, Mr. President.

Mr. GORE. I suggest that the Senator first ask that it be read before asking for its present consideration. I shall not object if it does not lead to discussion.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 14746, the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. GORE. I make a point of order against the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is not in order. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Maryland will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Senate resolution 477.

Whereas grave and pressing problems in connection with the reconstruction period now confront us and there is apparent much unrest throughout the country, due to unemployment, illiteracy, ill health, poverty, the underproduction and faulty distribution of the commodities and necessities of life, high living costs, and other undesirable but in part remediable conditions created, aggravated, or new discovered by the war; and

Whereas the President, because of his prolonged absence from the seat of government and from the country, and because of his careful occupation with international problems, has not been afforded an opportunity to become fully informed of such problems and unsatisfactory and distressful conditions and the immediate and imperative need of remedial legislation to meet them: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it be the sense and judgment of the Senate that the situation is such as to make it seem desirable and advisable that an extra session of the Congress should be called for the 5th of March, 1919; and be it

Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be respectfully submitted to the President for his consideration.

Mr. SWANSON. I object.

Mr. ASHURST. I object to the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over under the rule.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate proceed to consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I had the floor and I claim my right under the rule to discuss the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution went over under objection.

Mr. GORE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ASHURST. I move that the Senate proceed to consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not 1 o'clock.

Mr. ASHURST. I beg the Chair's pardon.

Mr. GORE. I rose to make that point.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. OWEN. I submit a resolution to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolution (S. Res. 478) was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Resolved, That the delegates representing the United States at the peace conference assembled at Paris are hereby requested to offer amendments to the formulated plan proposing to establish the league of nations by the insertion of the following provisions, to wit:

Nothing herein contained shall ever be construed as granting any rights to the league over the internal affairs of member nations. Every member nation is hereby recognized as having the exclusive right over emigration and immigration, imports and exports, and all its domestic affairs.

The body of delegates and the executive council shall have no authority to make laws, but may propose international resolutions to be submitted to the member nations for consideration. When such resolutions shall have been ratified by all the States whose representatives compose the executive council and by three-fourths of the States whose representatives compose the body of delegates shall have the effect of international law.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL RESERVE ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 421).

Mr. OWEN. I present the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 5236) to amend the Federal reserve act. The report has already been adopted by the House, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The conference report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 5236) to amend sections 7, 10, and 11 of the Federal reserve act, and section 5172, Revised Statutes of the United States, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amendment proposed by the House insert the following:

"That that part of the first paragraph of section 7 of the Federal reserve act which reads as follows: 'After the aforesaid dividend claims have been fully met all the net earnings shall be paid to the United States as a franchise tax except that one-half of such net earnings shall be paid into a surplus fund until it shall amount to 40 per cent of the paid-in capital stock of such bank,' be amended to read as follows:

"'After the aforesaid dividend claims have been fully met, the net earnings shall be paid to the United States as a franchise tax except that the whole of such net earnings, including those for the year ending December 31, 1918, shall be paid into a surplus fund until it shall amount to 100 per cent of the subscribed capital stock of such bank and that thereafter 10 per cent of such net earnings shall be paid into the surplus.'

"SEC. 2. That that part of section 10 of the Federal reserve act which reads as follows: 'The members of said board, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, and the Comptroller of the Currency shall be ineligible during the time they are in office and for two years thereafter to hold any office, position, or employment in any member bank,' be amended to read as follows:

"'The Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency shall be ineligible during the time they are in office and for two years thereafter to hold any office, position, or employment in any member bank. The appointive members of the Federal Reserve Board shall be ineligible during the time they are in office and for two years thereafter to hold any office, position, or employment in any member bank, except that this restriction shall not apply to a member who has served the full term for which he was appointed.'

"SEC. 3. That section 11 of the Federal reserve act as amended by the act of September 7, 1916, be further amended by striking out the whole of subsection (m) and by substituting therefor a subsection to read as follows:

"'(m) Upon the affirmative vote of not less than five of its members the Federal Reserve Board shall have power to permit Federal reserve banks to discount for any member bank notes, drafts, or bills of exchange bearing the signature or indorsement of any one borrower in excess of the amount permitted by section 9 and section 13 of this act, but in no case to exceed 20 per cent of the member bank's capital and surplus: Provided, however, That all such notes, drafts, or bills of exchange discounted for any member bank in excess of the amount permitted under such sections shall be secured by not less than a like face amount of bonds or notes of the United States issued since April 24, 1917, or certificates of indebtedness of the United States: Provided further, That the provisions of this subsection (m) shall not be operative after December 31, 1920.'

"SEC. 4. That section 5172, Revised Statutes of the United States, be amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 5172. That in order to furnish suitable notes for circulation, the Comptroller of the Currency shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, cause plates and dies to be engraved in the best manner to guard against counterfeiting and fraudulent alterations, and shall have printed therefrom and numbered such quantity of circulating notes in blank or bearing engraved signatures of officers as herein provided, of the denominations of $1, $2, $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, and $1,000, as may be required to supply the associations entitled to receive the same. Such notes shall express upon their face that they are secured by United States bonds deposited with the Treasurer of the United States by the written or engraved signatures of the Treasurer and Register, and by the imprint of the seal of the Treasury, and shall also express upon their face the promise of the association receiving the same to pay on demand, attested by the written or engraved signatures of the president or vice president and cashier; and shall bear such devices and such other statements and shall be in such form as the Secretary of the Treasury shall, by regulation, direct.'"

ROBERT L. OWEN,
GEO. P. MCLEAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
MICHAEL F. PHELAN,
JOE H. EAGLE,
E. A. HAYES,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, it is difficult to follow from the reading the comparison between the bill which passed the Senate and the conference report, and I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma to explain any changes which have been made by the conference report varying from the bill as it passed the Senate.

Mr. OWEN. There was inserted the word "note," after the word "bond," so that the 10 per cent additional against which discounts might be made of notes offered by the banks and secured by Government bonds might be secured by Government notes as well, since the next issue is to be in the form of notes.

Mr. WEEKS. Let me suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma that the word "note" is a misnomer in a Government security; it should never be used.

Mr. OWEN. Still the statute uses the term "note," and, in order to prevent any misunderstanding about it, the committee inserted the word "note," so as to cover that point.

Mr. WEEKS. If the bill which is now pending applies the word "note" to a Government security to be issued, I shall make every effort to change that, because it is not applicable to that kind of an instrument.

Mr. OWEN. If it were not changed, then, of course, the banks would not be permitted to give credit to notes as a security, and that would, of course, be injurious to the standing of Government securities which are being offered to the public; that is all.

Mr. WEEKS. It strikes me that that is new matter, in the first place, and, in the second place, it is making use of a term which should not be used in any provision for issuing Government securities.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator will perceive that, if that word is stricken out, it will have the tendency of lowering the selling price and the market price of those securities; and I do not think the Senator would want to take the responsibility for that.

Mr. WEEKS. I certainly would not if that word is used in the pending bill.

Mr. OWEN. It is used.

Mr. WEEKS. I hope it will not be used; it should not be.

Mr. OWEN. I should make no point about it one way or the other; but if it is used, then it certainly ought to be placed in this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Would the Senator object to having the conference report go over, so that we may have an opportunity to read it?

Mr. OWEN. Not at all.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like the report to go over and be printed.

Mr. OWEN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SMOOT. I myself think, I will say to the Senator, that if the bond bill passes as it passed the House, then the word "note" should be in this proposed law in order that the banks may use the notes as security; but really I should like to have the Senator allow the conference report to be printed and to go over.

Mr. OWEN. I will continue my answer to the Senator from Massachusetts. The words "Assistant Secretary of the Treasury" were stricken out of the second section, and in lieu of the word "appointed" the word "appointive" was inserted. Then the dividends which were earned by the Federal reserve banks during 1918 were added to the surplus funds of those banks, so as to allow the surplus to go up to 100 per cent, and thereafter 10 per cent of the earnings would go to additional surplus and the balance to the Government. It makes no change in the distribution, except that the banks get the benefit at present of their earnings in 1918 as a surplus, which was thought desirable, because many foreign banks have a larger capital than our reserve banks, and the credit of the Federal reserve banks was impaired to some extent by that fact, so far as foreign balances are concerned.

I think that substantially covers the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to its going over?

Mr. OWEN. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

PROPOSED CALL OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, there are on the calendar a great number of bills of merit which appear to be receiving no attention. I ask unanimous consent that at 6 o'clock this evening the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar until the calendar is called once through for unobjected bills only. We ought to call the calendar once for unobjected bills during the session. We can not do it during the morning hour; the rule provides otherwise. I ask unanimous consent for that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, we have already made an order that the Senate shall meet hereafter at 10 o'clock. Members had an idea, I think, that if we met at 10 the calendar would be called. My impression was that at 10 o'clock tomorrow we were going to call the calendar.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator will yield, there is no rule for calling it at 10 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. SWANSON. It is in order for that to be done, however. We can do it by unanimous consent.

Mr. MYERS. Well, somebody is going to move to bring up an appropriation bill, and there will be no chance during the morning hour. From 6 to 8 this evening we can call the calendar. Senators who are not interested do not need to remain here, but those of us who are interested can stay and go through the calendar. There are going to be fewer Senators here from 6 to 8 than at any other time in the day.

Mr. SWANSON. I suggest that the Senator make it from 8 to 9.

Mr. MYERS. I am afraid Senators will not stay until that time.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I object to the Senator's request.

Mr. MYERS. I make the motion, then, that at 6 o'clock this evening we proceed to call the calendar for unobjected bills.

Mr. GORE. I object to that. I do not think it is in order during the morning hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That motion is not in order now.

MORGAN MUNITION PLANT EXPLOSION.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, on yesterday I presented to the Senate a report (No. 776) from the Military Affairs Committee on the explosion at Morgans, N. J., and asked that it be printed in the RECORD. Objection was made, and the report was kept out of the RECORD. I renew my motion now, because this is a report of a very important investigation. The hearings contain a great deal of technical information that is very valuable, and the report should go in the RECORD. I now move that the report be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

On October 24 last the Senate, by resolution, directed the Committee on Military Affairs to investigate the fire at the Morgan Munitions Plant on October 4 and 5; the plans, if any, adopted for its reconstruction; and the protective measures which had been employed in that plant and which were being employed in other munition plants.

Shortly after the resolution was adopted the armistice was declared, and in view of the fact that actual hostilities ceased and that steps were taken to limit production, your committee concluded to confine its investigation to the fire at the Morgan Plant and to the storage of explosives in large quantities near congested centers.

Following the signing of the armistice, we at once communicated with the Secretary of War, calling his attention to the danger of the storage of explosives and poisonous gases near populous centers. In reply he advised us that high explosives and poisonous gases would be shipped from New Jersey to sections of the country remote from dwellings and that military guards would be placed at the various plants during the removal.

To determine the causes of the fire at the Morgan Plant and whether same was the result of accident, negligence, or acts of enemies public hearings were held, many witnesses examined, and testimony aggregating over 1,900 pages was taken.

At the hearings the T. A. Gillespie Loading Co., which was in charge of the operation of the plant, was represented by counsel. By agreement dated December 30, 1917, the company was employed by the Government to procure land at South Amboy for a shell-loading plant, which land the Government agreed to lease from the company and on which the company agreed to erect a plant for loading, assembling, and packing shells. We secured a copy of the contract, not for the purpose of determining whether its provisions were fair and equitable, but solely to ascertain what light it would throw upon the proper and careful operation of the plant. The company obligated itself to "deliver the loaded shells as soon as possible after the components have been received" from the Government, while the Government agreed to pay all cost and in addition a certain percentage of the cost by way of compensation for the services of the company and to indemnify the company "against all and any risks by accident, fire, or explosion or otherwise arising or growing out of the construction and operation of the plant." In short, the Government desired to have shells loaded as rapidly as possible and agreed to indemnify the company against all risks. Under such a contract it would seem that it was the duty of the Government as well as the company to see that the plant was operated as carefully as was possible. Care was required not only for the employees but also for the protection of those living in the vicinity. It is perhaps unfortunate that a plant where in a short time was accumulated millions of pounds of high explosives should have been located adjacent to South Amboy, which had 7,500 inhabitants before any work was commenced and whose population greatly increased on account of war activities in the neighborhood, and within a few miles of Perth Amboy, whose population exceeded 40,000 before any work on the plant was commenced. Within a radius of 10 miles of the plant there was a population greatly in excess of 50,000.

Some idea of the damage done within a radius of 10 miles and of the terror spread among the people may be judged from the fact that representatives of the city of New York, which is more than 20 miles from the plant, attended the hearing, told of the dangers to the tunnels under the river and to their water mains because of the explosion, and protested against the accumulation of such large quantities of high explosives in close proximity to the city. The mayors of the cities and towns within a radius of 10 miles appeared before your committee and presented a vivid picture of the death, destruction, and desolation resulting from the fire and explosions.

The fire commenced shortly before 8 o'clock on the night of October 4 and continued until the night of October 5. As the fire progressed stores of munitions exploded and fragments of buildings and shells were scattered about for miles. The shock was felt within a radius of 25 miles. Within the radius, however, of 10 miles the shock was simply terrific. Windows were blown out, chimneys thrown down, roofs destroyed, and houses swayed back and forth. It is estimated that 10,000 people were compelled to leave their homes and remain in the open. Children were prematurely born in the fields, and many of those forced from their homes were attacked with the influenza, which was then very prevalent.

How many deaths caused by shock and influenza resulting from the disaster can not be stated. Eighty-seven deaths were directly caused by the disaster. The property loss of the Government was $20,000,000. The loss of property to residents in the vicinity, together with various other claims against the Government because of the disaster, amount to about three and one-half million dollars. These claims have not yet been fully settled, and there is a strong contrast between the speed at which the Government was piling up explosions in the vicinity of Perth and South Amboy and the deliberation with which it is now repairing the damage to property of residents and settling their claims.

The site selected by the company for the construction of the plant comprised some 2,600 acres. The company was composed of Mr. T. A. Gillespie and his sons, who had been contractors, and who had some experience in the erection of buildings, and who had also been interested in the manufacture of high-explosive shells for the British and Russian Governments. The buildings were planned by one of their associates, who had been at one time connected with the Du Pont Powder Co., and they met with the approval of the Ordnance Department. They were hastily constructed, and judging by the experience gained from the fire, they were too close together and had defects which contributed to the rapid spread of the conflagration.

The location of the plant was not ideal. It doubtless was selected because of its proximity to a supply of labor and to the New York Harbor.

The fire protection consisted of fire extinguishers and fire pails located in all buildings. Manufacturing buildings were equipped with small hose which were supplied by a pressure water-pipe line from a million-gallon reservoir. There was an underground pipe line consisting of 6, 8, 10, 12, 14, and 16 inch cast-iron pipe which supplied a large number of hydrants, each hydrant being equipped with an adequate supply of fire hose, nozzles, etc. This system was supplied by two 2-stage centrifugal pumps, each having a capacity of 1,800 gallons per minute and pumping from salt water. A 16,000-gallon tank on an 80-foot trestle kept the system full and the pumps primed. It was estimated that with both pumps running it was possible to get 12 fire streams with a nozzle pressure of 38 pounds. At the central fire house there was an auto chemical engine and an auto fire-hose truck. Valves on the underground supply lines were so arranged that the various units could be cut off in case of break and water left on the other units.

The first explosion completely demolished a large portion of the unit known as 6–1–1. The firemen promptly endeavored to extinguish it, but their failure is attributed to flying shells and continued explosions. What was the cause of the fire we can not tell. There was some suspicion that it was caused by an alien enemy, but the evidence would not justify a finding to that effect.

To load shells it was necessary to reduce the explosives to a liquid. For this purpose melting kettles heated by steam coils were employed. The evidence tended to show that it was dangerous in the process of melting to apply heat in excess of 110° centigrade. If heat in excess of that degree was applied fire was likely to result, especially if the explosives contained impurities. A fire probably did start in one of the melting kettles and was immediately followed by an explosion. There was some evidence that gauges on some of the kettles were broken and that at times gauges which were in operation recorded excessive temperature. Such evidence was, however, contradicted, and those who installed the gauges testified that the safety devices were such that they absolutely prevented a temperature beyond 110°. While it is not possible to state definitely what was the cause of the fire, it is possible to state some of the causes for its rapid spread and extent. This we will attempt to do very briefly.

It appeared in evidence that the fire protective committee of the War Industries Board had recommended that a system of automatic sprinklers should be installed. This recommendation was opposed by the company, who claimed that an explosion would render the equipment useless. It was also ignored by the Ordnance Department. Notwithstanding the claim that an explosion would render the equipment ineffective, we find that automatic sprinklers have been installed in various powder plants throughout the country and that at times they have operated successfully. In view of the great need for loaded shells it was necessary, in our opinion, to take every precaution for the preservation of the buildings, so that the flow of supplies would not be stopped by preventable accidents. Moreover, in view of the fact that more than 50,000 people resided in close proximity to this plant, every reasonable measure which would contribute to safety should have been employed. We are not satisfied that automatic sprinklers would have been useless and ineffective, and we believe that both the company and the Ordnance Department did not give to the recommendation of the fire protective committee of the War Industries Board the consideration which it deserved.

At the beginning of the fire there was strong water pressure. As a result of one of the explosions, however, the water pressure failed. There had undoubtedly been a break in one of the mains, and as far as we can judge from the evidence, no one seemed to be sufficiently familiar with the mains and the various valves to cut off the water from where it was escaping.

In New Jersey a law was enacted shortly after the Halifax disaster regulating the construction of plants for the manufacture and storage of explosives. The statute was based in large part upon the American table of distances, a table prepared largely as the result of experience. The company, not certain whether the law applied to it or not, communicated with the War Department and was advised in effect that it need not be observed. It was not observed—there was more crowding of buildings and magazines than could have taken place under the New Jersey statute, and the fire, if it has shown anything, has demonstrated the wisdom of regulations such as those contained in the statute. Whether an observance of the statute would have seriously delayed production or merely increased cost is not entirely clear. The company and the War Department selected a site close to cities of substantial size, and if they chose to ignore a State regulation for the protection of its citizens, they should have themselves observed some precautions of equal value. They did not do so.

The Ordnance Department at one time apparently had in mind that there should be a limit to the quantity of explosives at the plant. It would seem to be a rule generally observed that not more than 15 days supply should be on hand at any one time. There is some evidence in the record that the Ordnance Department at some time considered that a supply of 45 days might be maintained and at other times a supply for even 60 days might be maintained.

In permitting such an accumulation little attention seems to have been paid to the actual capacity of the plant. The quantity on storage seems to have been regulated, if regulated at all, not by the actual capacity of the plant at the time but upon what months previous had been estimated would be the actual capacity of the plant. The Ordnance Department kept piling up the explosives. The company remonstrated, but without avail. Instead of a supply for at the most 60 days, it would seem as though, based on the capacity of the plant at the time of the fire there was a supply for nearly 300 days. Not only were explosives sent to the plant to be loaded into shells by the company, but the Government also sent loaded shells from other plants, so that at the time of the fire the plant was without question a real menace to the surrounding country. It would be unjust to say that the company was responsible for this menace. There is clear evidence to the effect that it appealed to the Government for relief and was promised some relief.

On the night of the fire the quantity of explosives at the plant, including not only what was in the magazines but also that in shells and on cars, amounted to 30,855,079 pounds. Of this quantity, 12,155,839 pounds were destroyed. Had the remaining 18,000,000 pounds been destroyed, no one can tell what would have been the damage.

The shells, just before the fire, consisted of the following calibers: Seventy-five millimeter, 3-inch, 5-inch, 155-millimeter, 6-inch, 8-inch, 9.2-inch, 240-millimeter, and amounted in the aggregate to 1,213,458. Of this number, approximately 25 per cent were destroyed; 905,219 remained after the fire. South Amboy and Perth Amboy and the many towns within 15 miles of the plant, and, in fact, New York City are perhaps fortunate that only 25 per cent of the shells exploded and that less than one-half of the total quantity of explosives on hand was destroyed.

We have not attempted to say who, if anyone, in the War Department is responsible for the vast accumulation of explosives and shells at the Morgan plant at the time of the fire. It is our opinion that a rigid inquiry should be conducted by the War Department into the matter. We can hardly believe that it was not responsible to have held back from the Morgan plant a substantial part of the explosives which were on hand at the time of the fire. As soon as it became evident that the supply was in excess of the loading and storage capacity of the plant and that loaded shells were being shipped in much more rapidly than they could be taken away by vessels for transportation across the seas, it seems to us that a place more distant from populous centers should have been found for storage. If no such place could be found, then the greatest possible precaution should have been taken to prevent fires.

At the time of the fire about 6,500 men were employed; 392 were guards. The company evidently realized that the plant was not properly guarded, and appealed to the War Department for a detachment of Regular soldiers. Doubtless upon an investigation by the War Department the reason for the failure to comply with such a reasonable request will be made plain or those who ignored it will be punished. Nothing was more important than the guarding of such a plant. The 392 guards were divided into three shifts, and it was obviously impossible for these guards to make certain that no one entering the premises carried matches, or even to see that no one on the premises smoked.

Haste, no doubt, was demanded so that our troops in France could have an ample supply of ammunition. We might overlook the danger to which residents and property in the vicinity of a plant were exposed if there was a certainty that the plant could be relied upon to supply our soldiers with the necessary munitions. It needs only the statement of the fact to show that the failure to observe precautions for the protection of residents and property in the vicinity also exposed our soldiers to the danger that the supplies would not be forthcoming. A fire occurred at the Morgan plant. It is possible and perhaps probable that it was accidental.

It is not, however, probable that a veritable catastrophe would have resulted from the fire had precautions been taken in the location and construction of the buildings and magazines, and had some care been exercised not to ship into the plant explosives greatly in excess of its capacity and loaded shells greatly in excess of the facilities for transportation. A catastrophe did result, and were it not for the fact that our enemies abandoned the fight, our soldiers in the field would have suffered even more, perhaps, than was suffered by the residents in the immediate vicinity of the plant. In the haste for speed, the need of great care seems to have been lost sight of. While a disregard of proper precautions may have resulted in a larger supply for the moment, such disregard led, because of the destruction of the plant, to an entire stoppage of the supply. The haste which was shown in the effort of increased production led to some disregard of reasonable care on the part of the Ordnance Department and might probably have been a calamity to those fighting for us on the other side. For this reason we can not see that the alleged need for great haste is an excuse for the practices pursued at the plant.

As stated above, the New Jersey statute regulating the manufacture and storage of explosives was ignored. There is no Federal statute on the subject. We have learned much in the past four years regarding the manufacture and storage of explosives. The lesson should not be forgotten. From the knowledge gained it should be possible to prepare rules on the location of plants for the manufacture and storage of munitions for the Government and regulating such manufacture and storage.

We recommend that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy be requested to confer on the subject and to submit to the Senate a proposed bill thereon.

We further recommend that the Secretary of War be requested to cause a rigid inquiry to be made into the conduct of the officers charged with supervision in behalf of the Government of the construction and operation of the Morgan plant and of the shipment of explosives and loaded shells thereto.

OIL AND GAS LANDS.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I have received a letter from the Secretary of the Navy regarding the oil bill which is now pending in the Senate. He has requested me to have it printed in the RECORD and read to the Senate. In the letter he states his opposition to the oil-leasing bill now pending in the Senate. I will ask that the letter be read and incorporated in the RECORD.

Mr. GRONNA. What is the Senator's request?

Mr. SWANSON. I simply ask that a letter from the Secretary of the Navy in reference to the oil-leasing bill may be read.

Mr. GRONNA. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, February 27, 1919.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I understand that a statement has been made by some Member of Congress that the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Navy favor the land legislation reported by the conference committee on public lands of the two Houses. You know my position all the time has been that while not opposing the leasing bill, which I favor, I have opposed incorporating any provision with reference to the naval reserves in such legislation. I do not favor the bill that has been agreed upon; I do not think it is just to the Government; and while it is better, so far as the naval reserves are concerned, than the original bill, my attitude is that the naval reserves ought not to be touched by legislation but ought to be settled by the courts.

I did agree with the Attorney General and the Secretary of the Interior upon a provision sometime ago that wouuld protect the naval reserves and would confer upon the President power to operate the going wells. I did this because I did not wish to assume to be standing in the way of the passage of legislation of importance which I favored, and I write you because I hope you will correct the impression that I have changed in my attitude. I believe that the naval interests require that whatever in the naval reserves belongs to the Navy by law should go to the Navy, though the final matter should be settled by the courts, unless the provision referred to, which the Attorney General and myself agreed to sometime ago, is incorporated. I think it would be a great mistake to go further than that. I will be glad if you will make my position known.

Sincerely, yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

HON. CLAUDE SWANSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield for a moment.

Mr. KING. I wish to inquire whether the request of the Senator from Virginia was to have the letter placed in the RECORD?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no way to keep it out, it having been read.

Mr. KING. I wish to express my dissent to such a proceeding.

The VICE PRESIDENT. When matter is read at the desk, the reporters have to take it down, and it goes into the RECORD.

FIFTH LIBERTY BOND BILL.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator from Oregon yield to me to present a report?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. Out of order, from the Committee on Finance, I wish to file a favorable report upon House bill 16136, to amend the liberty bond acts and the War Finance Corporation act, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to object to the receipt of the report at this time. I hope that the committee will give consideration to the amendment that I introduced to-day and had referred to the committee relating to this matter.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator that the committee had already acted upon this measure before the amendment was probably introduced in the Senate, certainly before it was called to the attention of the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then my objection will give the committee some time in which to consider the amendment between now and to-morrow.

Mr. SIMMONS. I withdraw the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report is withdrawn.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on February 26, approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

S. 68. An act to amend section 269 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary";

S. 3079. An act to fix the salaries of the clerks of the United States district courts and to provide for their office expenses, and for other purposes;

S. 5342. An act providing for the appointment of an additional district judge for the northern judicial district of the State of Texas; and

S. J. Res. 208. Joint resolution providing that one term of the United States district court for the eastern judicial district of Oklahoma shall be held annually at Hugo, Okla.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, there are a large number of nominations on the Executive Calendar waiting to be acted upon. I am not disposed to ask the Senate to go on with any on the calendar to which there is objection, but I move that the Senate proceed to consideration of executive business.

On a division, the motion was rejected.

CONSIDERATION OF THE CALENDAR.

Mr. MYERS. I ask unanimous consent that at the close of morning business to-morrow morning the Senate proceed to the call of the calendar for unobjected bills, and continue the call until the calendar is called once in its entirety for unobjected bills only.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PRICE GUARANTIES OF WHEAT.

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate proceed to consideration of the bill (H. R. 15796) to enable the President to carry out the price guaranties made to producers of wheat of the crops of 1918 and 1919, and to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. ASHURST. Is the motion debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not. I wish Senators would examine the rules occasionally. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

Mr. GORE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. ASHURST. I object to that.

Mr. GORE. Certain Senators out of love of good literature or to facilitate the business of the Senate desire to have the bill read in extenso. I ask that it be read.

Mr. SMOOT. A number of Senators were not aware that the bill was to be taken up at this time, and I suggest the absence of a quorum, that they may be here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, Cal.	New	Smoot
Bankhead	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Spencer
Borah	Kellogg	Overman	Sterling
Brandegee	Kendrick	Owen	Sutherland
Calder	King	Page	Swanson
Chamberlain	Knox	Pittman	Trammell
Colt	La Follette	Poindexter	Underwood
Curtis	McCumber	Pomerene	Wadsworth
France	McKellar	Sheppard	Walsh
Gay	McNary	Sherman	Warren
Gore	Moses	Shields	Watson
Gronna	Myers	Smith, Ariz.	Wolcott
Harding	Nelson	Smith, S. C.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT] are absent on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have no desire to seriously interfere with the bill which the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] has in charge. The bill undoubtedly will pass. It appropriates only $1,000,000,000, and therefore I apprehend that all opposition to it will be futile. If it appropriated $15,000 or $20,000 for some really proper purpose of the Government, it, of course, would not pass, but since it carries a billion dollars, to be ladled out of the Treasury, of course, it is going to pass this Congress.

I know the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture will give us some reasons why he thinks it should pass. I believe he is perfectly honest in thinking it ought to pass. Of course, the beneficiaries of the billion dollars are anxious to have it pass, and so those who are waiting hat in hand for this money to be ladled out to them are impatient with anyone who would seem to obstruct it.

I shall claim the floor but a few moments unless I am interrupted, but I feel that I ought to make an explanation. Half a dozen members of the Committee on Indian Affairs have approached me, and one of them approached me in a manner that I considered offensive, charging me with delay and neglect of the Indian appropriation bill. I want here to say that I have been guilty of no delay and no neglect in pressing the Indian appropriation bill. It was the unfinished business last Friday, and over my protest—and I made only a short speech of half a dozen sentences—the conference report on the leasing bill was made the unfinished business and the Indian appropriation bill was thereby displaced.

Now, Senators in whom I have confidence—I have confidence in all Senators, but Senators in whose judgment as to the business of the Senate I have confidence—approached me from both sides of the Chamber. I will not mention names. They told me they felt I ought not further to press the Indian appropriation bill; that I ought to withdraw my opposition to these other bills and allow the conference report on the Post Office bill to be adopted, which I did. Then the same Senators, and they are Senators who are charged with leadership in the Senate, said to me that I ought to permit the Diplomatic and Consular bill to pass. That appealed to me, and I did. I did not interrupt the Diplomatic and Consular bill, although I sat around here for two or three days. Then they said to me, "You should allow the fortifications appropriation bill to pass." That appealed to me, and I think it appealed to every Senator here. How much longer am I going to be asked to yield the Indian appropriation bill? At all times Senators were assuring me that they would assist me to bring up the Indian appropriation bill just so soon as those bills were passed.

Now, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] was not a party to these statements. I must acquit him of any part in those statements. Therefore he is not breaking faith with anybody in bringing up the wheat guaranty bill. Of course, he can not break faith with anybody in ladling a billion dollars out of the Treasury. Everybody is for that.

Now, I would have the Senate understand that while I do not regard the Indian appropriation bill—as I have stated at least four times—as the most important bill, it is nevertheless a large, important appropriation bill. The fact that I am soon to be displaced as chairman does not lessen my interest in that legislation. The fact that I am no longer to direct in a small way the affairs of the committee does not lessen my interest in the legislation. This bill has been considered by 15 or 16 serious-minded Senators; it is, I think, one of the best Indian appropriation bills we have ever reported, and it is the result of a good deal of reflection, the result of a good deal of investigation. Some of the investigations have gone back years in time. As the Irishman said, "I did not come to town yesterday," but when I was sworn into the Senate I was not familiar with its processes. You are all a body of high-class gentlemen, but it is human nature in the closing days of a Congress for everybody to follow the rule that whosoever can will get his bill through, and all promises to assist to bring up this bill or that bill amount to nothing. I make no complaint of it; I have had no unjust treatment; nobody here mistreats me; but I think it is due to the Committee on Indian Affairs that I make this explanation. The members of that committee have sat here patiently waiting, and several times I have urged them to remain, that I was going to bring up the bill. Is it fair to me to continually ask men who are very busy to be here all the time that I may bring up the Indian appropriation bill? If the Senate does not wish to consider the Indian appropriation bill, very well; that is the business of the Senate; I will make no complaint.

The other day when the conference report on the leasing bill was taken up a number of Senators approached me and asked me what was my attitude in the matter. I said I was indifferent; that I would not ask and never have asked a Senator to vote one way or the other, and nearly always when appealed to by Senators and asked how I should vote, I declined to answer. They vote the way they see fit, as I do. But I do say at this particular time I am impressed by the force of the idea that there was an unwritten understanding that the Indian appropriation bill should follow the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, and then that it should follow the fortifications appropriation bill. I do not mention names, but I can appeal to 20 Senators here and they will say I am correct in my statement.

Just in order to test out what the Senate wants to do, without any heat in the matter, without any feeling, but in order that I may know and the Committee on Indian Affairs may know, I am going to move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Before that motion is put, Mr. President, permit me to say if the Senate prefers to consider the bill to guarantee the price of wheat, I have no complaint to make. Why should I seek to set myself up or my little judgment up against the rest of the Senators? I ask Senators now to give me the yeas and nays, so that we will know whether the Senate is to consider the wheat guaranty bill or the Indian appropriation bill, and I will be content with any expression the Senate makes. I am entitled to the yeas and nays upon my motion.

So, Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KELLOGG. Is the motion debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not. Is the demand for the yeas and nays seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] and withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. COLT. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to announce my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF].

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] is detained on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON];

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MARTIN];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS];

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]; and

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON].

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—10.

Ashurst	McLean	Shafroth	Sutherland
Jones, Wash.	McNary	Shields
King	Overman	Smith, Ariz.

NAYS—36.

Bankhead	Kendrick	New	Smoot
Borah	Kenyon	Norris	Spencer
Brandegee	La Follette	Page	Sterling
Calder	Lenroot	Poindexter	Swanson
France	McCumber	Reed	Thompson
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Gore	Moses	Sherman	Walsh
Gronna	Myers	Smith, Mich.	Warren
Kellogg	Nelson	Smith, S. C.	Watson

NOT VOTING—50.

Baird	Goff	Lodge	Simmons
Beckham	Hale	Martin, Ky.	Smith, Ga.
Chamberlain	Harding	Martin, Va.	Smith, Md.
Colt	Hardwick	Nugent	Thomas
Culberson	Henderson	Owen	Townsend
Cummins	Hitchcock	Penrose	Trammell
Curtis	Hollis	Phelan	Underwood
Dillingham	Johnson, Cal.	Pittman	Vardaman
Fall	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pollock	Weeks
Fernald	Jones, N. Mex.	Pomerene	Williams
Fletcher	Kirby	Ransdell	Wolcott
Gay	Knox	Robinson
Gerry	Lewis	Saulsbury

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the motion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the yeas are 10 and the nays are 36. Senators CURTIS, COLT, CHAMBERLAIN, and OWEN being in the Chamber and not voting, the motion is lost.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I resume my request that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill is very short, I will say to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have no objection to the consideration of this bill, but I want to make a short statement, if I may be recognized.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it is obvious from the vote just taken that the Senate does not wish to consider the Indian appropriation bill. Of that I make no complaint; the Senate is the master; and I think the Senate should determine as to the measures it desires to take up. That is, as I assume, how the Senate shall do business. When the Senate does not want to do business it should vote a bill down, and when it wishes to do business it should vote it up. I congratulate the Senate on the celerity with which it solved that question, and if we would do that in the future, instead of employing other means not so direct, it would be better for the procedure of the Senate.

I repeat, I make no complaint that the Indian bill has been delayed, but I say in all courtesy—not as a threat, for I do not believe in making threats but in all courtesy—that so soon as I can obtain the floor after the pending bill has been disposed of I give notice that I will make another attempt to get up the Indian bill for consideration.

Mr. GORE. I desire to pledge the Senator my support in that effort.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether he desires to explain the pending bill before it is subjected to discussion? If so, as I intend to say a few words on the bill, I shall wait until the chairman has explained it.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I will say as the bill really has not been read at this time it is not my purpose to enter into a discussion of it. I am very anxious to speed its passage in order to make way for other legislation. I appreciate the importance of the measure, however, and I will say that the Senate Committee on Agriculture, in order to facilitate its progress, did not recommend any fundamental changes in the bill.

There were two or three amendments which we deemed advisable; one perhaps necessary—the omission of semolina among the articles enumerated to which the prohibition as to importation could be applied. It might open the gates for the importation of a good deal of semiprepared flour in that form and flood our markets with it. We thought that amendment was necessary.

There is another amendment, which enables the President to administer the measure in a way to enable the people of the United States to purchase flour at a reasonable price. It is not a mandatory provision. It is very difficult to standardize a proposition of that sort. It is rather an indication or declaration of policy. I think, apart from that, there are no amendments of any serious consequence, except that the House bill provides for the expiration of this and all other laws on the subject upon June 1, 1920.

The Senate Committee on Agriculture thought there might be circumstances existing at that time which would make it impossible to cut squarely off the entire policy and leave no elasticity for winding up the affairs of the Grain Corporation and its final withdrawal from business. We therefore vested the President with discretion to extend the period for 60 days within which to dispose of wheat that the Government might have on hand and to wind up the affairs of the Grain Corporation, limiting the powers to those two objects.

Upon further reflection I am inclined to think that perhaps that amendment ought to be rejected by the Senate, for Congress will be in session during the coming winter and spring, and we can determine next spring whether such a situation will arise. The situation can be provided for at that time if it seems to be necessary or desirable to do so. So I rather think that that amendment ought to be disagreed to.

Apart from that, I will say to the Senator from North Dakota there are no other important amendments reported by the Senate committee. Of course, the Senator and other Senators are familiar with the bill as it passed the other House.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think I fully understood the Senator's explanation, at least with reference to a suggested amendment to fix a lower price than the price now fixed for flour.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, it would only be by interpretation that the Senate could attribute that meaning to the language. It says "to enable the people of the United States to purchase wheat products at a reasonable price." That is a declaration of policy that the people should be placed in a situation where they can buy flour and bread at a reasonable price. There is no definition and there is no indication as to what a "reasonable price" would be; no standard is sought to be established upon that subject. An effort of that sort was made in the House, but was rejected by the House, and we did not desire to introduce into this measure seriously controverted propositions.

I assume that everybody is of the opinion that the people ought to be permitted to purchase wheat products at a reasonable price, and if the world price for wheat should be considerably lower than the price in the United States, I take it that a great many people would think that the American people ought to be permitted to purchase bread as cheaply as anybody else, or, at any rate, if it should become desirable or become necessary to meet the situation in this country and to assuage discontent, that power ought to be vested somewhere.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator think, if the wage earnings of the American people have increased three times over what they were in 1914, that paying a double price for flour would be an imposition upon them?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I do not think that one mistake justifies another. I do not mean by that to intimate that a mistake has been made with respect to wages, but on the assumption that a mistake has been made, the wage earners of this country and the consumers of this country are not responsible for this artificially high price of wheat, if it should prove to be an artificially high price. I do not believe in penalizing the innocent for the mistakes of—I will not say the guilty, but for the mistakes of the Government.

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, is the producer of wheat at all responsible for the higher price of labor and the higher price of everything that he purchases?

Mr. GORE. Not at all; and I think that is one reason in justification of this measure. The Senator from Arizona asked why this amount should be paid. Of course, he did not ask the question seriously, but in a Pickwickian sense. It ought to be paid because we have promised to pay it. That is one reason, and a sufficient reason, why it ought to be paid. There is another reason indicated by the Senator——

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me there?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator. If the Government has promised to pay anything, I will withdraw all I have said; if the Government has promised to pay this amount, I cheerfully retract anything I have said. In inveighing against the bill, I did not know that the Government had agreed to pay this amount. The Government should keep its bargain. But here is what struck me, if the Senator will pardon me for a moment, and then I will bother him no more: I am a firm believer in the doctrine of equal rights to all and special privileges to none. I firmly believe that, if the wheat growers of Oklahoma, North Dakota, and Montana are entitled to a largess or gift or bounty out of the Treasury, the cattle growers and sheep growers of Arizona are also entitled to money out of the Federal Treasury. That is the reason, and the only reason, why I never voted for the wheat price-fixing bill. That constitutes the only objection I have or can see to it.

The wheat growers of this country are just as patriotic as are the cattle growers and just as patriotic as the sugar-cane growers and the cotton growers, and if it be a matter of favor, if the Government is to be administered on principles of favoritism, I would be inclined, indeed, to favor the farmer before any other class, if we are going to favor anybody; but how can you, sir, as a Democrat justify taking large sums of money out of the Treasury to stabilize the price of one product when you neglect to stabilize the price of beef, the price of mutton, the price of labor, and of other commodities?

Mr. McCUMBER. Are we not taking money out of the Treasury to-day to stabilize the price of labor, and taking it out by the hundreds of millions of dollars?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the question of the Senator from Arizona is very easily answered. He compares the wheat growers with the sheep growers and the cattle producers. If a man who has not a United States bond secures such a bond, his bond ought to be paid. If the live-stock men of this country had the solemn obligation of the United States that they would be paid a certain amount in a certain contingency, then they would be entitled to payment. That is the only answer.

Proceeding further, in response to the question of the Senator from North Dakota and in answer to the Senator from Arizona, a further reason, in addition to the obligation, is the very fact mentioned by the Senator from North Dakota, that in procuring the wheat crop, particularly those who sowed wheat last winter, they had to buy seed wheat, they had to buy implements, and they had to buy labor at the high rates then prevailing. Nobody could penetrate the future and see that peace was so near at hand. They incurred these extraordinary expenses in preparing the current crop. That is an additional justification for this high price for wheat, if it should prove to be a high price.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that the farmers were offered this price as an inducement to increase their acreage, and as a result the amount of wheat planted was increased in every wheat-growing State in the country?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; and if it proves to be a high price, and if the taxpayers have to reimburse the Treasury for this outlay, I may say to the Senate, that it is a good deal like junking munitions of war. Millions of dollars' worth of war munitions will be cast into the sea and will be destroyed. They are utterly worthless because now they are unnecessary, and everybody rejoices that these munitions are unnecessary and that they can go to the junk heap, instead of going to our Army in Europe to be fired at the enemy. That is a justification for this measure.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator could go a step further, and could also say that we are now perhaps to take the enemy's warships, sink them to the bottom of the ocean, and then spend millions and billions of dollars for a Navy in order that we may uphold the price of labor to a war standard throughout the United States.

Mr. GORE. Yes; and aid the manufacturers of steel and the manufacturers of ordnance. I may say, if I can say it with propriety, that if those ships be sunk, it will be conclusive proof that the fool-killer is not off on a furlough but that he is dead. Such folly is unimaginable.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator—and I wish the Senator from Arizona and other Senators to hear this—that the farmers at the time the wheat price-fixing legislation was passed protested against it, because the market price at that time was, on an average, $1 a bushel higher than the price fixed in the law? I am ready to prove—and I shall challenge contradiction of that proof—that the American farmers lost by the enactment of that law more than a billion dollars. I make that statement, and I challenge any Senator to disprove it.

Mr. GORE. I will ask the Senator if he does not think that when the farmers receive payment under this bill they will come out just about even, as compared with the losses which were enforced upon them by the Government, that ought to protect them against unjustified loss?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, in reply I will say that may be true, if the farmers now get the price as fixed by the President of the United States on the 2d day of September, 1918—and that proclamation was based upon the law enacted by Congress. I want to say to the Senator from Arizona that this is a bond as genuine as any of the liberty bonds we have issued. If you want to repudiate, begin right now.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. I take the Senator's word for it that this is a bond, whether it is as good as a liberty bond or not, and if it is a bond in morals, I am going to vote for it.

Mr. GRONNA. It is a bond issued by the President of the United States under authority of law, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. Then, having in no sense been an opponent, now I am an advocate of the bill; but it was a very poor transaction that we entered into when we initiated and made this bond.

Mr. GRONNA. I agree with the Senator, and I opposed it; but the Senator then refused to assist me.

Mr. ASHURST. I voted against it.

Mr. GRONNA. Against the bill?

Mr. ASHURST. I voted against the bill fixing the price of wheat.

Mr. GRONNA. Against the food bill?

Mr. ASHURST. No; I did not vote against the food bill.

Mr. GORE. That was the bill in which it was incorporated.

Mr. GRONNA. Well, Mr. President, I simply want to say this. If the Senator from Oklahoma will yield to me, I can state my position in a very few moments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). The senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] has the floor.

Mr. GRONNA. Has my colleague the floor?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have the floor; yes; but I have been yielding; and if my colleague will allow me to finish, I will do so in a very short time.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well.

Mr. McCUMBER. I first want to reply to the suggestion made by the Senator from Arizona. Let us for a moment glance at the situation.

The only benefit that the farmer can get out of an increased price for his product is by being able to use that increased price in the purchase of things which it is necessary for him to live on. The Senator will agree with me upon that simple proposition. Then we should inquire what affects the price of the things which the farmer must purchase. Is not the price affected more by the increased price of labor than by any other one element? There is nothing in the world that is used in its raw state. The ore in the ground is raw material to the miner. It is his finished product as it is converted into pig iron for the use of the manufacturer. In turn the pig iron is the manufacturer's raw product. In every instance it is the raw material of some one who impresses labor upon it and increases its value. Now, by reason of the higher price of labor and the great diminution in the effectiveness of labor, we have increased the price of everything that the farmer must purchase from 100 to 300 per cent. That has been done advisedly and intentionally by the Government, not only during war times, but the Government proposes to continue that condition now that the war is over.

What steps have we taken to continue it? Let me enumerate a few of them.

The first step was to prevent, as far as possible, a surplus of labor. An order of the War Department was made that no man is compelled to leave the service of the United States until he secures a job that is entirely satisfactory to him. Therefore he can stay there, in the employment of the Government, receive the salary, small though it may be, receive clothing and board, and his family receive the stipend that is paid by the Government under a war necessity. All that is done so that there will not be a surplus of labor over the demand for labor, and so that the price of labor will not be driven downward. That action is all right provided that you exercise the same effort to maintain the price of other things which must be traded for that labor.

We do not even stop there, however. Fearing that labor prices might go down to meet the general conditions of trade, we voted $200,000,000 to go to digging down hills and making roads for States that have not made them as yet, upon the condition that the States will put another $200,000,000 into the enterprise and thus spend $400,000,000 for that particular purpose.

All of that is done to maintain the present standard price of labor. I am not complaining of it at all. I simply want to cite it for the purpose of measuring like justice to the men who have to buy the products of that labor by selling the products of their own labor with which to make the purchase.

Nor have we stopped there. We now propose to enter upon an enormous program of constructing public buildings so as to maintain a higher standard of wages for labor.

Nor do we stop there. We propose to build an enormous Navy and merchant marine for the United States, the latter at a cost of nearly $300 per ton, when we can purchase it outside for about $90 a ton; or, in other words, we propose to pay from three to four times as great a price as we can get the same work done for in other places in order that labor prices may not decline.

Nor are we stopping there. We are now proposing, and I understand that a bill for that purpose has already been introduced and reported favorably, to spend hundreds of millions of dollars to reclaim land so that our soldiers may take that land and produce farm products upon it.

There is not a single thing produced on the farm in the United States of which there is not a surplus. Therefore the farmer must struggle against surpluses in marketing his every product. We are spending billions of dollars of the public money to prevent a surplus of labor and maintain a higher standard of labor wage. On the other hand, you propose to take hundreds of millions of dollars to increase the already surplus of farm products and thereby drive the prices downward. Why, we are raising more wheat to-day than the American people can use; we are raising more cereals throughout the United States than the American people can consume; and yet you propose to take the dollars that are saved by the rigid economy of farmers of the United States to purchase more land, so that their surplus may be increased to such an extent that it will drive down the price below a living price. Why do you so favor one class and disfavor the other class?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I have listened closely to the distinguished and very able Senator, and I do not speak the language of flattery when I say that he is a very convincing and well-informed speaker. He tells us that the wheat crop this year is far in excess of what the American people can use, and yet the price of bread is astonishingly high.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is not astonishingly high——

Mr. ASHURST. It is high.

Mr. McCUMBER Not when compared with the astonishingly high prices of the goods that the wheat purchases in the market. On the contrary, to-day your flour is the cheapest thing on the face of the earth, compared with the amount of labor that is required to produce it, and the Senator knows that. No one will ever deny it.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well. I am glad to have the Senator put that into the RECORD. Now, I wish to be understood as making no objection to the prosperity of the farmer. Like all politicians, I am glad to see the farmer prosper. There is not a man in public life—or if there is he ought to get out of public life—who envies anybody an honest share of the prosperity that is due, and rightfully due, an American citizen.

It so happens that my State is not a leading wheat producer. It produces wheat, but it is not one of the leading wheat producers; but here is something that to me is inexplicable: It is not Democratic. It is not in accordance with the Democratic faith, to which I have always adhered. Agreeing that the farmer is a very worthy citizen, and, indeed, agreeing that he is the backbone of our country—that he is the producer—how can such distinguished Senators as my friend the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] single out one interest, and that the interest in which all people are interested, and guarantee a price, when they forget the miner, who goes down into the bowels of the earth and brings up the raw material that goes to make the steel and the iron?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not forgetting the miner. How much is he receiving a day?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. How much is the miner receiving a day, as compared with what the farmer is receiving for a day's work?

Mr. ASHURST. I want to say for the RECORD that there are six or seven thousand miners in my State out of work now.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. ASHURST. Let me finish my statement. If the Government had guaranteed and fixed a price on copper—which I do not want them to do—chrome, manganese, iron, silver, and had fixed the price on all these other metals just as it fixed the price on wheat, I could not complain. All persons would have been treated equally. I do not want a price fixed on copper.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator answer me just one question? Then I will yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. ASHURST. Why, certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to ask him what wages are being paid to the laborers in the mines of Arizona to-day?

Mr. ASHURST. They are paid on a sliding scale. It depends on the price of copper in the copper market. As the price of copper goes up the wages go up.

Mr. McCUMBER. What are the maximum and minimum prices?

Mr. ASHURST. The minimum is about $3.75 per day.

Mr. McCUMBER. Three dollars and seventy-five cents a day up to what?

Mr. ASHURST. That is, of course, the minimum wage.

Mr. McCUMBER. Up to what? What is the maximum?

Mr. ASHURST. It may go as high as $5.40—that is, during the war. I am not speaking of prices after the war—after the armistice was signed—I am speaking of prices during the war.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am speaking of the present prices. I want to know what they are now.

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, eight or nine thousand men are out of work in my State now.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but that is not the question, whether they are out of work or not. The question is, What prices are those receiving who are doing work to-day?

Mr. ASHURST. The prices range from $3.50——

Mr. McCUMBER. To $10.

Mr. ASHURST. Now, wait. They range from $3.50 to $5.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; and above that. I can show the Senator that he is away below the mark.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator says so——

Mr. McCUMBER. And for how many hours a day?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a minute.

Mr. ASHURST. It depends upon the character of the work. There are certain characters of work where our laws do not permit men to work over eight hours in the deep mines.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, in no case do they work over eight hours. Then there is your half holiday on Saturday with full pay and your price and a half for hours over eight hours. Now, can the Senator point to me a farmer on the face of the earth who is getting $3 a day or who is getting $2 a day or he and his family are getting $1 a day?

Mr. ASHURST. That does not seem to touch the deep philosophy of this question. The question is, Shall the Government take a class, whether it be the farmer or the copper miner, and say, "Here, you are not prosperous; we are going to pass laws to make you prosperous"? I do not want to single out a class.

Mr. McCUMBER. Why, of course you should not take the producer of grain unless you take the others; but I say, let them both alone from the beginning. If you leave the laborer alone, leave the carpenter alone, to hunt his own job, and then I say you may leave the farmer alone to hunt the price for his product; but you are not doing it.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. GORE. In that connection, and in response to the allusion of the Senator from Arizona to the fact that this was un-Democratic, and to his inquiry as to how I, as a Democrat, could support this sort of policy, I wish to say to the Senator that I agree with him entirely that it is un-Democratic. I think it is un-Republican. I thought it was uneconomic. I thought it was unconstitutional.

I thought that when we put the price of wheat lower than the market price we were taking private property without due compensation, and that we violated the Constitution of the United States, both in letter and in spirit. I protested, in season and out of season, against that act of injustice, against that injury being inflicted upon the farmers of this country. I voted against the measure which conferred upon the President the power to fix a price on wheat. I knew that we were parting from economic principles. I knew that we were sowing the wind, and that we would inevitably reap the whirlwind. There was no escape; the harvest is at hand. I expostulated with the Senate time and time again. I cited instances of failure all through the European countries that had embarked upon this policy. It failed everywhere. It did not have a chance to succeed. My fear was that the billion-dollar loss would fall on the farmers. It is a mere matter of chance and good fortune from their standpoint that it did not. The billion-dollar loss will now fall either upon the consumers of the country, who have had a billion-dollar benefit heretofore, or else the billion-dollar loss will fall upon the taxpayers of the United States; but that a loss must be entailed when we embarked upon this policy was as inevitable as death itself. I thought it was the perfection of folly. I thought it was a tragedy of error. I think so yet. But we did embark upon this high and troublous sea of experimentation. We cast the laws of economics to the wind. We must make port in the best way possible, and I am supporting this now as the minimum of evil. I told the Senate on one occasion when the measure was under consideration that my desire was to keep the inevitable mischief down to the irreducible minimum.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I rose to discuss this matter from a somewhat different standpoint. I felt, in view of the statements that had been made on the floor of the Senate and in view of the publications in the press that we were about to take $1,000,000,000 of the people's money to bolster up the price of wheat, that some one ought to explain the absolute falsity of any such statement.

In the beginning the bill was for $1,250,000,000; but even at $1,000,000,000 there is not a Senator on this floor who could not take $300,000,000 and maintain this price and without a loss of more than $300,000,000 to the people of the United States.

What else have we produced or promised to produce during the war period that we could get out of our contract as cheaply as we get out of this agreement to pay the farmer? Not only that, but you have taken from the farmer at least $1,000,000,000 and your utmost loss should not exceed $350,000,000, and therefore you should be ahead $650,000,000 in the transaction.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that the loss of $300,000,000 will be the maximum loss if this bill shall go into effect and the machinery herein provided for shall be utilized to carry it into effect?

Mr. McCUMBER. If the machinery could be just knocked out of the bill and allow the department to go right on under the old law there would not inure a loss of more than $350,000,000, and I propose to show that to the Senate so conclusively that no one can gainsay it. It is this wild extravagance on the part of all departments calling for two or three times the amount of appropriations that we actualy need for any particular purpose that is the reason why they are calling to-day for $1,000,000,000 instead of $350,000,000.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit a further question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I shall listen with great interest to the statement of the Senator. Has he an amendment prepared which he proposes to offer as a substitute for the measure submitted by the committee?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; I have not prepared any amendment, because I never knew what the bill would be until it was finally reported. We now have it before us, and I think the only amendment that is needed is to strike out all of it and simply appropriate $350,000,000, or, I would say, not to exceed $500,000,000, for the purpose of maintaining the price of wheat. I shall vote, perhaps, for the billion dollars, if the department says that it may need to use that much, but I insist that it is not necessary, and I further state that it is not an expenditure of money raised by tax, but nothing more than a revolving fund to assist in buying wheat and reselling it.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me, as I understand the Senator, it is his opinion from his investigation that at least one-half of this sum would be all that would be required.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is.

Mr. ASHURST. Five hundred million dollars instead of $1,000,000,000?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is, if the department in charge will perform its duty. Of course, it can pay salaries amounting to $500,000,000 if it sees fit; it can be as extravagant as it wants to be; it can throw away the money or burn it, if it so desires, but I simply insist that $500,000,000 would handle the crop.

Mr. ASHURST. Then if it were true that $500,000,000 would handle the crop, and we are not bound by contract or in morals to appropriate a billion dollars, why not change the bill so as to give $500,000,000 instead of $1,000,000,000?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know what the department would do. It might say that it was not enough. It might throw away and squander the $500,000,000, and then not be able to maintain the price. But I will give the Senator my reasons. The Department of Agriculture has recommended an appropriation of $1,000,000,000 as the bill has been amended. It has recommended it for the purpose of maintaining the price of the 1919 crop of wheat as fixed by the order of the President.

Were we discussing an appropriation involving two or three thousand dollars, I am certain I could secure the attention of the Senate if I would challenge the necessity of such an appropriation.

But when an appropriation reaches the billion dollar mark, every attempt to inquire into its necessity or to challenge its propriety seems to be met with a rebuff until it has become well known among Senators that the larger the appropriation the more certain is the passage of the bill carrying it. I, therefore, have little hope of changing the attitude of the Senate until a condition akin to bankruptcy shall bring our minds back where we are capable of measuring our expenses with the possibility of our income.

We are asking in this appropriation for $1,000,000,000 to maintain the price of a fair estimate between 800,000,000 and 1,000,000,000 bushels of wheat. Is this necessary? In ordinary times the Senate would ask itself this question. May I venture to ask it even in this period of reckless extravagance? Why is $1,000,000,000 necessary to maintain our guaranteed price of the 1919 crop? How is that sum to be used?

Certainly if the Government were in one transaction to purchase the entire crop at $2.26 a bushel, this sum would not be sufficient.

You would have to pay more than $2,000,000,000 if you were going to buy it all at one time.

If, on the other hand, the Government were to use the sum as a revolving fund, purchasing and reselling during the 18 months in which the farmer is allowed to dispose of his 1919 crop, it would not need the investment of more than $500,000,000. The Government simply could not purchase and store that much wheat at one time. There is not sufficient storage capacity in the United States to hold that much grain. But the Government does not intend to do that. I do not recall just what the previous appropriation for this purpose was. Whatever it was, it was sufficient to maintain the price without calling for a further sum.

I wish the Senator from Oklahoma would inform me, as he undoubtedly could, just what we appropriated when we passed the food bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Government appropriated $150,000,000 for the so-called Wheat Corporation. The Wheat Corporation borrowed a large amount of money in order to be able to guarantee that the Government would take any wheat offered by anyone who had purchased it, and the borrowing at times amounted, I think, to from $150,000,000 to $250,000,000 in addition to the $150,000,000

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, less than $500,000,000 took care of the wheat crop of 1918 and is taking care of it up to the present time.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. There is this difference between the 1918 crop and the 1919 crop. In 1918 foreign countries which had guaranteed a larger price were ready and willing and anxious to take all, or practically all, of the 1918 crop, and all the Government had to do was to have money enough to take the surplus as it was offered and carry it until it could be sold to foreign countries.

Mr. McCUMBER The Senator has struck just the key to this situation. All the Government has to do is to take care of the surplus that will not be consumed by the American public. That is everything the Government has got to do with it.

But, Mr. President, the Government has not maintained the $2.20 a bushel by buying in all the wheat at that price and selling it again. How is the price maintained at the present time? It is maintained by the simple edict of the President of the United States under the law fixing the price at the terminal markets at $2.20 a bushel and through rules and licenses which require everyone purchasing grain to pay this Government price and every miller to pay the price specified and to sell the product in flour to the public at a certain fixed price. That keeps the price at just exactly what it is fixed. The law under which this price is fixed and maintained is still effective, and will remain effective for a period ending June 1, 1920. If we accept the estimated acreage which has been or will be planted for the 1919 crop, as given by the Senator from Oklahoma, at 75,000,000 acres, and if we accept the average yield in the United States at 13 bushels to the acre, we will have 975,000,000 bushels of wheat raised in 1919. We will require about 650,000,000 bushels for home consumption and for seed for the next crop. That would leave 325,000,000 bushels of surplus.

So, Mr. President, if we maintain the present system, the Government will be required only to take care of this surplus. If the Government were to pay cash for this surplus at the guaranteed price, and if it bought it all at one time, it would need to invest $733,000,000. But we all know that the Government could not purchase all of this surplus at one time. If it would purchase $100,000,000 worth a month and sell it for export at the world's market price, it could get rid of the 325,000,000 bushels within eight months. And yet we are appropriating for this purpose ten times that sum.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, it seems a great pity that the interesting discussion by the Senator from North Dakota——

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope that the Senator will not call for a quorum.

Mr. MOSES. I suggest that this is a most important proposition, involving a great deal of money, and it is a very grave problem for the country. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Harding	McNary	Smith, Mich.
Beckham	Hardwick	Moses	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Henderson	Myers	Smoot
Brandegee	Johnson, Cal.	Nelson	Spencer
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Sterling
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Sutherland
Colt	Kellogg	Overman	Swanson
Cummins	Kendrick	Owen	Thompson
Curtis	King	Page	Underwood
Dillingham	Kirby	Penrose	Wadsworth
Fernald	Knox	Pomerene	Walsh
Fletcher	La Follette	Reed	Warren
France	Lenroot	Robinson	Weeks
Frelinghuysen	Lewis	Shafroth	Williams
Gerry	Lodge	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gore	McCumber	Shields
Gronna	McKellar	Simmons
Hale	McLean	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] are detained on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Sixty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The Senator from North Dakota will proceed.

Mr. McCUMBER. This proposed expenditure is on a plane with just what the Government has been doing ever since we entered this war. The Government has been spending, in my opinion, from five to ten times what it should have expended to secure what it has secured during all of the war. I can not see that we are checking our extravagance in the slightest degree three or four months after the war has practically terminated. It means, in my opinion, that the larger portion of this sum appropriated will be used to pay needless expenses and to meet rank extravagances. If handled properly, I believe that $300,000,000 would be ample, and certainly half a billion dollars, in my opinion, would be more than sufficient.

Now, I am not going to vote against the billion-dollar appropriation. Were it an actual appropriation to be expended in anything but the purchase of the surplus of the grain I would probably vote against it, but I simply want to say to the American people, who must pay the bill, that if the food-control department comes out at the end of the year with a loss of more than $350,000,000 to $400,000,000 it will be guilty of the grossest extravagance in the handling of this matter.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. KING. I apologize for interrupting the Senator in the midst of a sentence. I had in mind when he was giving the amount which he estimated would be sufficient as a revolving fund, with existing agencies to carry on the work involved in the understanding or contract of the farmers, a provision in the bill in lines 18 and 19, on page 3. After speaking of the authorization and what was to be done by the instrumentality employed under the bill I find that they are to use this money not only to purchase wheat but flour produced therefrom. Does not the Senator think, and I ask for information, because he has given this subject attention, and I have confidence in his judgment, that the bill contemplates that this commission shall engage in a sort of speculative business, that they are to buy and to sell not only wheat but flour, and that by embarking upon that policy it will need a tremendous business organization, larger capital, and of course a great many more employees, warehouses, storehouses, and so forth?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly, if it goes into the purchase of flour as well, it will require a slightly greater capital to handle the surplus flour, but the surplus flour produced in the United States is inconsequential as compared with the surplus wheat raised in the United States.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator from North Dakota will permit me to make a few observations in reply to the Senator from Utah, I will state that that clause, I understand, was put in the bill for this purpose: The Government does not wish to furnish all the money to buy the wheat; it wishes to invite all the capital of the country and permit those who buy it to sell it to the millers at the same price. On the other hand, when the Government is exporting, it much prefers to export flour than wheat, and the Government must take that instead of the wheat if it is going to carry out the guaranty. That is the only object.

Mr. McCUMBER. Assuming that the price of flour is considerably more than the price of wheat, it would cost a little more to handle the flour than it would the wheat proportionately, but it would not require any great amount more simply because wheat and flour are the same article and are not two separate articles; the one goes into the other. You do not first purchase the wheat and then purchase the flour.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think the Senator from North Dakota is correct in that statement.

Mr. McCUMBER. Now, Mr. President, a word on the merits. The Senator from Oklahoma says that the Government should purchase all of the wheat at this higher price and sell it to the consumer for whatever the world's price may be. He says that the consumer should not be penalized by being compelled to pay a high price for his bread. Let us look into this and see whether or not the consumer is penalized by paying this price for bread. This country is divided into two great classes. One-third produces the food for the other two-thirds. The two-thirds produce the other things needed by the producers of food and by all of the population of the United States. Then the Government entered into this war. The immediate effect of that war was to increase the value of food products, and especially of wheat, 200 per cent above the normal price. The Government immediately adopted a policy whereby it increased the labor wages of the two-thirds 100 to 200 per cent higher than the normal.

That was the natural law of supply and demand that the Senator from Arizona is contending for. The Government immediately then adopted a policy whereby it increased the labor wages of the other two-thirds from 100 to 300 per cent above the normal, and when you compute it by the efficiency of labor in products necessary to carry on the war you will find that it increased it even to a greater extent. The result of this was that the hundreds of things which the food producer must purchase were increased in value from 100 to 300 per cent.

If the administration had allowed the natural law of supply and demand to work out as between the two-thirds and the one-third of our population it would have worked about equal justice. But what did we do? We immediately reduced the price of the farmer's wheat nearly one-third. Did we cut down anything else produced by human labor except that which was produced by the farmer? Was there any other article of necessity—clothing, or anything else produced in which we laid upon it the hard hand of the Government and said you shall not advance above a certain price?

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator will permit me, I think he will recall that the price was fixed for coal and steel and copper.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; the price was fixed for coal, but was the price of coal cut down below what it was before the war?

Mr. PENROSE. I think so.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator, I think, is right in saying that there were two or three things reduced.

Mr. PENROSE. And copper.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; the copper price was fixed away beyond—fully 60 per cent greater than it was prior to the war.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator will permit me, I am in entire sympathy with his contention. I do not want him to think I am opposed in any way to fixing a fair price of wheat as long as it has got to be fixed. I am against all price fixing, but I did not want him to pass along with that inaccuracy when other products, Pennsylvania products particularly, have been cut in a very savage way.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not remember particularly that they were cut down, but I remember particularly that they were not allowed to raise according to the law of supply and demand.

Mr. PENROSE. Coal, steel, and copper I recall as having been cut down.

Mr. McCUMBER. The farmer's price was cut down when wheat was selling at $3.07 a bushel to $2.20.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, copper was selling and there was a ready market for it at 32 to 35 cents per pound, and the price-fixing board cut it down to 23.

Mr. McCUMBER. Twenty-six.

Mr. PENROSE. Later.

Mr. KING. Later it was cut to 22 or 23 cents a pound, and now it is very much less than that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think copper and coal were reduced. The farmer and the miner were the only parties, as I remember, whose products were held down below the supply and demand value.

Mr. PENROSE. And steel.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I would like to say in this connection that while the price was nominally and perhaps actually fixed on coal, copper, and perhaps other articles, that price was arrived at by a sort of agreement between the War Industries Board and some other board representing the Government and the producers of coal and copper. That may not have been a voluntary agreement. It may not have been reached by their free consent. There may have been a sort of compulsion. But this price was fixed on wheat not after a full and free conference with the farmer. It was recommended by a board on which the farmers had perhaps one or two or three representatives, but it was fixed over the protests of the wheat producers of the country from one end of the country to the other, and it had the force and effect of law, assuming that the statute and proclamation are constitutional. The statute contemplated fixing a minimum price only. The proclamation assumed and has been construed to fix a maximum or an absolute price. Congress intended no such thing.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. There is another distinction. Congress did undertake to give the right to fix the price upon coal. Whether it had that constitutional right or not I do not pause to consider, but it did undertake to do that thing. Congress never did undertake to fix the price of wheat. It never authorized anybody in the world to fix the price of wheat.

The price of wheat was fixed by the arbitrary exercise of the power of license. The power of license was intended to keep dealers in grain and dealers in flour from cornering the market or from forestalling the market or from fictitiously advancing prices. It was not intended for any price-regulation purpose, except to stop those practices which have always been denominated illegal. But that power of license was arbitrarily exercised by a private citizen in this wise: The food controller said to the grain dealer, "If you pay more than the amount I name, I will take away your license." He said to the miller, "If you pay more than the amount I name, I will take away your license." Having in that way taken away the market of the farmer for his wheat at any other prices than those he had arbitrarily fixed, he compelled the farmer to accept those prices.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REED. There was no law and no justification for that.

In the case of coal there was the color of law, at least, and as the Senator who has the floor I believe stated, there was to a large extent an agreement between the coal producers, whereas the farmer was not consulted at all.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will refer to the law under which the agreement was made he will find that the guaranty of $2.20 a bushel provided that it should not be less than that sum; instead of that being the maximum, that was to be the minimum; but the food controller, instead of allowing the price to run according to the law of supply and demand above that, immediately assumed that that was the intention; or whether he assumed it or not, certainly, through the instrumentalities which the Senator has mentioned, he prevented the farmer receiving more than $2.20 a bushel for wheat.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. What the Senator has just stated is correct. I desire to say further that, so far as the producers of coal or the producers of copper were concerned, it is true that they came to an agreement with the War Industries Board as to the price for which those commodities could be sold. I want to say to the Senator, however, that it was forced upon them; there is no question about it, for they would have been treated just the same as were the producers of wheat if they had not agreed upon the price for copper and coal.

Mr. McCUMBER. One of the peculiarities about the enforcement of this law and the laws which we passed in reference to it has been that the farmers have to buy clothes, and they must sell their wheat to get money with which to buy something to wear. While we cut down the price of the farmer's product it never occurs to anyone to cut down the price of cotton or of cotton goods. So the farmer has to pay three or four times as much for his cotton goods as he before paid. Had the law of supply and demand been allowed the farmer would probably have received from $3.50 to $4 per bushel for his 1918 crop of wheat.

Now, what did we do with reference to the other two-thirds? This is the way we treated the one-third who are producing wheat. Did we cut down the price of labor below the law of supply and demand? Did we cut down the price of the things which the farmer must purchase from the higher price to even double the normal price? On the contrary, we did everything to maintain that price and send it higher. We not only did this, but by our system of contracts and by our surrender to every demand, just or unjust, we allowed labor to decrease in efficiency from 35 to 50 per cent, so that, while wages increased from 100 to 300 per cent, the actual product from that labor fell off from one-third to one-half.

Does anyone think that under these conditions the consuming public, whose earning capacity has been doubled and trebled, is penalized by paying double the price for just this one article which the farmer produces, namely, wheat?

The war is now over, or at least supposed to be over, but are the wages or are the prices of the things which the farmer must purchase coming down? On the contrary, the Government purposes to continue construction of ships at a cost of three times what they should cost under normal conditions. The Government has already enacted a bill to enter upon a system of road making in which it has appropriated $200,000,000, together with a like appropriation from the States of $200,000,000, or $400,000,000. It is safe to say that the Government is now engaged and engaging itself to spend billions of dollars, at a time when the whole policy of the Government should be retrenchment, in order not so much to give employment as to maintain the standard price of employment at a war-time basis. The farmer is to be taxed. Every one who has any property on which the Government can fasten its tax grip must pay these extra sums to maintain the war standard of prices. Is not the consumer, and especially the laborer, getting the best of the farmer by the maintenance of his wages upon a war basis?

Mr. President, the Senator speaks of bread being the staff of life. The people of the United States pay for their bread, this staff of life, less than 1 per cent of their earnings. The most ordinary labor is receiving to-day at least $5 a day. If the laborer works 300 days in the year he earns $1,500. The increase in the value of his barrel of flour by reason of the Government fixing the price is about $5. He earns this increased price in one day. A little over two days' earnings will buy all the staff of life that he consumes in a whole year.

Senators do not stop to think how cheap flour is as compared with the other things which the American people consume. The average consumption to-day is about one barrel of flour per capita. One barrel of flour is worth about $12.50, I think, to-day. At that rate it would require, on an average, two days' labor to buy all of the flour that is consumed by one individual for a whole year. Can any Senator point out to me any other article of consumption that is so cheap to-day as is flour, compared, at least, with the labor that is required to produce that barrel of flour? Measured by the labor employed to produce a barrel of flour, this staff of life to-day is the cheapest thing that can be bought in the whole United States. So long as this war standard of prices is maintained there is no occasion in the world for the Government to purchase the farmers' wheat at a war price and then sell it to the public at a prewar value, while at the same time the public is receiving war prices for labor and war prices for everything produced by that labor. The two ought to be maintained together or the two ought to go down together. I do not care if a laborer receives $10 a day, if he will do an honest day's work, provided that he will allow other people who also labor to receive a price for their products that will enable them to buy his $10 per day product. That is all he has a right to ask, and he certainly should grant the same privilege to the other producing people of the United States.

Let us not lose sight of the fact that the wheat producer has been the only person who has ever been penalized by a reduction in the price of his produce. The Senator from Oklahoma admits that the wheat producers lost by reason of the Government fixing the price of their product $800,000,000. He bases that upon a loss of 80 cents per bushel on 1,000,000 bushels of wheat. In the first place, we raised 1,125,000,000 bushels of wheat in 1918, and the price, instead of being 80 cents more, would probably have been a dollar and a half or even $2 more had we allowed the law of supply and demand to work out its natural result.

The world had to have our wheat. Our allies were willing to pay $5 a bushel for that wheat if they could get it. It was said that we owed it to our allies that they should not pay such exorbitant prices for our wheat. Did we not owe it to our allies that they should not pay four times as much as they ought to have paid for their war materials? Yet we charged them any price that our people had the conscience to demand for the other things that we furnished to them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator will remember that at the same time we were cutting the price of wheat from $3.50 to $2.26 a bushel our allies were charging the United States the highest price that was ever known in the history of the world for everything that we purchased from them.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am well aware of that. They got the best price they could, and we got the best price that we could for everything that we produced. We were playing an equal game; each of us was doing the best for ourselves, with one exception. That exception was the farmer. He was not to have the best price that he could get; he was to be the "goat" in the transaction.

Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma admits, as I stated, that the farmers lost $800,000,000. Then the consumer of flour got the benefit of that $800,000,000, did he not? If the consumer of the flour during the war time got a benefit from the farmer of from $800,000,000 to $1,000,000,000, then, in Heaven's name, should not the consumer of flour be willing, now that the war is over and the price of his labor and his services are maintained at the old high rate, at least, that the farmer shall make back that loss—not make anything new or anything in addition to what he would have made; that he should, at least, recoup that loss by maintaining the price fixed by the President?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota permit an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The farmer, of whom I was speaking in regard to the loss to which the Senator from North Dakota is referring—which, by the way, this farmer denied—stated that even if there were a loss by reason of the action of the Government in fixing the price of wheat, it was more than compensated for by the increased price which the farmer got for corn, oats, and those other substitutes which the people were compelled to purchase at very high prices in lieu of wheat.

Mr. McCUMBER. Was the compensation above that of the law of supply and demand for those articles?

Mr. KING. His contention was that the Government had made a market for corn, oats, and other cereals, which otherwise would not have existed, by reason of its taking charge of the wheat in order to furnish wheat to the allies; that by furnishing a market to those other cereals it had given an enormous impulse to the price; and that the farmer had made very large profits out of those products.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the first time I have ever heard the argument made that by striking down the price of one product the farmer produces you increase the value of his other products. On the contrary, corn, rye, oats, barley, and everything that the farmer produces of a cereal character always responds to the rise and fall of wheat, although not to the same extent; but I never heard of a case in which wheat went skyward and the other products went downward at the same time. On the contrary, the whole rule of trade is that a high price for one product tends to give buoyancy to the price of every other like product or a product that can be converted into it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, generally speaking, I think the rule the Senator announces is correct; but I regard the position of this intelligent farmer to whom I have referred as a rational and logical one. If the Government, by reason of restricting the use of wheat at home for food purposes in order to supply it to our allies abroad, furnished a market for other cereals, obviously it would enhance the price of the cereals, while perhaps fixing the price of wheat might have reduced its price below what the natural market would have been.

Mr. McCUMBER. That had nothing to do with it. The advance in the price of other cereals was not based upon the lowering of the price of wheat, but, on the contrary, it was the result of the other proposition enunciated by the Senator, namely, compelling the American people to eat something else. Of course, if they are compelled to consume something else, it will increase the price of the commodities which they are compelled to consume.

I think the farmer will wait a long time for a just answer to the questions I have propounded. As I have already stated, all the food department has to do to handle this matter is to continue the present system. That system requires every miller to purchase wheat at a certain price; it compels the miller to sell the wheat, in the shape of flour, for a certain price, and that price takes care of 650,000,000 bushels of wheat. That will leave 325,000,000 bushels of surplus. What are you going to do with the surplus? If the Government bought it at the present price, and bought it all at one time, it would need only $733,000,000 to purchase it; but if it buys it at the rate of $100,000,000 a month and then sells that to Great Britain and to other countries at the world's market price, we would lose about $1 a bushel. If we should lose $1 a bushel, then the entire loss would be $325,000,000, or only about one-third of the loss that the farmer suffered in 1918 by reason of his price being cut down.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. If I understand the Senator correctly, he thinks that if this fund is properly handled the loss may be limited to $300,000,000?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; to about that.

Mr. WEEKS. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not, if the President had asked Congress last December or January to enact legislation repealing this law, so far as it applies to spring wheat, thereby saving any loss on spring wheat, there would have been a loss at all?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there would have probably been no financial loss, but there would have been a loss of honor on the part of the Government, because the Government had already agreed to insure the crop on the supposition of the continuance of the war and to maintain the price fixed; and, having agreed upon that, we can not meet that with the argument that, because the wheat was not sowed, we could violate our contract with reference to the part which was not sown, because the farmer arranges for conditions; he sells his seed wheat or retains it, according to his necessities; makes his arrangements for his help for the ensuing year; and makes his other contracts in anticipation of future prices.

Mr. WEEKS. The Senator has raised a great many contingent possibilities, some of which may be real, but some of which sound quite the reverse to me. Certainly we were not in a state of war in December or January, and certainly the farmer, where spring wheat is raised, had not taken any steps to produce any spring wheat other than possibly to set aside his land for that purpose.

Mr. McCUMBER. Would the Senator, then, provide that winter wheat shall be priced at $2.20 and that the farmers of my State shall receive only $1 for their wheat?

Mr. WEEKS. I am not thinking about the farmers of the Senator's State or of any other State; I am wondering why we could not, without doing injustice to anyone, have saved this dollar a bushel which the Senator says we are going to lose on wheat which had not been sown.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I will explain to the Senator from Massachusetts what the facts are. In order to have a successful crop of spring wheat, the plowing must be done in the fall. No farmer thinks of sowing spring wheat in my section of the country with spring plowing. They all do their plowing in the fall, before the ground freezes, and they plow in the fall if they can, even for oats and barley; but, above all things, fall plowing is required for the wheat crop. So all that work was done before the time to which the Senator from Massachusetts has referred.

Mr. WEEKS. If that were done, and the farmer did not use his land for the purpose contemplated, I think he would have a claim which he might make for damages to that extent.

Mr. McCUMBER. On the other hand, if he wishes to raise flax, he would raise that following the spring plowing; but it gets back to the proposition that even the farmer has to look ahead and arrange his plowing and other affairs according to the situation as it then confronts him. Let the Senator remember that at that time the farmer could not get any kind of help short of $5 and $6 a day per man to do the plowing.

Mr. WEEKS. If he has paid out $5 or $6 a day, then that could go into his claim. It is not very fashionable to try to save money; and yet it seems to me that there would have been an opportunity to have saved perhaps $200,000,000 and have done no injustice whatever to anyone.

Mr. McCUMBER. To me it would have been a rank injustice, first, by fixing $2.26 a bushel for one kind of wheat raised across a line in one part of the State and allowing only a dollar a bushel, or the world market price, for the wheat that happened to be raised across that line in the same or another State. Some of our farmers also raise winter wheat, winter rye, and so forth, and the farmer who was lucky enough to have provided for his winter wheat would get double the price that another farmer would receive for his spring wheat. There are a great many objections to the proposal made by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the peculiar condition we would have been in. While one crop, winter wheat, is sown in the fall and the other sown in the spring, they practically mature at about the same time; there is not much difference in the time of maturity. In the far southern States the farmers begin to harvest wheat in June, while in the north they begin in July. In my section of the country there is probably not a month's difference between the harvesting of the grain that is sown in the fall and that sown in the spring. So the man who sows winter wheat when he gets his grain thrashed would receive full price for it, while the man who sows spring wheat and thrashes a month later would not begin to get that price.

Mr. WEEKS. All I have to say is that the plan I have suggested was not followed, and so it is almost idle to discuss it; yet it seems to me that, if I had been responsible, I would have asked Congress to have passed that kind of legislation, coupled with it the provision that farmers could present their claims for any actual loss which they might have sustained because of having plowed the ground or taken some other action.

Mr. McCUMBER. Our courts, I am afraid, would have had some work to do in order to take care of the claims of 33,000,000 people in the United States. Possibly the Senator could have seen a way to have met that situation.

Mr. WEEKS. That number would have been limited to 330,000, I imagine, instead of 33,000,000 people.

Mr. McCUMBER. Even if it only affected 330,000, I think it would take 15 or 20 years to try all their cases.

Mr WEEKS. Is it not worth while to spend some time to save $200,000,000, if it can be done? Have we gotten to the pass where we can deliberately throw away money to that extent?

Mr. McCUMBER. There have been more than $300,000,000 of salvage thrown away on account of this war, more than $3,000,000,000 of it, and we have issued our bonds and we will have to pay for it, whereas in this particular case, if we lose a couple of hundred million dollars, it can be allowed as an offset against the billion dollars that have been taken out of the pocketbooks of the farmers for their 1917 and 1918 grain crop.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not think it any excuse, Mr. President, that we are losing a great amount of money in salvage. The Senator from North Dakota is not responsible for that, and neither is the Senate. The executive departments of the Government are responsible for that; and the executive departments of the Government are responsible for the failure to attempt to adjust this situation, in my judgment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think that it could have been adjusted as the Senator thinks it ought to have been. I was perfectly willing to allow the farmer to receive the price for his crop that the law of supply and demand fixed all the way through this war, and then to let him take his chances after the war. The farmer was willing to do that, and he objected to the fixing of the price of $2.20 a bushel upon his grain. What he asked was, "If you subjected him and his product to the law of supply and demand, that you should allow that law to apply in every other avenue of trade and business."

Mr. President, in the discussion of this subject the other day the Senator from Missouri questioned the authority of the President, as I understood him, to maintain an embargo against the importation of wheat into the United States in order to maintain the price of wheat fixed by him. The unfinished business coming before the Senate at that moment prevented my replying to his question. The power is very clear and explicit. The provision is found in section 14 of the act approved August 10, 1917. I shall quote only sufficient from that section to make that clear. This is the way it reads:

SEC. 14. That whenever the President shall find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat, and that it is essential that the producers of wheat produced within the United States shall have the benefits of the guaranty provided for in this section, he is authorized, from time to time, seasonably and as far in advance of seeding time as practicable, to determine and fix and to give public notice of what, under specified conditions, is a reasonable guaranteed price for wheat, in order to assure such producers a reasonable profit.

In that is the power. Then the law proceeds:

When the President finds that the importation into the United States of any wheat produced outside of the United States materially enhances or is likely materially to enhance the liabilities of the United States under guaranties of prices therefor made pursuant to this section, and ascertains what rate of duty, added to the then existing rate of duty on wheat and to the value of wheat at the time of importation, would be sufficient to bring the price thereof at which imported up to the price fixed therefor pursuant to the foregoing provisions of this section, he shall proclaim such facts, and thereafter there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon wheat when imported, in addition to the then existing rate of duty, the rate of duty so ascertained.

Mr. President, here is the power to fix the rate, and here is the authority to fix an importation charge that will protect the Government against any loss. The importation charge to protect the Government against any loss must necessarily be sufficiently high to prevent any importation at all. In other words, it must approach as nearly as possible an absolute embargo against any importation.

On September 2, 1918, in pursuance of this authority, the President proclaimed, after reciting the act, as follows:

Now, therefore, by virtue of the powers conferred upon me by said act of Congress, and especially by section 14 thereof, I do hereby find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat, and that it is essential that the producers of wheat produced within the United States shall have the benefits of the guaranty provided in said section, and in order to make effective the guaranty by Congress for the crop of 1919 and to assure such producers a reasonable profit, I do hereby determine and fix and give public notice of a reasonable guaranteed price of No. 1 northern spring wheat and its equivalents at the respective principal primary markets as follows, to wit.

Then follow the prices, ranging from $2.39 a bushel at New York to $2.21½ at Minneapolis, $2.18 at Omaha, and $2 at Spokane and points in Utah, Montana, and Idaho.

The proclamation then proceeds:

The sums thus determined and fixed are guaranteed by the Government of the United States at the respective principal primary markets of the United States above mentioned to every producer of wheat of any grade so established under the United States grain-standards act, upon condition that said wheat is harvested in the United States during the year 1919 and offered for sale before the 1st day of June, 1920, to such agent and employee of the United States or other person as may be hereinafter designated at any one of the above-mentioned cities, which are hereby declared to be the principal primary markets of the United States.

My whole address here is a protest against the claim that the people of the United States are to expend a billion dollars of the money of the United States to maintain the price of the farmers' product. I think I have shown clearly enough that a revolving fund of $500,000,000, if properly expended, would take care of the entire crop of 1919, and that in no case is it necessary for this Government to lose more than $350,000,000, if it maintains the price of all of the wheat up to the price now fixed by the order of the President of the United States.

We are not losing anything. We are paying back to the farmer just about one-third of that which we took away from him in 1917 and in 1918; and I protest against the claim that we are imposing a burden upon the consumers of wheat when we have given those consumers a benefit of over $100,000,000 a year, and are maintaining the earning capacity of the consuming public up to two or three times what it was when the farmer was receiving a dollar a bushel for his grain.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what he would think about this phase of the matter: If we are going to take this wheat at the price fixed, ought there not to be some arrangement whereby we would understand that the acreage would not be increased over that of last year?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not know how you would enforce a rule of that kind. That would seem to be an impossibility; and, above all, it probably would not amount to a difference of $25,000,000 even if we attempted it, and I doubt if it could be worked out.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I would not take the time of the Senate to discuss this bill were it not for the fact that the people of my State, and in fact all the people of the Northwest, are vitally interested in its provisions.

I appreciate the importance of a bill coming before the Senate appropriating a billion dollars to fulfill the guaranty of the Government. It is one of the results of a price-fixing policy. I did not believe originally that price-fixing was wise. I believe it would have been better to have controlled the exports from this country, and to have allowed the natural elements of supply and demand to establish the price. But, Mr. President, I realize that I may have been mistaken. It was, of course, of the most surpassing importance at that time that we should produce in this country enough wheat to enable us not only to feed ourselves but to feed our allies and the armies fighting with us on the soil of France. Without a wheat surplus the war could not have been won, and this guaranty is in effect a war expenditure.

Conditions existing when this food bill was passed will readily be recalled, and there was included in its terms a provision permitting the President to guarantee a minimum price for wheat.

In the dark days of 1917, and even later, when the last guaranty was made, it seemed to the Government absolutely necessary, if we were to win the war, to increase the production of wheat in this country. This was the only Nation, or practically the only Nation, to which the world could turn for a supply. The U-boats had completely cut off shipping from Australia, Argentina, and India. Russia was in a state of revolution, with no possibility of producing any surplus for export. The only hope of production, therefore, rested in the United States and in Canada.

The wheat shortage in foreign countries—I mean principally the allied countries whose production had decreased—and the smallness of the 1917 crop in this country alarmed the allies and the people of this country, for if the shortage had reoccurred in 1918 it would have been impossible to have fed the armies and won the war.

I wish to insert in the RECORD after my remarks tables showing the wheat production of the various countries and the prices prevailing in this country when we passed the food bill and authorized the President to prescribe a guaranteed price. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read the exhibits, but allow me to state that in August, 1917, when the food bill was passed, it developed that our total wheat crop was only 636,000,000 bushels, which represented the normal requirements in this country alone for food and for seed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the tables referred to will be printed as an appendix to the Senator's remarks.

Mr. KELLOGG. There was a deficiency of 400,000,000 bushels, compared with the previous year's crop. Allow me also to suggest that in France the 1917–18 crop yielded only 144,000,000 bushels, as compared with a normal crop of about 300,000,000 bushels, and the prewar crop frequently amounted to 375,000,000 bushels. England's small production had also been reduced. Canada produced a fair crop; but the entire available crop when the food bill was introduced and when it was passed was absolutely insufficient without the most strenuous economies and substitutions of other food products for wheat to carry on the war.

That being the case, let us observe the price and market conditions as they existed in 1917, because good reason undoubtedly existed for the guaranty which the President made.

In May, 1917, when the food bill was under discussion, buyers from foreign countries were competing in our markets for wheat at any price. England was bidding against France, France was bidding against Italy, and neutral countries were bidding against all three, in a feverish anxiety to buy wheat. In May, 1917, when the necessity for market regulation developed in the United States, wheat was selling in Chicago at $3.42 a bushel and in San Francisco at $5 a bushel, and those prices continued during that summer, gradually being reduced as the passage of the food bill, with the authorization to fix prices, became more certain day by day, and on August 12, when the bill was finally passed, wheat in Minneapolis was selling at $3.50 a bushel and in San Francisco at $3.40 a bushel. Of course, the fact that the President had the power to fix a minimum price and that Congress was about to recommend a minimum of $2, and, by reason of the licensing provision, the power to place an embargo on all foreign shipments, the authority vested in the President to establish a minimum of $2, if expedient, had a resulting tendency to reduce the price.

In August the bill was passed. Congress fixed a minimum price of $2 per bushel for 1918 and authorized the President to proclaim a guaranteed minimum price in the following language:

That whenever the President shall find that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat and that it is essential that the producers of wheat, produced within the United States, shall have the benefit of the guaranty provided for in this section, he is authorized, from time to time, seasonably and as far in advance of seeding time as practicable, to determine and fix and to give public notice of what, under specified conditions, is a reasonable guaranteed price for wheat, in order to assure such producers a reasonable profit. The President shall thereupon fix such guaranteed price for each of the official grain standards for wheat as established under the United States grain standards act, approved August 11, 1916.

There existed therefore a congressional enactment for a minimum of $2 per bushel. The President immediately took under consideration the production in the United States and the production in foreign countries. He had estimates of the wheat required to support the armies, or allies, and certain neutral countries which were depending upon this country to avoid starvation; and the President found that $2 a bushel was not sufficient to encourage proper production even for 1918, and he fixed the price at $2.20. I am now speaking of the Chicago market. The others were graded according to freight rates. This was afterwards increased 6 cents to make up for the increase in freight rates prescribed by the Government after the railways were taken over.

In February, 1918, the President fixed the price at $2.26 in Chicago and corresponding prices in other markets of the country. I wish to place at the end of my remarks that part of the proclamation of the President giving the specific prices in each of the markets of the country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KELLOGG. Now, Mr. President, let me state in a few words the history of price fixing for 1919.

We must remember that while in August, 1918, the German Army had met with reverses at Chateau-Thierry and on the Marne it had not been decisively defeated. No one, I believe, thought the war would close in November. I believe almost everyone expected the war to last at least another year. The President was confronted with the realization that we were cut off from Australia, from Argentina, from India, that Roumania and Russia were producing nothing, so, I have no doubt, that it seemed imperative to the President that the price for 1919 should also be fixed at $2.26.

In passing, let me say that we are not the only country which fixed a high price for wheat. I ask to have inserted in the RECORD here, as a part of my remarks, a quotation from the hearings before the Agricultural Committee of the House which shows the prices fixed in the foreign countries for 1918 and 1919; and it will be noted that prices in the United States and Canada were the lowest, compared with other countries. Prices soared as high as $4.44 for wheat in Italy, and varied between that figure and $3.30 in other countries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

FROM THE HOUSE COMMITTEE REPORT.

Mr. HAUGEN. We will settle this price business. I have before me the prices fixed by the various countries. Italy, for instance, fixed the price of hard wheat for 1918 at $3.60; soft wheat, $3.18; in 1919, hard wheat, $4.44; soft wheat, $3.96. France, in 1919, $3.84; 1918, $3.96. All the time the United States got $2.26. Holland, for instance, in 1919 fixed the price at $3.30; in 1918, $2.96. Switzerand, $3.18 for 1919, $3.36 for 1918. Norway, $4.09 for 1919 and $4.58 for 1918. The United States and Canada, $2.24 for 1918.

Mr. KELLOGG. The other countries in Europe were apprehensive, as we were, that the war would last at least another year. They knew that food was absolutely necessary and that the price was of less importance than production. To be sure, the war ended suddenly, and it is quite likely that if we had not guaranteed the price for 1919, owing to the ability to some extent to ship grain from Argentina and from Australia, the price would be less than $2.26. That is one of the things I shall discuss, and it is one of the risks we assumed when we gave our pledge, which the United States of America must and will keep, as it has kept all of its pledges.

Mr. President, it is true that it is always difficult to pay for a "dead horse," as they say. We only look at the amount that we are going to pay if there is a loss on this crop, and we observe the enormous amount of this appropriation, and all, of course, regret the necessity for it. I do not think the loss will reach a billion dollars. I shall discuss that matter later.

I have taken some pains to inquire of the best experts on the prices of wheat and flour, men who knew the conditions in 1917, to determine, if possible, the extent of the loss to the American people if the price had not been fixed. Now, in passing, let me say this:

There seems to be a general impression that the farmers asked to have the price fixed and guaranteed. I think the Senators will remember that neither the farmers nor representatives of farmers' organizations urged the fixation of prices in 1917. In fact, resolutions and protests from farmers and farmers' organizations against the fixing of prices were submitted from every section of the country.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact that there were a number of petitions presented in Congress for some form of fixing the price of wheat, or at least of curbing the activities of those who purchased wheat and who dealt in flour? As I recall, the distinguished Senator from North Dakota appeared here upon the floor on a number of occasions and urged that Congress fix the price of wheat.

Mr. KELLOGG. When the food bill was before the Congress the protests, with which I am familiar and which came to me, opposed action by the Government in fixing any price for wheat, because they knew that the price was at that time very much higher than the Government would recommend. I stated in the Senate on July 18, 1917, that—the farmer is not asking you to single him out and guarantee him a minimum price. What he asks is that his market shall be left the same as all the other markets in the country, free and open. If you are not going to do that, if you are going to take away his market and control prices, then it is for the interest of the whole country more than it is for the interest of the farmer that the President be authorized to guarantee him a good, liberal minimum price.

I shall further answer the question. While the bill was pending it provided a minimum price of $2, and while it was under consideration petitions and communications that I received were opposed to any price fixing at all, and why?

Wheat was selling, as I said before, in May, 1917, at $3.42 a bushel in Minneapolis, and at from $4.50 to $5 in San Francisco. Is it reasonable to suppose that the farmer who knew the world crop was short, who knew that there was a very short crop in this country, would ask Congress to fix a price of $2 when he was getting $3.42 in my part of the country? Certainly not. The fact is that most of the petitions which I had came from people in the cities who feared the increase of prices beyond all reason, and they were properly very anxious about the subject.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. KELLOGG. Certainly.

Mr. KING. There was some period, was there not, within the past two years, and even a short time before that, when the prices of flour were so great in proportion to the price of wheat, the disparity was so great, as to lead the farmers to a strong movement in favor of legislation that would at least give them a higher price for their wheat measured by the price at which the flour was sold or bring the price of flour down nearer to the price of the wheat?

Mr. KELLOGG. I will answer that question in this way: The farmers submitted no petitions urging that the price of wheat be fixed at $2 a bushel when it was selling in the market at $3.42. In 1917, when the market for wheat was utterly beyond control and the market for flour had become inordinate, flour was proportionately too high compared with the price of wheat. The farmers sold the bulk of their wheat before May, 1917; in fact, they sold it in the autumn and winter of 1917, for the Senator knows that winter wheat is marketed fairly early in the autumn, and spring wheat during September, October, and November, at least, to a very large extent.

As to the demands of the farmers, after the President had intimated that he would himself fix the price in 1917 and 1918, and that the guaranteed price of $2 a bushel as fixed by the Congress was inadequate, the farmers then petitioned the President to fix the price at $2.50. I remember some of them did, and I presume that others asked a much higher price than that, because they knew that prices in the market would not normally have been less than $2.50 and undoubtedly would have exceeded $5.

I shall return, now, to the question of how much the American people have really lost, even if we should sacrifice the entire billion dollars, which I do not apprehend.

As stated, I have made a careful inquiry of men who were familiar with market prices in 1917, with the enormous demands of foreign countries, the wheat shortage here and in Europe, and the following is, I believe, a fair recital as to what might have occurred. I quote from a memorandum which was handed to me.

> When you consider the fact that flour at the mill door went to $16.75 a barrel in May, 1917, and without the stabilizing influence of the Food Administration would, no doubt, have gone to $25 a barrel, you can readily see the saving to the public as represented between the difference of these prices and the price actually prevailing, which is under $10 a barrel.

When that was written the price was still under $10.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator state when that memorandum was written?

Mr. KELLOGG. It was written on February 17, 1919. It continues:

> Assuming that flour would have gone to $20 a barrel, the saving to the American consuming public was $1,100,000,000, which in itself is a fair estimate of the actual saving effected.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KELLOGG. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator have before him the price of flour per barrel in Great Britain and in France and in South American countries at the time he says some expert says it might have reached $25 a barrel except for the activities of the Food Administration?

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not have information as to prices prevailing at that time in foreign countries. In Canada it was substantially the same as in this country. In South American countries, of course, they could not sell their crop, and they do not present fair illustrations of market prices. Argentina was unable to export her crop, because it could not be shipped. I can not give the Senator the prices, but I shall be glad to procure them if he desires.

Mr. KING. I have them generally in my mind, and I know they did not nearly approximate the maximum stated. I think that is a good deal of a fiction upon the part of the expert to whom the Senator refers. I think there is a determined effort upon the part of some, and, of course, I do not include the Senator nor any Senator for that matter, to make it appear that the losses to the farmer were extraordinarily great by reason of the passage of the Food Administation bill. I am in favor, of course, of the Government carrying out any contract which it made, but speaking generally I think it may be said that the farmers of the United States during the progress of the war have fared pretty well. They have received a good price for their farm products, for their cattle, their sheep, their pork, and certainly for their corn and cereal products on the farm. I do not think we make much by trying to have the farmers believe that the hand of the Government has been arrayed against them.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I am not attempting to establish any such a case. I am simply stating the facts, for I know the Senator is aware that one of the reasons for the passage of the bill was that wheat then sold at $3.42 a bushel and there was general anxiety in the country that it would greatly exceed that figure.

I recall that a number of men who were familiar with market conditions told me in May, 1917, that they had no idea where wheat would go unless the Government controlled it, and I believe, and it was a perfectly proper consideration for the Congress, that one of the important inducements for passing the bill was that flour and wheat prices should not rise too high; and it had equal influence in guaranteeing the increased production. I simply state that as a part of the history.

We made a pledge. The Congress thought it was wise. The President thought it was wise. The fact is that the solemn pledge of the Government has been made and we must redeem it. What means are to be employed and in what manner may we protect the Government from the greatest loss, minimize that loss to the country and furnish food to the people at reasonable and fair prices? This bill provides a means of purchasing the crop by the Government and selling it in the market. There have been three plans suggested and discussed at great length before the Committee on Agriculture, and, with the permission of the Senate, for a few moments I desire to state those plans.

One plan contemplated opening the markets of the country and allowing grain to be sold at prices declared by the various grain exchanges in the markets of this country and in Europe, and settling with the farmer for the difference between the price he actually received at his market and the price he would have received had he been paid the Government guaranteed price of $2.26.

There seemed to the committee, as I understand, though I am not upon the committee, various objections to this, namely, that it would require the vast machinery of the Government to deal with millions of farmers individually; that the farmer would feel an uncertainty as to what price he was going to receive from the Government; and that he would have to institute a claim against the Government and collect it. I believe it may be said without reflecting upon public officials that the people do not look with favor upon the practice of collecting their losses from the Government. Throwing open the grain exchanges of the country would also have tended to manipulation. Foreign countries could enter the markets or refuse to compete; and either crowd prices down and increase the loss to the Government or push them up after the farmers had sold their grain. In any event, it seemed to the committee that it was an impractical way of adjusting the loss and compensating the farmer, who would have had to deal with each local elevator or grain market agent in every village, town, and market of the country, and the Government would have been compelled to make that agent its representative for adjusting the credits and losses with the individual farmer. So that plan was not adopted.

The second plan was to buy the grain and to sell it to the American people, or so much of it as could be sold, at the guaranteed price, thereby compelling the American people to pay for their flour on the basis of $2.26 per bushel for wheat, irrespective of the price charged by us for the surplus which we might sell in foreign countries, and irrespective of the price that foreign countries would pay for their bread. It seemed, I believe, to the committee that we ought not to charge the American workingman and the American business man and the millions of people in this country who must have bread a higher price than other countries were paying for it or any more than what would ordinarily be the normal market price.

The third plan, which I understand to be the one really adopted by the committee, was to authorize the President to purchase the grain at the guaranteed price and to sell it at a fair world market price. There is a provision in the bill which is supposed to effectuate that object.

It provides that the President may purchase "for cash, or sell, consign, or contract for the sale of, for cash or on credit, wheat of the said crops of 1918 and 1919 and flour produced therefrom at the said guaranteed prices or at such other prices and on such terms or conditions as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act and to enable the people of the United States to purchase wheat products at a reasonable price."

Of course, the Grain Corporation, which is the machinery to be used to purchase and sell this crop, may undoubtedly have some influence in foreign markets in fixing the world's level of prices, because whatever amount Europe draws from Argentina, from Australia, from Canada or India—and those are the only countries from which the European countries can obtain a supply—in all human probability she must still purchase from us from 250,000,000 to 350,000,000 bushels of wheat, depending upon the world's crop; and while we may have a much larger surplus than that, yet I think anybody will realize that our selling agency may have some influence in the European countries in fixing prices. But undoubtedly should there be a great world surplus we could maintain the world market at $2.26 a bushel. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] has discussed the necessity for having a billion-dollar appropriation. I realize that that is a very important question in view of the enormous appropriations which this Congress must make. In order to decide whether the appropriation should be a billion dollars we must understand the conditions under which the grain is marketed, and 1918 is not a fair illustration of what 1919 will be. In 1918 the Government created a grain corporation with a capital of $150,000,000, and that corporation borrowed from other departments of the Government and from the banks in amounts ranging, I understand, from $250,000,000 to $350,000,000, and perhaps $400,000,000. I have not the exact figures before me. Why was it necessary to have $400,000,000 to $500,000,000 this last year? To be sure, the Government could sell most of the grain it purchased as soon as it could transport it to Europe, but in this country there are thousands of elevator companies—the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] will correct me if I am in error—and I think there are three or four thousand farmers' elevators in the Northwest owned by the farmers.

Mr. GRONNA. That is correct.

Mr. KELLOGG. There are hundreds of line elevators and many terminal elevators in the cities all the way from New York to the Pacific coast. All those companies have large capital. The farmers' elevators have some capital, but not as much, of course, as others mentioned, but they are usually not included in line systems. They were perfectly willing to invest all their capital to purchase the grain, provided there was assurance that the surplus would be taken off their hands at the Government guaranteed price. The result was that every elevator in the country was authorized to purchase grain at a fixed price. They were authorized themselves to sell to millers at a fixed price and to turn over to the Government at any time the surplus in the form of wheat tickets, or what are known as warehouse tickets, and receive their pay from the Government; and the Government stood ready and did at once accept through the wheat corporation every bushel of wheat offered.

There were about 319,000,000 bushels of surplus wheat in this country last year out of a crop of 917,000,000 bushels. As I understand, the United States Grain Corporation has already sold over 250,000,000 bushels at the guaranteed price, plus the cost of handling, and it will undoubtedly sell the remainder this year at the guaranteed price to foreign countries. So the Grain Corporation will have a capital of $150,000,000 and probably $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 as handling charges for the crop.

Mr. CURTIS. I think at a committee hearing a few months ago it was shown that the Grain Corporation already had a profit of some $5,000,000 or $6,000,000.

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; the Grain Corporation derived a profit from the sale of grain to foreign countries of $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 some five or six months ago, and they hoped to increase that when the whole crop this year is sold. I understand there will be a capital of $150,000,000 to $160,000,000 or $170,000,000 to begin with.

We will be confronted with the same condition this coming year. But before I come to that let me say that I do not know whether the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] intended to state that money had been wasted. My opinion is that the Grain Corporation, through Mr. Barnes, who is a very able man, handled the wheat crop of 1918 with great ability and has not wasted any money and will really make a profit for the Government in the sales to foreign countries. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is more familiar with the details of it than I am, but I believe that to be true.

Mr. GRONNA. I believe it is true.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is estimated by the Agricultural Department that there have been about 49,000,000 acres sown to winter wheat, which would be an increase in acreage of 16 per cent over last year; that if the spring wheat is increased in the same proportion there will be about 75,000,000 acres, and we may expect a crop ranging from 950,000,00 to 1,100,000,000 or 1,200,000,000 bushels, and possibly more, though I quite agree with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] that it is unlikely that we will realize the larger amount. We rarely realize the expectations of February and March.

But assuming that there should be a billion bushels of wheat, the Grain Corporation must be prepared to take every bushel of wheat offered by any elevator or mill company or any purchaser in order to invite all the private capital in the country to invest in wheat. No purchaser, whether it is a farmers' elevator, a line elevator, or a mill, will buy grain at a Government guaranteed price unless that customer knows it can sell the wheat at the same price. In fact, as I said yesterday in the Senate, if we should fail to pass this legislation and the Government guaranty of $2.26 should continue, there would not be a dollar of capital in this country nor any of the facilities of the elevator companies and mill men throughout the country available to handle the crop of 1919.

Mr. President, it has been suggested that the Government should have repealed the law providing for a guaranty of $2.26 for spring wheat because the spring wheat crop had not then been planted. I suppose the Senate is familiar with the fact that the winter wheat crop is on an average double the amount of the spring wheat crop. If we should have a billion bushels of wheat it is probable that 650,000,000 bushels or thereabouts would be winter wheat and 350,000,000 bushels would be spring wheat. To be sure the spring wheat is not yet planted, but spring wheat is planted with winter wheat all the way from Texas to the northern boundary of this country. Generally speaking the spring-wheat country consists of Iowa to some extent, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Montana; considerable is raised in Nebraska, Kansas, and the amount diminishes as you go south.

If the Government was to repeal the law as to spring wheat, to say nothing about good faith at this time, it would be entirely and absolutely impracticable. The spring wheat will begin to be planted in a very few days, if it has not already commenced in the Middle Western States. Not only that, but if anyone knows how they could maintain an open market in this country for spring wheat and a closed market for winter wheat existing side by side, they know more about economics in handling grain than I do. It can not be done. Furthermore, whenever a farmer takes his wheat to the market, some one would have to determine whether it was winter wheat or spring wheat, and many other complications, to say nothing about the honor and credit of the United States, would, I think, make it entirely impracticable.

No repeal was undertaken, and, as I said before, the farmer has prepared to plant and is now in some parts of the country actually planting, if he has not already planted, his spring wheat. In my country it will soon commence. They have prepared for it. The ground is plowed, every arrangement has been made in the way of purchasing or keeping the seed, and in all their other farm arrangements for the spring of 1919 the matter has been kept carefully in mind.

I know of no other way in which our Government can honorably fulfill its pledge, a pledge made in the darkest days of the war, when wheat was as necessary as men to fight the battles, but for the Government to purchase the crop or provide means for its purchase, thus carrying out the compact. It is one of the resulting losses, one of the expenses, I might say, of the war. When this country undertook to marshal not only its millions of men to fight the battles of this war, but all its resources, all its energies, and all its economic forces, we did not hesitate to pay any price for munitions and instrumentalities with which to prosecute the war. We did not hesitate to safeguard allied nations against famine while fighting the battles of the war. I say now that the only honorable course is to meet this pledge in the most economical and efficient way possible, and I believe this measure accomplishes that object.

I can not say how much the loss will be to the American people. To be sure, as the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] said, we have only to buy the surplus, and if we buy the crop and it is the policy of this country to sell that wheat to the people of this country at the same price, or substantially the same price, it is to be sold in Europe, we may sustain great loss. It is not probable that it will amount to a billion dollars; but, after all, can we afford to say to the American people that they shall pay a guaranteed war price for their bread and the peoples of Europe may buy it cheaper, or is it better for us to pay the loss as a war item and let the American people derive benefits the same as people of foreign countries?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. KING. I am not quite sure, in view of the last statement and the preceding one just submitted by the Senator, whether he advises that the Government shall sell the wheat and the flour which it takes over or which it may take over on the market at market prices or whether, by putting on a prohibitive tariff or a tariff or embargo of some character, and thus keeping out any competition, it will attempt to raise the wheat price higher in order that it may be made whole, thus, of course, compelling the domestic consumer to pay more than the world market price for wheat and flour.

Mr. KELLOGG. My judgment is that the honest and most beneficial thing to do would be to sell the wheat crop and the flour produced from it to the American people at the fair world market prices so that they as well as Europe may have the benefit of those prices. That is my judgment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Minnesota takes very safe and sound ground in the statement just made. I now ask the Senator whether he agrees with the position taken by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], that $300,000,000 or $400,000,000 would be sufficient for the purpose of covering the loss that the Government may sustain, and that that fund would be sufficient to carry out any legitimate responsibility resting upon the Government under the promise which has been made, and which the Senator has discussed?

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, three or four or five hundred million dollars in all human probability would not begin to be enough to handle the crop, whether our loss is $300,000,000 or $500,000,000. I will state the reason to the Senator. Even this year, with a market for all the wheat we could ship abroad and as rapidly as we could ship it, it required from $350,000,000 to $500,000,000 to handle the crop.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator explain where Mr. Barnes and the committee that had control of this matter obtained funds with which to handle the crop?

Mr. KELLOGG. I stated that the Grain Corporation, under the law and order of the President, was authorized to borrow the balance of its capital. The Government advanced temporarily out of other funds, I am told, $125,000,000 I think it was, which has already been returned. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] will correct me if I am wrong. They have borrowed the balance from the banks throughout the country. At times, I understand, those amounts ran from $150,000,000 to $250,000,000.

The fact is that as rapidly as the grain reached the terminal elevators in all the markets of the West the elevator companies simply took a warehouse receipt, turned it over to the Grain Corporation, and received their money. In no other way could the elevator companies, the Grain Corporation, and the mills have handled it, because they had no market in which to sell it. They were only permitted to sell to the mills at the Government price. At one time I know the Government had in store in the elevators of this country 234,000,000 bushels of wheat, and I think the Senator from North Dakota will bear me out in saying that that was some time in November. That amount of wheat at the market price represented nearly $500,000,000. The fact is that even last year, with the ready demand in foreign countries, the grain could not be shipped as rapidly as it was received by the Grain Corporation, and, of course, if we should have a billion bushel crop next year and a market only for 300,000,000 bushels, the Government would require greater storage facilities to handle the surplus, which possibly may extend into next year.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Minnesota is correct in his statement. Congress appropriated only $150,000,000, to be used as a revolving fund, and whatever money was used above that was borrowed by the Grain Corporation. I do not know why any Senator should assume that we are appropriating a billion dollars here to be paid to anybody. It is an authorization, and the President would be allowed to draw upon this fund to the amount of a billion dollars. If it is not required, of course it will not be used; but Mr. Barnes—and I am glad to say to the Senator from Minnesota that I indorse what he has stated with reference to Mr. Barnes—has handled this matter efficiently and well. I have followed it with some interest, I will say to the Senator. Mr. Barnes has testified that we ought to have a billion dollars; that, in his judgment, we should not have any less. It was at first proposed that we should have a billion and a quarter dollars, but that was cut down to a billion dollars; not with any idea or view that this was going to be a loss to the Government—but I shall explain that later on, as I do not wish to take the Senator's time.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator from North Dakota has made such a statement. There are in this country thousands of elevator companies, as I stated, and several thousand farmers' elevator companies, line elevator companies, terminal companies, storage companies, and so forth, all over the wheat country. In fact, they are found all the way from New York to San Francisco. They have very large private capital and the capacity for borrowing hundreds of millions of dollars if necessary, but unless the Government has a fund upon which the Grain Corporation may draw so as to insure purchasers that they may at any time turn it over to the Grain Corporation that private capital will not invest in grain.

I know that many of the experts who have talked to me about it—and I presume they have presented the same facts to the committee—said that this was in the nature of an insurance fund, so that private capital would step in and handle the grain and sell it to the mills, knowing that when they had a surplus they could turn it over to the Grain Corporation and get their money at any time. No company, no individual, would dare purchase a bushel of wheat at a guaranteed price, either last year or this year, unless the Grain Corporation, under authority of the Government, insured the purchase. I do not believe the entire billion dollars will be required to handle the crop, but I think it is necessary to appropriate that amount as a guaranty fund to insure the safe handling of next year's crop.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to inquire whether, in view of the statement just made, opportunities are afforded under this bill for speculation? The Senator has just alluded to the fact that this billion dollars would be treated as a sort of insurance fund, and would induce grain elevators, terminals, and private persons to go into the market and purchase grain and then dispose of it to others.

Mr. KELLOGG. I can answer positively that the Grain Corporation has power to issue, and does issue, licenses to every mill, every grain dealer, and every elevator company, and fixes the price at which the elevator companies shall sell to the mills, and the price the mill companies shall charge, so that there is no opportunity whatever for speculation; but it will permit the elevator companies to sell to the mills at the price fixed by the Government, so as to avoid investment by the Government in grain and withdrawal of funds while it is being turned over. They permit elevator companies to sell direct to the mills at the guaranteed price.

Mr. McCUMBER. What is the profit, then, that is given, and how is the profit paid to the elevator companies?

Mr. KELLOGG. That is determined by the Grain Corporation. They absolutely regulate the price.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well. Then let me ask the Senator this question: If that is true, why not let the grain pass along finally to the miller just as rapidly as the miller needs to use it; and why is not the miller's cash invested in that as he needs it?

Mr. KELLOGG. It is.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, if the milling capacity of the country is kept going all the time, it is paying out for that wheat not through the Government, but paying out cash to the mills for that wheat from month to month, from week to week, and from day to day, then finally do we not get down to the proposition that all the Government needs to look out for, if this fund is operated economically and properly, is to take care of any surplus that may be put into the market above what the millers need to grind?

Mr. KELLOGG. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Therefore, all we have got to do is to take care of the surplus. The Senator would not claim that that would amount to very many hundreds of millions of bushels at any one time?

Mr. KELLOGG. It is not at all improbable that the Grain Corporation, representing the Government, may have to buy and to store more than 500,000,000 bushels at one time. Of course everyone knows that can not be accomplished with three or four or five hundred million dollars.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me one further question, as I understand the Senator's position it is that in order to stabilize the market, to prevent speculation, to give the Government the power to handle this as it may see fit, it must assume a continuation of the war powers and go into the States, give out licenses, and take charge of these purely domestic matters?

Mr. KELLOGG. There is no other way to handle it. If the Senator will read the testimony of every witness before the Agricultural Committee, he will see that it is impossible to throw open the grain exchanges during the time this grain would be handled, to be manipulated by everyone who desired to enter the exchange.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from Minnesota think that the Congress of the United States now, when the war is over, has the power to project itself into the States, to conduct a licensing system, and to prescribe the pains and the penalties for infraction of ordinances and laws that may be passed?

Mr. KELLOGG. I have not the slightest doubt of it. This guaranty was made pursuant to a war power. Peace has not been concluded. The guaranty operates for 1919, and the Government has the power beyond question to carry it out.

Mr. KING. But the operations extend to 1920.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is only to the end of the 1919 crop year,

Wholesale price of wheat per bushel, 1912–1917.

Date.	New York. No. 2 red winter.		Baltimore. No. 2 red.		Chicago. No. 1 northern spring.		Detroit. No. 2 red.		St. Louis. No. 2 red winter.		Minneapolis. No. 1 northern.		San Francisco. White (per 100 lbs.).
	Low.	High.	Low.	High.	Low.	High.	Low.	High.	Low.	High.	Low.	High.	Low.	High.
1912.	Cts.	Cts.	Cts.	Cts.	Cts.	Cts.	Cts.	Cts.	Cts.	Cts.	Cts.	Cts.	Cts.	Cts.
January–June	98¼	127	95½	116½	107	122	95⅝	120	92½	125½	103½	118⅞	150	190
July–December	103½	118¼	94½	106	85	116	101¾	112	94	115½	80½	112¼	140	165
1913.
January–June	107	114½	105⅝	109½	87½	96	102½	116½	93	115	82½	89⅜	155	182½
July–December	94	107	89¼	96½	85	95½	87½	102½	83	97¾	80¼	93½	155	172½
1914.
January–June	87½	111⅜	83	103	89	100	86¼	99½	75¾	99½	84⅜	98¼	151¼	165
July–December	86½	136½	82⅞	127	88½	133	80	127¼	76	127½	85½	129⅛	152	200
1915.
January–June	126	178	111	168½	123	167	114½	165	110	164	114⅞	165⅜	165	240
July–December	108½	144½	100⅞	127⅛	99	153⅜	106	132	106	129	89	155	140	185
1916.
January	138½	156½	123	141½	119¾	139½	122	137	122	143	118⅞	138⅜	150	190
February	130⅜	154	116	137½	112	138	111½	135½	116	142	108⅜	136½	160	185
March	130⅞	139	112½	119½	109⅜	123	110½	118¼	112	122	108⅜	120¼	160	175
April	129¾	143	114⅜	123	118¾	128	117	124	116	130½	117⅜	126½	160	170
May	124½	136	104	119½	116	126	108¾	123½	106	125	113½	128⅜	160	170
June	113¼	132½	100½	105¾	106½	118	103	113¼	106	114	106½	116¼	160	170
January–June	113¼	156½	100¼	141¼	106½	139½	103	137	106	143	106½	138¾	150	190
July	123½	143	102½	126	110	131⅞	104	129½	109	136½	107⅞	132½	160	185
August	144	179	125½	157	126¾	164½	130	154¼	129	165	127⅜	165⅞	160	210
September	168½	184⅜	148½	157	150	171½	144½	156	147	172	152	167⅜	185	225
October	185¾	209½	156½	192¼	164	202	157½	188	158	195	169½	199¾	185	275
November	198	215	174	193¼	165	200	175	189½	177	196	177	200	240	290
December	183	206	159	183	155½	190	1[illegible]	183½	168	187	159⅞	188¾	250	290
July–December	123½	215	102½	193¼	110	202	104	189½	109	196	107¼	200	160	290
1917.
January	207	226	184½	203	178½	205	178½	196½	183	206	175	199	250	285
February	197	220½	168½	197¼	162½	199	171	194½	171	202	166⅜	193	250	285
March	216	238	194⅜	213⅜	183⅜	213	192	210	194	220	184⅞	211	250	300
April	223½	292	215½	305	205½	295¾	213	300	221½	310	203	286	275	450
May	279¼	320	274½	342	258	340	267	340	265	342	247	339	450	500
June			220	283	249	310	245	295	222	298	222½	315
January–June	197	320	168½	342	162½	340	171	340	171	342	166⅜	339	250	500
July			200	240	217	300	225	255	210	273	228½	295	330	360
August			212	238	223	300	215	250	214	257½	215	305	340	390
September	229	231	222	226	220	200	219	220	215	227	215	221	340	365
October	229	229	222	224	220	220	217	219	215	215	215	215	350	350
November	229	229	222	224	220	220	217	219	215	215	215	215	350	350
December	229	229	222	224	220	220	217	219	215	215	215	215	350	350
July–December	229	231	209	240	217	300	215	255	210	273	215	305	330	390

Wheat production and exports, United States, year ending July 1.

Year.	Production.	Exports domestic wheat.	Per cent.
	Bushels.	Bushels.
1912	621,338,000	79,689,404	12.83
1913	730,267,000	142,879,597	19.57
1914	763,380,000	145,590,349	19.07
1915	891,017,000	332,464,976	37.31
1916	1,025,801,000	243,117,026	23.70
1917	633,655,000	203,573,928	31.99
1918	917,100,000	132,411,997	14.40

Wheat production in principal countries; average 1909–10 to 1913–14 and annual 1914–1917.

(Thousands of bushels.)

	Average 1909–10 to 1913–14.	1914 and 1914–15.	1915 and 1915–16.	1916 and 1916–17.	1917 and 1917–18 (preliminary estimates).
Western allied European countries:
France	317,635	282,689	222,775	204,908	144,149
Italy	183,335	169,582	170,541	176,530	139,999
United Kingdom	59,638	62,431	73,913	60,630	63,824
Total	560,608	514,702	467,229	442,068	347,972
Russia:
European	624,615	573,376	749,862	525,418	.....
Asiatic, 9 Governments	82,371	.....	98,740	.....	.....
Total	706,986	.....	848,602	.....	.....
English and French colonies and dependencies:
Canada	204,708	161,281	426,748	262,781	231,730
Australia	90,499	24,894	179,627	143,475	122,880
India	351,762	312,028	376,726	318,002	379,303
